Then, as the Christians in the apostles' day must have some set time—some set day—on which to meet as a congregation to worship God, we ask when that day was; on which day of the week did they assemble for that purpose? If they assembled, for that purpose, and the Christian should do so now; but if they assembled on the first day, and kept it as a day of worship, then we are assured, by their example, that the church should follow their divine precedent at this time. To determine this question, we must go to the inspired men—to those who were led by the Holy Spirit.

The first case which has a bearing as evidence on the subject of the first day as a day of peculiar, special, and great importance to the Christian, is predicated on the first that occurred after the Jewish law was taken away. The resurrection of our Savior was on the first day of the week. On that day, while the disciples were assembled together, the Savior met with them, and gave them his blessing, saying, "Peace be with you;" and talked with them, teaching them the truth concerning the resurrection. That first Lord's day was spent in such a manner as to consecrate it in the mind of the first Christians, by their meeting together at one place, and Christ's meeting with them; the teaching on the great subject of the resurrection; the blessing of the Lord there given, as recorded in John 20: 19-23, "Then the same day, at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut, where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus, and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be with you." Here is the first Lord's day, the first Christian assembly, and the Lord Jesus meeting with them after the law is taken away.

Now these same disciples must soon pass a Jewish Sabbath, while the Savior is yet on earth. If they meet on the Jewish Sabbath, to keep it in the worship of God, it will then be good evidence that it should be kept now. Do they? No; they pass the Jewish Sabbath, and say not a word about it. There was no meeting with the Lord on that day, which must have left the first day of the week—the resurrection day—the day when the Lord met with them in their assembly, and blessed them, and breathed on them the Holy Spirit that they might understand the Scriptures—impressed deeply upon their minds and hearts. The resurrection, the meeting of the disciples, the presence of the Lord, his blessing and teaching, consecrated it in their hearts in such a manner that they, by the Spirit, have given it to us as set apart for Christians to meet and worship God; and it was continued in the church as a meeting day during the apostolic age, as we shall hereafter prove.

The second case of evidence in the following language: "And after eight days, again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them. Then came Jesus, the door being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you." Here it is most likely the phrase "after eight days" alluded to the same day of the week or which they had met before, for the apostle says, "And again his disciples were within," and adds, "the door being shut." And Jesus again meets with them, and blesses them, showing the same kind of a meeting, on a stated time. As the time included by both meetings would be eight days, it seems the apostles had the first day as a stated time to meet. One thing is evident in regard to these meetings, that is, neither of them was on the Jewish Sabbath; for they pass over that period without making any reference to it whatever. The question then is settled, that when the disciples meet on the first day for the worship of God, and pass the seventh without such meeting, or in any way keeping it, they are accepted of him; for when they did so, Jesus met with them and blessed them.

The third case which has a bearing on the subject is in Acts 2: 1, reading as follows: "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place." Here is another example of the disciples being assembled together on the first day of the week. Pentecost being fifty days after the Passover Sabbath, it hardly leaves room for doubt that this Pentecost was just seven weeks from the resurrection of our Lord. Then it was that the Holy Spirit descended upon them, marking the first day of the week in their minds, with still more of the important wonders of the new dispensation. All the great miracles of the Christian religion being wrought on the first day of the week—the resurrection, the baptism of the Holy Spirit—shows that day as a proper time to commemorate, in solemn worship, the great work of man's redemption. The seventh day to the Jew did commemorate the creation of the world; but these solemn meetings of the disciples, when Jesus met with them, and these greatest events ever witnessed by man, do fitly commemorate the new creation in Christ Jesus, when he "led captivity captive and gave gifts unto men;" when he was declared to be the Son of God with power by the resurrection from the dead. These three witnesses—the apostles three times assembling together on the first day and the Lord blessing them on that day—stand up in the church as sacred examples, ever commemorating the resurrection of our Lord, and giving us assurance of divine approbation, when we, after their example, meet on the first day of the week to wait upon the Lord; while our meetings, like theirs, keep in memory the wonders of his resurrection. Then since the Lord blessed the disciples in three meetings within fifty days after the resurrection, and all these meetings were on the first day of the week, and in that period there was no resting on the seventh day—no mention of keeping it in any manner—these facts make the way of the Christian so plain, clear, and safe, that we need not hesitate a moment on this subject. But we have more evidence than this.

The fourth case as evidence is in Acts 20: 7, where we read: "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread." Here is important evidence on this subject. The apostles came to Troas, and abode seven days. Then they must have passed over the Jewish Sabbath again as though there had been no such thing known among them; for they say nothing about it: but when they came to the first day of the week, then they came together as the Lord's people, in the Lord's name. Now if we follow the example of the apostle and the church at Troas, we must have the first day set apart for the worship of God. And this is another er example of importance, because it is by the apostolic church and the apostle led by the Spirit of Truth.

The fifth case of evidence is in I Cor. 16: 2, where Paul says: "Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store, as God has prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." Notice this passage closely. The apostle does not tell them to come together on the first day of the week, but he commands them to do a certain work of charity on that day; and the way he commands it, shows conclusively that they were in the habit of assembling on that day. He says, "That there be no gatherings when I come;" and the contribution made in the assembly is the only way that could prevent the gathering when he came. If they had not kept the first day of the week, and assembled on that day, how could these directions make anything ready against the time of his coming. There is no fact more clear than this. If we would write to a church in the habit of meeting on the first day of the week, that we wished them to do something on that day, we would use just such language as Paul did; but we cannot see how writing in that manner to a church which kept Jewish time could prevent the gathering. That would be telling them to lay by their contribution the day after their meeting; and how that could save gathering when Paul came, is something that cannot be explained; therefore we believe it is not true.

The sixth evidence is in Rev. 1: 10, John says, "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." Here is a day distinguished from the Jewish Sabbath; because the Jewish Sabbath is not called the Lord's day. This phrase, and this day, are peculiarly gospel in their appointment and importance. And what other day could be so well called the Lord's day as that of his resurrection? for that day in the Christian Scriptures is potent with great events, the most sacred and holy, and must ever be consecrated in the heart of the new church, built on the death, burial and resurrection of our adorable Redeemer, as its great essential truths.

HISTORICAL EVIDENCE.

We will give another class of evidence before we close our arguments in favor of the first day. This becomes necessary, because some have said that the first day was established as a day of worship by the authority of Constantine. But this is a great mistake, as we will show. Long before the time of Constantine, Ignatius, who was made bishop of Antioch about the year A. D. 70, a part of his life being contemporary with the apostles, was sent by the Emperor Trajan to Rome, in the year A. D. 107, a captive for his faith as a Christian, to be devoured by wild beasts. He received his sentence with joy, exclaiming, "I thank thee, O Lord, that thou hast condescended to honor me with thy love, and hast thought me worthy, with thy apostle Paul, to be bound in iron chains." On his way to Rome, he wrote from Smyrna to the church at Magnesia in these words, "Wherefore, if they who were brought up in these ancient laws came nevertheless to newness of hope, no longer observing Sabbaths, but keeping the Lord's day, in which our life is sprung up by him, and through his death, whom yet some deny." He further says, "It is absurd to name Jesus Christ and to Judaize; for the Christian religion did not embrace the Jewish, but the Jewish the Christian, that so every tongue that believeth might be gathered together in God." Epis. to Mag. chapter 3 How similar this to the language of Paul, Col. 2: 16, "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days."

We would observe further that Pliny, Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Irenaeus, Origen, and the learned Bengal, all unite to prove that the first day of the week was kept instead of the Jewish Sabbath, from the time of the apostles. There is no fact in the Christian religion that can be traced back to the apostles with more certainty than that of keeping the Lord's day as consecrated to public worship. And the Lord's day was kept from the very first in contradistinction from the Jewish Sabbath.

OBJECTIONS ANSWERED

We will now speak of some objections that are brought against the first day, then we are done for the present.

We will first note that the Sabbathian demands of us to prove that the seventh day has been repealed or changed. No need of proving that it has been repealed, until it is first proved to be a law given to the church. We deny its being a law given to the Christian. It was given to the Jewish church, but that has passed away with the law. Then it is evident that we need not, and could not, prove the repeal of a law until the law is proved to exist. So far as the Jewish church is concerned, we can easily prove the law to have existed, and just as easily can we prove the death of the law and the end of the church; but so far as the Christian is concerned, it is not and cannot be proved a law, therefore we could not prove the repeal of a law that did not exist. So far as the Patriarchs are concerned, it might have even been a law to them; like the sacrifices of that age, it might even constitute a part of their religion; but that could not make either of them a law to the Christian; and the Sabbatarian only has the force of inference to give as his reason for that as a law binding upon the Christian. The inference would bring over the sacrifices upon the same principle it would bring the Sabbath; and we deny the right of inference to make a law in the absence of divine command and example.

When they demand of us to prove a change from the seventh day, or Sabbath, to the first day, that is the very thing we do not believe. The Sabbath was not changed; but it and the law that bound it upon Israel were taken away, and a new day, a new law, for a new purpose, was given to a new people, under a new dispensation. Old things passed away and behold all things are become new.

It is said that the Savior did not abrogate but kept the Sabbath. But we reply that he kept the whole law. The Savior came to fulfill the law, and he did it, and then took it out of the way, nailing it to the cross; just like a piece of writing between two parties, no part of it can be abrogated by either, but must be fulfilled by both parties; then it, like the Jewish law, passes away, because it is dead, as Paul says, that being dead under which we were held, we are made free from it. It is evident that Jesus kept the law until he fulfilled it; then he taketh away the first that he may establish the second.

It has been said, as argument, that the apostles preached in the synagogue on the Sabbath day, Acts 13: 14-14. This we readily admit; but as the Jews and Gentiles were in the habit of assembling on that day, Paul took occasion whenever circumstances would permit to preach the gospel to both Jews and Gentiles. There are many other occasions on which the apostle preached in the synagogue on the Sabbath day. He also stood in the Areopagus at Athens preaching the unknown God to them; but the assembly at Athens were not Christians, neither were these synagogue assemblies on the Sabbath Christian congregations. They were Jews, and they were held under Jewish authority. The Christians could not keep these Sabbaths with the Jews. There was the evening sacrifice offered about two o'clock.

For The Young.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Botany. No. 2.

In the last issue we learned the two great divisions of plants; and now we are going to take the flowering, or phanogamous plants, and proceed with the classification. Every boy and girl has observed that when a bean or a pumpkin seed sprouts there do always two thick fleshy seed leaves come up first. And now we must have a name for those two parts into which a bean, an acorn or a pea may be separated, and suppose we call each of them a cotyledon, that being the name which Botanists have given them. Some seeds have only one part. Corn, wheat, rye and many others cannot be split in two parts and consequently are not dicotyledonous,—there it is, the word for a seed which does come up like the pumpkin. Those which do not separate that way are said to be acotyledonous.

The word cotyledon means a button, and a dicotyledonous seed like the pea or bean is "two-buttoned" or dicotyledonous. Corn or oats and the like are "without buttons" and that is just what the word acotyledonous means.

It is not likely that any young reader could now tell whether a rose produced an acotyledonous or a dicotyledonous seed. But let us see how plants grow. Some, like the oak family, an apple tree or a rose, grow by having a layer of new wood on the outside, each year, and so are called outside growers. Others like corn and the grasses grow from the inside outward and such are called inside growers. Every outside grower has net-veined leaves. Every inside grower has parallel-veined leaves. The seeds of outside growing plants are dicotyledonous, inside growers are acotyledonous.

Now about the rose. It has net-veined leaves; it grows from the outside and so produces a dicotyledonous seed, and you know it if you never noticed one in your life. If I found a seed, the like of which I had never before seen, and it could be split in two parts I would then know what its leaves were like—net-veined and also how it grew—by yearly outside additions. To take a pumpkin vine and cut a section across the grain, it might not be clear as to how the wood or growth was laid on outside, yet that is the way it is done.

In the Indiana county court house some years ago, one of the gentlemen there planted a trophy tomato, and in the uniform growing weather the heaters in the building made for the plant, it lived and bore fruit for three years. In that case the woody layers were clear and plain. Now then it is time to ask the class a few questions.

Does the pine produce a dicotyledonous seed?

What do peanut leaves look like, a net-veined leaf or not?

What kind of seed in a potato ball?

In reading over what I have written I see a good many hard words and I am strongly tempted to say that in science outside growers are called exogens, and inside growers endogens, but I am not sure but that enough has been said this time. How about the potato seed mentioned above? Is it acotyledonous?

What Can A Young Man Do?

What can a young man do? Do? he has immense power for evil and for good. He can ruin his health; he can debase his intellect; he can murder his conscience—he can deaden and destroy it; he can deteriorate his moral feelings; he can fill his mind with gross and debasing imagery, and his mouth with impurity; he can become sensual and disgusting in his habits; he can lose the confidence of society; he can lose his situation; he can be cast off upon the world, as a thing that cannot be trusted; he can become contemptible; he can make anguish come down like a dark cloud, and press upon the brow of his mother, and upon the countenances of his sisters. A young man can do all this—can act so that his very friends shall never wish to hear his name, and shall only secretly, in their hearts follow him with their anxieties and their prayers.

"What can a young man do? Do? He can 'cleanse his way, according to God's Word.' He can seek to understand the Scriptures; to love God's Word; to save his soul alive. He can flee to the fountain of reconciliation; he can become a holy man; he can be a virtuous citizen; he may be the pride of his family; he can take his young brothers and lead them forward in life; he can extend the influence of a Christian pastor; he can be his right hand in efforts to do good; he can take an interest in all the great movements of the day; he may die a happy man, with his children and his grandchildren around his bed, and pass from the dissolution of the tabernacle upon earth to an inheritance on high. He can do all that; a young man can do it all.

"Only let him 'take heed to his way, according to God's Word.' Let him begin to meditate upon this word as the rule of the divine government; he will soon see the necessity of that mediatorial and restorative process which is brought to light in the Lord Jesus—"the Fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness." Let him then go on, from time to time, putting away everything that he feels to be wrong, trying to conquer every bad habit, and to regulate his conduct by God's Word; and he will be led to rejoice in the sanctifying Spirit, who shall carry on this work. But it is no use for you to pretend to desire the pardon of sin and reconciliation by the blood of Christ, if you do not put away every evil thing, and seek to 'cleanse your way according to God's Word.' The two things must advance together—the putting away everything practically wrong and the seeking after that truth which is according to God's Word."—Rev. Thomas Binney.

Fervency of Prayer.

"An arrow, if it be drawn up but a little way, goes not far," says Bishop Hall, "but, if it be pulled up to the head, flies swiftly, and pierces deep. Thus prayer, if it be only dribbled forth from careless lips, falls at our feet. It is the strength of ejaculation and strong desire which sends it to heaven, and makes it pierce the clouds. It is not the arithmetic of our prayers, how many they are; nor the rhetoric of our prayers, how eloquent they be; nor the geometry of our prayers, how long they be; nor the music of our prayers, how sweet our voice may be; nor the logic of our prayers, how argumentative they may be; nor the method of our prayers, how orderly they may be; nor even the divinity of our prayers, how good the doctrine may be—which God cares for. He looks not for the horny knees which James is said to have had through the assiduity of prayer. We might be like Bartholomew, who is said to have had a hundred prayers for the morning and as many for the evening, and all might be of no avail. Fervency of spirit is that which availeth much."

Reproving Offences.

Private offences it must be borne in mind, are always to be corrected in private. Whoever checks a private misdeed in public will be thought more desirous of dragging it to the light than of preventing its repetition,—of deepening the offender's mortification, than of effecting his amendment. Nor is this all: a reprover becomes himself a public offender, meriting a public rebuke.

RULES FOR AGENTS.

1. At the head of every letter give the name of your own post-office, county and State; and the date on which it is written.
2. Write the name and give the full address of every subscriber you send, as legibly as you can.
3. Write "New" before the names of all new subscribers.
4. In ordering a change of address, give the post-office, county, and State, to which the paper is sent, as well as the post-office, county, and State to which it is to be sent.
5. Do not mix up different items of business; but take up and finish one item before you take up another.
6. Write items intended for publication on a separate slip.
7. Make every lawful effort to obtain subscribers, and to do good in whatever way you can.
8. Send money by drafts, post-office money orders, or registered letters.
9. Observe the above rules, and you will expedite business, save us from much trouble, and yourselves and our subscribers from disappointments and vexation.

FURTHER THOUGHTS ON THE ANNUAL MEETING.

Can our Annual Meeting be made any more efficient as a bond of union, and as a means of promoting sound doctrine in our fraternity, than it has of late been? This is a question that is at this time occupying the thoughts of many of our brethren, who have the honor of the church of Christ and the welfare of souls much at heart. To know how to make our General Council productive of as much good as possible, and to prevent it from doing anything that would have a tendency to do evil, is a matter of great importance to our brethren, and we hope they will feel it to be such. The question, Cannot our Annual Meeting be held in a more simple, more economical, and more satisfactory manner in regard to the number of attendants present? is not the only question, nor, perhaps, the most important one, demanding the profound and prayerful consideration of the church.

It is a fact that there is considerable prejudice against our Annual Meeting existing in the brotherhood. We sincerely regret the existence of such prejudice, but since it does exist, we think it best that it should be known, that we may be prepared to meet it judiciously and, if possible, arrest its growth, and not only so, but remove it altogether. That there is no cause whatever for any of the prejudice alluded to, we will not affirm. But we verily believe there is by no means the occasion for it that some of our brethren think there is.

The old brethren who from their age and position have been looked up to as fathers and counsellors in the church, may not always have manifested that paternal affection and tenderness toward the younger brethren that they should have done. And when discussing questions in Annual Councils and on other occasions, there may apparently have been some, undue stress laid upon the opinions of the brethren who may have preceded them, and not that direct and hearty appeal made to the Scriptures, which was expected, since we as a community of Christian believers, have always disclaimed having any creed but the Scriptures, and have professed to take them alone as our guide in Christian faith and practice. And hence some have had their confidence lessened in the candor and independence of judgment of some of our brethren. And the decisions of the judgments of such brethren have not met with the deference and respect that they thought their decisions were entitled to.

On the other hand, may not some of the younger brethren have been the cause, in some degree, of the elders saying and doing things under some circumstances which may have appeared of doubtful propriety, or even wrong to some? It is evident that there are some brethren, and even ministers, who are not in as much sympathy with the doctrine of the gospel as held by the church as they should be. We may name the doctrine of plainness or non-conformity to the world, the doctrine that has constituted one of the peculiarities of our brotherhood. There are some brethren who have apparently too little regard to this peculiarity of our fraternity and principle of the gospel; while our elders, seeing how the world is controlling and corrupting other religious denominations, generally feel like striving for the faith, of the gospel and of the church, in this respect, as well as in every other; and in doing so they are sometimes thought to be too strenuous, and even arbitrary in their views, by those who perhaps are too yielding in their principles, and too lenient in their government of the church, if they are official members of the church. Some of our brethren think, and some of our zealous and intelligent ones, too, that our Annual Meeting has taken extreme ground upon some subjects. Perhaps it has. There has appeared in some localities a tendency to depart from the order of the church; and to counteract that tendency, the brethren in Annual Council have taken a more decided stand in regard to such matters than they would otherwise have done, or than they wished to do. They might say with some propriety, perhaps, to those who object to that decided stand, as the Apostle Paul said to some of his brethren as a justification for alluding so much to himself, "Ye have compelled me." One extreme is likely to beget another. Had all our ministering brethren labored by preaching and by practice to maintain the doctrines of the gospel and of the church, our Annual Meeting would have had much less to do, and what it is by some censured for doing, it would have had no occasion to do.

It has been repeatedly said that the tendency of our church government, and Annual Meeting influence is to episcopacy, or to that form of church government in which the bishops govern. A careful weighing of observable facts will show, we think, that this is not the case. Thirty years ago there was much more timidity and hesitation on the part of the young and lay members in Annual Council to arise before our old and venerable brethren and to take a position in opposition to them, when discussing questions before the meeting, than there is at the present time. It is very doubtful whether the free discussion that is now indulged in at our Annual Meeting would have been as willingly tolerated then as it is now. We recollect of being at the Annual Meeting about twenty-five years ago when the discussion was a little warm, and an old and leading brother said, in substance, "If any of the brethren are not satisfied with the order of the church, they can leave it." This was thought to be rather discouraging language, and indicative of but little inclination or willingness to have the practices of the church discussed and investigated. Lay members are not excluded from the Annual Meeting as delegates. The 24th Article of the Minutes of 1857 reads thus: "Would it not be best for churches in sending delegates to represent them in Annual Council, to make choice of one deacon, or of one lay member to serve as delegate in connection with one ministering brother, and thus relieve the ministers from the responsibility of being the exclusive advisers of the churches?—Answer.—We think it should be left to the churches to select such members for delegates as they may think proper." It will be observed from the foregoing query and answer that lay members may be sent as delegates to the Annual Council if the churches select such to represent them. What more could be asked of the Annual Meeting? So it really appears that the liberty of the members of the church within the last twenty or twenty five years has been increased rather than diminished.

But there is special prejudice felt to the Standing Committee of the Annual Meeting by some brethren. We feel confident that if that Committee was fully understood that feeling it would not exist. We have been acquainted with the doings of that Committee for about twenty years. As clerk of the Annual Meeting, we have sustained a very close relation to the Standing Committee, and have had every opportunity of becoming acquainted with its faithfulness and fidelity. The labors of it are usually very great. As there are but two or three days allotted to the Annual Meeting to transact its business, and the Standing Committee having a good deal to do besides the business that properly belongs to the general Council, it has generally to work a considerable part of the night as well as in the day. And being hurried and often much annoyed, it has to labor under great disadvantages. And this being the case, and the members of the Committee not claiming perfection for themselves, do not claim it for their work. They may sometimes err in judgment, and not always give the most judicious counsel. But any insinuations that the Committee acts unfairly, or usurps undue authority, or makes decisions that should be made by the general Council do the Committee injustice.

We have already made the remark that the Standing Committee has a considerable amount of business to do, that does not properly belong to the general Council, according to the long established usages of the church. Application for committees is made to it, and it is necessary for it to examine the ground on which a committee is asked for. This often requires time and labor. A good deal of counsel is asked of the committee by brethren, in regard to difficulties existing at the time the counsel is sought, or such as are feared may occur. According to the following provision in the order of holding the Annual Meeting, it devolves upon the Standing Committee to form answers to queries, that come to Annual Meeting without answers, before they come before the general Council: "All queries from District Meetings should be accompanied with an answer. But in case those meetings cannot agree upon any questions, then they shall be referred to the Standing Committee and this shall form answers to the questions before they be read before the general Council." But any interference with answers given to queries by District Meetings is scrupulously avoided. The members of the Standing Committee claim no more authority for settling the questions that come before the general Council than other members of the fraternity have. Quite a number of the brethren have been on the Standing Committee, and we doubt very much whether one of them could be found who would charge the Committee as a body with unfaithfulness. We think it appreciates its responsibility, and usually acts with much caution.

Although there seems to be no sufficient cause for the complaints made against the Annual Meeting and Standing Committee as we have seen, nevertheless, the fact that there are complaints made, should impress those on whom the labors of the meeting devolve, with the necessity of acting with candor and discretion, and of meeting and discussing every question that comes before the meeting in the spirit of honest inquiry after the truth. And in the absence of any plain Scripture testimony upon the subject, all the light that experience and intelligence can afford should be accepted and made subservient to the giving of the best counsel and to the making of the best rules that can be given under the circumstances for the observance of the general brotherhood, and for the promotion of peace and union among the brethren. The brethren in Annual Council pursuing such an honest Scriptural course will obtain the confidence of the general body and the counsels of the Annual Meeting will be properly respected and observed.

THE CENTENNIAL.

We have been requested to give our views upon the approaching Centennial, and of the propriety of Christians going there. We are always willing to give our humble views on any subject of a practical character when we are well enough acquainted with a subject and its character to have any matured opinions upon it.—Of the moral character of the great Centennial Exhibition, we scarcely have information enough to have any very positive views of the propriety or impropriety of Christians attending it. As there has been so much said about it, we could not well help giving it some thought and we have done so. But our knowledge of it is so limited that we would not in a positive or dogmatic manner, pronounce upon it.

Whether or not we can consider it an evil per se, that is, an evil in itself, it may have become such, or have such a tendency. And we presume it is not unlikely that the moral tendency of the Centennial upon the people of our country, and upon the inhabitants of Philadelphia especially, will not be to make them more holy. Although every branch of business, and many nations of the earth, and almost everything known will, in some degree, be represented there, we believe, from what we have seen, there will be no consecrated spot devoted to the worship of God. Whether this arises from prudential motives, or from the controlling influence of managers who may be averse to having any religious services on the grounds, we know not. And perhaps it might be thought prudent even by Christian men not to have public worship there, as it might not be judged suitable to the place and the occasion. And if the place and the occasion from their character and surroundings, are not suitable for the worship of God, is it a suitable place for the holy people of God.

The manifestation of fashion and vanity, of the corrupt spirit of the world in various forms, and of the habit of profanity and drunkenness, much of which will be seen in such a heterogeneous mass of fallen human beings congregated together as will be there, will form a moral atmosphere whose influence upon the spiritual health of the citizens of the kingdom of heaven will, we are fearful, be promotive of neither growth nor strength. But cannot a Christian go there and through watching and praying resist the contaminating influences to which he may be exposed? We hope he can. And may not very little children safely play on the green banks of the flowing river, or near the edge of the deep precipice and experience no harm? They surely may. But would a prudent mother permit her children to be exposed to so much danger?

It is a nice point in Christian ethics or in the Christian system of religious principles to know how far we are justifiable in hazarding our lives, or health, or Christian character when duty does not require it. The danger to which life and health will be exposed in consideration of the great amount of traveling that there will be on our railroads during the time of the exhibition, as well as by other modes of traveling, and in being thrown among such a great crowd of people at the place of exhibition, as well as every where else in the city, will be considerable. And how far Christians can expose themselves to the dangers incidental to the great exhibition, or any other place, without being unfaithful to the solemn trust committed to them by their heavenly Master, is a thought that should receive their prayerful attention. An eminent man and a leader and preacher among men was asked the following question: "If you knew that Christ would come to-morrow what would you do?" The reply was, "I would do what I am now doing, I would do my duty." This was a suggestive reply. And it implies that we can be found in no more desirable work than the service of duty when the Lord comes. And it seems to us on the Centennial ground would not be a desirable place to meet the Lord, having gone there from the motives that will prompt the most to go.

We think that those who live in the vicinity of Philadelphia could with more propriety attend the Exhibition than those who will have a considerable distance to go. The latter will have the danger and unpleasantness of traveling in a crowd in summer, as well as the expenses of traveling to meet, which the former will not have to the same extent. It is supposed from present indications that the expenses incurred in attending the Exhibition will be very high. Then to have the expenses consequent upon the attendance at the Exhibition from a distance to meet, when money is so much needed for other and better purposes, and to risk what must necessarily be risked under such circumstances, is making a journey from a distance, merely to attend the Centennial, a matter of some importance, and Christian circumspection requires of the Christian a careful consideration of the propriety of doing so.

We offer the foregoing remarks to any who may wish to avail themselves of them in considering the propriety of Christians attending the great Centennial Exhibition. We have given some of the suggestions that have presented themselves to our mind from the limited thought and attention we have given the subject. A better knowledge of the matter would enable us to speak with more positiveness. At present, we have some fears that the tendency of it upon the whole will not be for the promotion of Christian sanctification, although to some, and in some respects, it may be beneficial. The apostle Paul said to his Christian brethren, "I would have you wise unto that which is good, and simple concerning evil." Simple here means harmless. And all Christians should be careful to neither do nor encourage any evil, but active in promoting everything that is good.

SUDDEN DEATH.—In a private letter from brother J. P. Hetric, we have the sad tidings of the sudden death of brother Jacob Spanogle of Philadelphia, who died from an attack of heart disease on the 19th inst. at 1.20 A. M. We have not space to give any of the particulars. Only a few weeks ago we enjoyed his pious society in his Christian home; and now, so soon, he has passed away. The bereaved family and church have our sympathy. May the grace of God sustain them in their sudden and severe affliction. B.

ELDER John Murrey, Marshalltown, Iowa, says:

"We have a late spring here. This is the 13th of April, and there are but few who have done any plowing or sowing yet. Some years there has more been done in the month of February. The prospect for fruit is good yet. We had an abundance of rain and high waters for the last six weeks."

BRO. J. P. Ulrey, Osceola, St. Clair, Co., Mo., April 9th, 1876, says:

"We had a very mild winter till March; then some tolerably rough weather. At present it is very pleasant, so that farmers can plow, and sow oats. The prospect for fruit is good. Wheat looks promising at this time."

FRIEND W. A. Flory of Willow Springs, Kansas, March 29th, writes:

"Please find enclosed $11.00, for one dozen of the 'Harmonia Sacra.' They are having dances in our neighborhood, and our parents, nearly all of them belong to the Brethren church, and they want us to get up something to draw our attention from the dances. We thought that a singing would be as good a thing as we could get, and we had to have books, so we selected the 'Harmonia Sacra,' thinking it would be as good a book as we could get. It was pretty hard for us to raise so much, on account of hard times, but we have succeeded."

We are glad that our young friends at Willow Springs have so far succeeded; and we wish them good success with their singing. Their action is certainly commendable and exemplary. It shows that they are willing to honor their parents by following their judicious counsel. May they continue to be obedient to their parents, and walk in the way of Wisdom, ever choosing the good instead of the evil. B.

BRO. C. H. Balsbaugh in referring to his article on "Filthy Lucre," says:

"I wish I could print the inclosed with blood, and give it the voice of blood—even the blood which has in it all the compassion and terror of the Almighty. 'Ye cannot serve God and mammon' should be printed on every door post, labeled on every gate and finger board, and written on the fleshly tables of every heart 'with the Spirit of the living God.' Go to Jesus with all your burdens and perplexities, and wait an intimation of his will in all things."

In a later communication in regard to his health he says:

"I am sinking and know not whether this spring is not the last in which I will be permitted to look into God's mirror to behold the symbols of the unfading beauties and deathless glow and imperishable fragrance of the upper Paradise. Oh, for more of the odors of that sinless world wafted back through the dark lattice into this world of suffering and sorrow, and grace and peace."

BRO. Emanuel Slifer says:

"Our congregation voted for a full report of the proceedings of A. M. Speeches with names of speakers attached; but in pamphlet form. It also recommends again that the brotherhood be divided into two or more Districts, to hold the A. M. and the expenses be apportioned among the various congregations composing said districts; and that the elders of the same collect the money from their members and bring it to A. M. when they go up, or transmit it before the A. M. And should there be a surplus, the A. M. should dispose of it as it thinks best. By such an arrangement we would not lack places to hold the meetings as now.

Subscriptions for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN may begin with any number at $1.60 a year. Back numbers of the current volume can be furnished to those desiring them.

THE following is the conclusion of Bro. Miller's article on "The Seventh Day." We are sorry that we had to break it, but we were not aware of its being so lengthy until it was too late to avoid it. "THE SEVENTH DAY."—Continued from page 263.

This would be mockery in Christians, for they were preaching against such sacrifices—that the blood of bulls and of goats could not take away sin. Paul met with the Jews on the Sabbath to preach to them, but he met with the Christians on the first day of the week, as we have proved. Then as we cannot find in the gospel one time, one example, of a Christian congregation meeting on the seventh day to worship God, but a number of times where they met and the Lord blessed them on the first day of the week, we have assurance that God will accept and bless the same practice now. And as the inspired apostles and the primitive church are the pattern God has given, we will not agree to accept this Jewish Sabbath, or seventh day, until the Sabbatarian can find one example, one precedent of the apostolic congregations meeting on that day. Until he does that, all his inference and far-fetched reasoning on something not in the gospel, amount to nothing as argument. The plain example of the primitive Christians and the inspired apostles meeting on the first day of the week to worship God, outweigh a thousand volumes of human opinions and Judaized notions concerning this matter. These can only divide the church and lead it away from the example which God has set before us in the primitive church. The example of these first day meetings was acceptable then, it is acceptable now; it is founded on the rock of God's truth, tried, proved and accepted. Then let us keep it as they left it, and we, too, are built on the same rock.

Cinninnati, Nebraska.

"This place is situated in the Valley of the Nemaha, in the south-east corner of the county, and in the South Fork precinct. Here the first settlement in the county was made on the 12th of April, 1854. The precinct contains some of the most fertile land in the county. The South Fork, or Great Nemaha—as it was called in the earlier maps of the county—runs through the south-east corner of the precinct, is the best timbered stream in southern Nebraska, and is bordered by as good land as there is in the State. The soil is deep and rich and seldom fails to produce well. There are plenty of fine springs of water and good water can be found on every quarter section in the precinct with but little digging. Two other streams—Niger branch and Lower branch—are almost entirely embraced in this precinct, and they afford plenty of pure running water the whole year; they are also pretty well timbered. In regard to fuel, this precinct contains more than any other in the county, and perhaps in the State. In addition to the timber mentioned, there is a vein of coal from ten to sixteen inches thick, which was first discovered in 1856, and has been worked more or less ever since until now. About all the coal used in the county, and most of that used in adjoining counties, is taken from this vein. A healthier country than the Valley of the Nemaha cannot be found. There are some fine bearing orchards in the precinct, and there is but little doubt that good fruit can be raised, especially the hardier varieties. The town of Cinninnati is near the Nemaha river, and a good bridge spans the river near the place. There is a steam saw-mill in the town, and a new grist-mill—water-power—within a quarter of a mile. At present there is no store in the place, but a better point for that business cannot be found in the west. It is situated in a very fine farm and stock region,—is twelve miles from Table Rock or Humboldt, on the Atchison and Nebraska railroad, and the same distance from Sabetha or Seneca, Kansas, on the St. Joseph and Denver railroad. Also the same distance from Pawnee City, the county seat, and situated as it is—in the best corn region in the State—cannot be surpassed for handling and feeding cattle—Durham, Jersey, and Ayrshire; hogs—Poland, Berkshire, and Chester White.

"School districts are thoroughly organized all over the precinct.

"Our finances are in a healthy state.

"Our common schools are the pride and glory of our State.

"During the grasshopper year of 1775 Nebraska's increase in population was 30,000.

"Pawnee county can boast of having some of the best bridges in the State.—Few, if any, of our counties can compete with us in this particular.

"For every acre of forest trees planted there is an exemption of one hundred dollars, and fifty dollars for every acre of fruit trees. This is an item worthy of consideration by those contemplating moving west."

The above statement is clipped from the Pawnee Republican, as it has set forth the south-east precinct of Pawnee county, in which ten members of the German Baptist church now reside, and as we think it a correct account, you may publish it and the following if you think best for the good of brethren and others who are seeking homes in the west.

Three families of us (Brethren) settled here a little over one year ago, in the southeast corner of the south-east township of Pawnee county, Nebraska, one mile north of the Kansas line, and four miles west of Cinninnati, situated on the Nemaha River. Here we have the most and best advantages of wood; coal, stone, and the best of living water—perhaps superior to any other in the State. We have settled expecting to make this our home. We formerly lived in Pennsylvania; since that time some of us have lived in Ohio, some in northern Indiana, some in Ogle county, Illinois, and all of us lived in Keokuk county, Iowa. Hereafter, being pretty well acquainted with different States of the Union, we would recommend to the brethren and all who contemplate coming west to visit us. We have no organized church here as yet.—We keep up meetings nearly every Sabbath in our different school-houses; attendance generally good, and more calls for meetings than I can do justice to, as I am the only one in the ministry here.—We think much good can be accomplished by the brethren here if they will come in and help us in holding forth the words of eternal truth. We ask the brethren who so often travel on missions of love to remember us in this new country, and make this one of your passing ways and preach for us and many of our neighbors who are more favorable to these "peculiar people" than when we first came in. Brethren, you who are looking for homes in the west, we would say, Come along; we will assist you all we can. We greatly need ministers, deacons, and lay-members to help us convert the people. There appears to be no main leading church here nearer than Pawnee City—seven miles. We have good school houses, well finished, and splendid teachers. We have the most beautiful soil to till that I have found in the west, no stones to contend with (as the stones are generally along the streams), no sluces, no mudholes, nor any places to hinder. The prairie is moderately rolling, with a rich, deep, productive soil. We are about thirty miles west of Falls City, Nebraska, and about forty miles south-east of Beatrice, Gage county, Nebraska, making this point convenient for brethren that are traveling to and from the above named places. Brethren living in Nebraska, who have been here and preached for us, speak highly of this south-east part of Pawnee county; and well they may. In our judgment it is worthy of praise for its numerous natural advantages. Land is cheap—unimproved, 80 acres, from five to seven hundred dollars; 160 acres, unimproved, from one thousand to fifteen hundred dollars; 80 acres improved, house, orchard, &c., one thousand dollars; 160 acres improved, comfortable house, orchard, &c., from two thousand to twenty-five hundred; grain of all kinds, hay, vegetables, &c., in abundance in this country. Many portions of the west are beautiful, but where will we find a better part than this when it is admitted by those who are well acquainted with the western country that Pawnee county, Neb., is equal in soil, and has the advantage over other portions of the surrounding country in timber, coal, water, and building stone.

In conclusion, I will say, dear brethren, remember us here in the south-east part of Pawnee county. Now is the time to establish the faith once delivered to the saints. Now is to time to secure yourselves homes in this beautiful west.

Brother Quinter:—

We thought we would do without the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN this year, claiming poverty as an excuse; but we have read the Companion and Visitor from its infancy, and being accustomed to its weekly visits, we felt that we were depriving ourselves of much comfort, and many wholesome and instructive lessons, which we did not like to do without. We concluded to dispense with the use of tea and coffee, and have the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, in their place, return its agreeable and interesting visits. Already more than the cost of the paper has been saved, and fourteen numbers are at hand, full of healthy and nutritious food for the inner man. We think if others would adopt the same plan, and be willing to sacrifice some of the luxuries which only gratify the appetite, they would soon be able to pay for a copy for themselves, and have some to spare, which would help others in need.

Health among us is good. The weather during the past month has been unpleasant; considerable snow and rain. The last few days were fine, and farmers are making arrangements to go to work. The calls for meetings are more than our pastors can attend to. The people appear anxious to get an understanding of the word of God, as the Brethren hold it forth. Several brethren have moved in lately, two speakers among them. We receive them, therefore, in the Lord, with all gladness, for there is plenty of work for all. Our desire is that they may all be filled with the knowledge of the will of God, in all wisdom and spiritual understanding. May they put on righteousness as a breastplate, and have the helmet of salvation upon their heads, and be clad with zeal for a cloak, that those who cry after knowledge, and apply their hearts to understanding, may be delivered from the way of the evil man, who leaves the path of uprightness to walk in the way of darkness, and delights in the forwardness of the wicked; for the Lord is a God of knowledge, and by his actions are weighed. Therefore, may they speak the things which become sound doctrine, and their teaching may continue interesting, and full of spiritual food, that transgressors may be taught the way of the Lord, and sinners be converted.

Now, brethren and sisters, let us put on the whole armor of God, that which he has provided in and through Jesus Christ, and push forward the work of the Lord, by assisting those who labor for us in the Master's cause. You know our congregation is in its infancy, not yet a year old, and we can do much by letting our light shine before men, and keeping ourselves unspotted from the world, from all the enticements to sin, which the world offers. Let the goodness of our principles be seen in our conduct, that behold-ers who are yet out of the covenant of grace, may be led to honor God, the author of all good. Let us all endeavor to show that we have a zeal for the cause of Christ, and that according to knowledge, that it may be seen that we have been enlightened according to the truth, that we are not going about to establish our own righteousness, but have submitted ourselves unto the righteousness of God.—“It is good, to be zealously affected, always in a good thing.” We should be steadfast in the faith and practice of the gospel; be unmovable. When we meet with opposition, we should not be discouraged; but always abounding in the work of the Lord, looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ; who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Then since Christ has given himself a ransom for us, and will be our final judge, let us manifest supreme love to him by acts of goodness to all men, and ever be governed by his revealed will, that those who hate and oppose will be condemned in their conscience, and thus be forewarned of their final doom.

SINA SHICK.

BONSACKS, Va., April 11th, 1876.

Dear Brethren :

I have just returned from a ministerial visit to North Carolina, two hundred miles south of this point.

I found this little congregation of members apparently in good order, under the care of Elder Jacob Faw, who some years ago, in pursuit of God's peculiar people, left his home, scarcely knowing whither he went, and traveled one hundred miles on horseback, when he found Brethren. After being with them and talking with them for a time, he was baptized. He then returned and told his friends and the people “how great things the Lord had done for him.” The brethren with whom he had thus formed an acquaintance visited that country, and presently brother Faw was called to the ministry. So a nucleus was formed, around which the church as it now is, was established.

I preached for them some ten or twelve sermons, to large congregations and we hope with good effect. One willing soul was buried with Christ, and a number almost persuaded to be Christians; at least the brethren thought that there was a general awakening, and an inclination to search the Scriptures and see if these things were so.

We celebrated the Lord's Supper with its accompaniments, and ordained brother Amos Faw, son of the elder brother.—There are there three ministers, two deacons, and a membership of about forty. The third minister, not named above, is brother Levi Spangle. He was in ill health; we hope, however, only temporarily.

The Moravian church has flourished in that country, and is still prevalent. They have in Salem, the county seat, a town of no mean dimensions or magnitude, a splendid female academy—very large building—with beautiful surroundings and extensive accommodations—said to be under excellent disciplinary regulations, and one of the safest places for the education of female youth. But in common with her sister churches, she is declining in point of humility and self-denial, and therefore, some of their people are looking to the Brethren as the place where they can live the doctrine from which their church is departing. Should we, as a church, also depart from these principles for the purpose of evangelizing the world, then, oh, then, truly, would the world have evangelized the church! Where, then, would the truly humble and God-fearing find a refuge? Lord whither “shalt we go? thou hast the words of eternal life.”

There is nothing in this country especially inviting to emigration. The uplands are mostly hilly, but no mountains. The soil rather poor, but might be much improved by a better system of farming. The low grounds are very flat and so much subjected to overflowing that they must be mainly left to produce such as nature has designed, which is a very coarse grass and not very nutritious. There are several considerable streams flowing through the country. These abound with excellent fish, which are easily captured, and at this particular season are abundant, and compose a part of the provisions on the tables so bountifully supplied by the kind hands and warm hearts of the good people with whom it was my pleasure to associate while there.

One of the most touching scenes and brotherly meetings it has ever been my good fortune to enjoy, I enjoyed on the eve of my departure from Carolina. The brethren and neighbors assembled at the place where I was; the room being nearly filled, the hour was spent in conversing upon Scriptural subjects. The hour of separation now arriving, our dear old brother, our host, after addressing the congregation in rather complimentary terms of our humble, though, as he thought, faithful labors, and of their sorrow on account of our departure from them, with the probability of never meeting on earth again, proposed that all would kneel down and pray together, and then some of them would accompany us to the ship—meaning the cars, but alluding to the parting scene between Paul and his brethren at Miletus. Acts xx.

I left them on Saturday morning; lay over at Lynchburg till Sunday morning; arrived at our meeting house at 12, M.; found the brethren assembled and united with them in devotion, after which we had the pleasure of a number of the brethren's company at the place on earth we call our home, and found all well. Thank the Lord for his care over us; and thanks to the brethren for their marked respect and kindness extended to us.

B. F. MOOMAW.

In Memoriam.

Sister LUCINDA L. REDDICK, wife of our dear brother Wm. Reddick, departed this life Feb. 15th, 1876, in the thirty-fourth year of her age. She was a faithful and exemplary member of the Nettie Creek arm of the church. Her disease was consumption. Her health had been declining for more than a year, and her sufferings at times were intense. She was wholly resigned to the will of God, and bore up under her affliction, with that Christian fortitude and resignation that becometh a truly devoted Christian.—Her mind was strong and clear to the very last. Her last hours were spent in prayer, and exhortation to her dear and loving friends, that they might be prepared to meet her in heaven.

After her limbs had become cold and chilled in death, and the large drops of sweat were settling upon her brow, and just as the last spark of life was leaving her mortal body she said, “Jesus is going with me.” She truly was a devoted Christian, and died in the triumphs of a living faith in Christ her dear and loving Savior, who was waiting to bear her over the dark valley of the shadow of death to the paradise of God, there to await the first and bright resurrection when Christ will descend from Heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and all the holy angels with him to gather his jewels home.

She leaves a loving husband and one little daughter, with many other near and dear relatives and friends to mourn their loss; but she left the sweet and glorious assurance that their loss was her eternal gain. Oh, how sweet and cheering are these her last words, “Jesus is going with me!” What an incentive are these words of a dying saint to us all, to so live that when it is ours to die, our last words may be like hers, “Jesus is going with me.” “Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord.” Funeral by Elder Jacob Rife, from 1 Cor. xv. 22, to a large assemblage of sympathizing relatives, friends, and neighbors.

Dearest sister, thou hast left us;
Here thy loss we deeply feel;
But 't is God that hath bereft us:
He can all our sorrows heal.

Peaceful be thy silent slumber—
Peaceful in the grave so low;
Thou no more wilt join our number;
Thou no more our songs shalt know.

Yet again we hope to meet thee,
When the day of life is fled,
Then in heaven with joy to greet thee,
Where no farewell tear is shed.

In Memory of our Departed Mother.

Mrs. Mary A. Newcomer, wife of Henry Newcomer, departed this life, April 1st, 1876, aged 64 years, 7 months and 25 days. Sad, indeed, the duty to chronicle the death of our own mother, upon whose maternal bosom of love we leaned confidently from our infancy up to our more mature manhood, enjoying the tender affection of her loving heart. Under a kind and beneficent providence, it was her privilege, in this life, to witness the marriage of her six sons, which constituted our whole family. But a few short months ago we enjoyed the happy privilege of meeting together, in the bonds of a family reunion, to commemorate the birthday of our aged father, happily congratulating ourselves in thus being permitted to assemble in an unbroken column, unsevered by the cold and relentless hand of death. But who can fathom a dark and uncertain futurity. The next occasion we were called upon to pay the last tribute of respect to a departed mother. Her chair at the family board has become vacant. The welcome reception that once characterized our meetings, we shall know no more in this life; but by putting our implicit trust in the paternity of the God of our salvation, we may joyously anticipate striking glad hands with her in the paradise of God, and remain unseparated as long as the ceaseless ages of eternity last.

For many years our mother has been a great sufferer. Some four or five weeks ago she contracted a cold, from which ensued inflammation of the bowels, which baffled the skill of medical aid. Although prostrated for three or more weeks, her physical suffering did not appear to be acute, whilst she lay apparently in a semi-conscious state for some time; yet her mind was perfectly clear. The holy aspiration of her heart was, in her own language, "to go to rest." Some hours previous to her death, she calmly and peacefully clasped her hands across her breast unmoved until the welcome summons when she peacefully expired.

Yes, she is gone—yet do not thou
The goodness of the Lord distrust;
But meekly to his wisdom bow
Who lays thy loved ones in the dust.
The fern is there, but seek not there
The spirit, born for light and love;
Look upward—free from sin and care
It rests in joy with God above.

Epistolary.

Letter to Brother Nelson Kitley, of Fordwich, Ontario:

DEAR BROTHER:—With more than ordinary interest I read your communications in No. 33, vol. XI, of the Companion and Visitor, and No. 9, vol. I, of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. I loved to read your articles, because they give evidence of being written in a spirit of meekness and love, and show, throughout, purity of motive, Christian fortitude and veneration. They contain some points, however, on which I would like some information. I have been among the Brethren (old order of German Baptists) from my youth up; have read nearly every No. of our church periodicals from No. 1 of the "Gospel Visitor" down, and have never read or heard of any "Brethren" living in Ontario. In a recent number of the "Pilgrim" brother Saylor recommends sending missionaries to your country, and by his phraseology I infer that he is not aware of any brethren living there. Also in a late number of the "Vindicator," in an editorial, the editor mentions a certain Samuel Baker, from Markham, and from the language used there, it seems that he does not know of any brethren there.—Last winter brethren J. B. Shoemaker, of Smithville, Ohio, and M. Weaver of Canton, Ohio, made an extensive preaching tour through your vicinity and reported not having found any brethren.—They were traveling extensively among the Mennonites of Ontario, and report a great deal of kindness and Christian courtesy bestowed upon them by the people of your country. They were very kindly received and entertained, and have a very exalted opinion of your people.

In your communication you say that you have for the last year read the Companion and Visitor. You undoubtedly noticed that the Brethren in the States have an Annual Meeting, and that the States are divided into districts; that the several districts have once a year a district council meeting; and that it is expected that each individual church will be represented at the district meeting and that each district be represented at the Annual Council. You will have noticed that the editors of our periodicals have published an Almanac, in which are recorded the names of our ministering brethren. Are your churches where you reside organized into a district? Have you been represented at the general Annual Council? Have the names of your ministers ever been forwarded for insertion in the Almanac? Your living under the British government and the brethren in the States under a different government, should be no sufficient cause for alienation, disruption, and prevention of social intercourse in the church of the Brethren.

There is a body of Christians in the States known as "River Brethren," that originated from the old Brethren; and that sect is subdivided into two factions, one party called "Yorkers" and the others "Princers." I am informed that a body of these people are in your country. I am inclined to believe that you, perhaps, are a member of that organization. They observe the ordinances differently from the Old Brethren, but I am not prepared to give an elucidation of their peculiarities.

In your letters you name eight different brethren that have been at your communion, and preached for you at other times, not one of whom is named in the ministerial list in the Almanac.

Will you please give us a history of the several churches in your vicinity, through the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN? Tell whence the first brethren there came; how long they have lived there, &c. This, I think, would be very acceptable to the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, and open the way for further correspondence.

Yours in love,

JACOB MISHLER.
Mogadore, O., March 28, 1876.

The Centennial.

PHILADELPHIA, April 17, 1876.

Brother Quinter:

This city is upon the eve of the most startling event of our times. It is about one month until the opening of the exhibition, and preparations of immense magnitude are being made. I will mention one thing only to show this fact. Nearly every dry-goods, notion and furnishing house is brilliant with flags for sale, in which a great and increasing traffic is carried on. "The Philadelphia Flag Co." has its handsome little vehicles bedizened with banners, and tinkling with sleigh-bells, canvassing every part of the city.

Having commenced this letter with quite a different object from that of describing the grandeur of the Centennial, I will proceed in my design, which is, to advise none to come to Philadelphia, during the "great show" without ample means to pay for their subsistence while here.—It is almost universally supposed that provisions of all kinds will be enormously high, and already there seems to be an upward tendency in the prices of food.—Several companies have been formed, the agents of which are canvassing the city to secure board and lodging for strangers during the coming summer. Those agents obligate their respective companies to supply the families who open their houses constantly with boarders, at from $1.75 to $3.00 each per day, for breakfast, supper and lodging; the board to consist of ordinary fare. Hundreds have agreed to open their houses, who, under other circumstances, would not think of such a thing. Some, no doubt, have done so to make money; but the great majority as a kind of protection, in dear times, against the raids of their friends in the country, whose curiosity will excite them to come here with barely sufficient funds to pay their fare to and from the city.—Those coming to Philadelphia without the means to live, and finding the houses of their city relatives and acquaintances filled with boarders and lodgers to their exclusion, will be placed in very straitened circumstances. They may be compelled to sell or pawn their watches and jewelry, if they have any, to raise a little money.

SILAS THOMAS.

P. S.—If country papers would please publish the above at once, it might be a timely warning to many.

Notice.

Those attending the district meeting in the north-western district of Ohio, to be held in Green Spring church, Seneca county will stop off at Watson Station, on the Cincinnati, Sandusky and Cleveland railroad, six miles north of Tiffin. Those coming on the Lake Shore road must take this road at Clide; those coming on the Baltimore road must change cars at Tiffin; and those coming on the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago road must change cars at Forest. All trains will stop at Watson Station on the 5th, 6th, and 8th of May, 1876.

If any of the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN know the address of sister Mary Ann Yeager, formerly from Pa., they will confer a favor by communicating a knowledge of her whereabouts to her brother, John J. Yeager, Ephrata, Lancaster county, Pa.

Announcements.

DISTRICT MEETINGS.

BROOKLYN, IOWA, March 6, 1876.

The brethren in the Middle District of Iowa propose holding their District Council Meeting with the brethren in Dallas county, in their new meeting-house near Dallas Center, on Monday, the 22nd of May, 1876. Meeting will commence on Saturday evening, the 20th, and continue over Sunday. Those coming by railroad will stop off at Dallas Center, Dallas county, Iowa. We extend a general invitation to our brethren and sisters at large, and hope to have a full representation.

J. S. SNYDER, Sec'y.

MILFORD, Kosciusko Co., Ind., }

April 11, 1876.

The district meeting of northern Indiana, will be held with the members of the Rock Run congregation, on the 4th and 5th of May, in their meeting-house five miles south east of Goshen.—Those coming by railroad will stop off at Goshen.

By order of the church.

JOHN ANNOLD.

LOVE-FEASTS.

At Pipe Creek, Carroll county, Md., on Thursday, the 4th day of May, commencing at 9 1/2 o'clock, a. m. Also at Beaverdam, on Saturday the 6th of May. Perhaps others in connection. Brethren of Virginia, who have thought of being with us, will this time suit you to be with us? Consider this an invitation, and let us know. Invitation extended to all. By order of the brethren.

E. W. STONER.

We expect to hold a communion meeting on the 16th of May, at the house of brother Noah Obmets about 2 miles south of Osceola, St. Clair county, Mo. Those coming by railroad will stop off at Appleton city, where they will be met by some of the brethren, by informing us in time.

JOHN P. ULREY.

Osceola, Mo.

A communion meeting at the house of David Bechtelheimer, in the Beaverdam congregation, Kosciusko county, Ind., on the 9th of June next.

MARRIAGES.

On the 2nd day of April, 1876, brother LEONARD WISE, Sr., of Carroll county, Ind., and sister ELIZABETH HARSHARGER, of Mason county, Ills., at the house of John Heckman, by D. Frantz. J. P. REFLOEGE.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

March 23rd, 1876, in Taylor township, Cambria county, Pa., infants, son and daughter, of friends John and Anna Ream, aged 16 days. Also, on the 27th inst., infant son of above named parents, aged 20 days. Thus two sons and one daughter who were born into the world at one birth are now gone to God who gave them.

Also in same place, April 2nd, 1876, infant son of Jacob and Margaret Ream aged 6 weeks. DAVID HILDEBRAND.

Unlimited Remedial Resources.

People sometimes suppose that Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines represent the entire extent of his resources for curing disease. This is an error. Experience proved that while the Golden Medical Discovery, Favorite Prescription, Pleasant Purgative Pellets, Compound Extract of Smart-Weed, and Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, would, if faithfully used, cure a large variety of chronic complaints, there would be here and there a case which, from its severity, or from its complication with other disorders, would resist their action. These exceptional cases required a thorough examination into their symptoms, to ascertain the exact nature and extent of the disease or diseases under which the patient was laboring, and the use of specific remedies to meet and overcome the same. This led to the establishment of the World's Dispensary at Buffalo, N. Y., with its Faculty of Physicians and Surgeons, each of whom is skilled in the treatment of chronic disorders in general, and those belonging to his own special department in particular. To one is assigned diseases of the throat and lungs; to another diseases of the kidneys and urogenital organs; to another, diseases of the digestive system; to another, diseases of the nervous system; and to another, diseases of the eye and ear.—Thus the highest degree of perfection in medicine and surgery is attained. The establishment of this institution enables the Doctor to meet a long felt want in the treatment of the more severe chronic affections. By a careful consideration of the symptoms as given in writing, he successfully treats thousands of cases at their homes. Others visit the Dispensary in person. The amplest resources for the treatment of lingering affections are thus placed at the disposal of every patient, and those on whom the proprietary medicines do not have the desired effect can procure a more thorough and efficient course by a personal application to the proprietor of the World's Dispensary.

is published every Tuesday at $1.00 a year, postage included.

This Christian journal is devoted to the defense and promotion of Primitive Christianity, as held and practiced by the Church of the Brethren, or German Baptists.

They accept the New Testament as the only proper rule of faith and practice, and hold to the observance of all its commandments and doctrines; among which are Faith, Repentance, Baptism by Trine Immersion, Prayer, the Washing of the Saints' Feet, the Lord's Supper, the Communion, Non-Resistance, Non-Conformity to the world, and the Perfecting of Holiness in the fear of the Lord.

As space will permit, some attention will be given to such secular matters as may be judged instructive to our readers.

Subscriptions may begin at any time. For further particulars send for a specimen number.

BURY ME IN WHITE.

BY SARAH RUPEL.

When friends are called from earth away,
Whose deeds seemed good and right,
We always love to see them go
Unto their graves in white.

When Christ the Lord was crucified,
Our pattern and our light,
We do believe that he was wrapped,
In linen, fine and white.

And saints that have put on the Lord,
And pleased their chief delight
In all the Lord's appointed ways,
And keep their garments white:

Let patience have her perfect work,
And watch and pray for light,
To walk upon the narrow road,
With garment clean and white.

If on his blessed word of truth
Our hope is anchored right,
We soon shall gain the victory,
And walk with him in white.

Fine linen is the righteousness
Of saints who walk in light,
Whose garments ne'er have been defiled:
They walk with him in white.

There happy saints shall dwell above,
Where Jesus is the light;
Oh, may my humble spirit stand,
Among them clothed in white!

And when my spirit's gone to God—
The author of all light,
I want my friends to clothe my corpse,
In linen clean and white.

And in the resurrection morn
All beautiful and bright,
With angels then adore our King,
Who clothed us all in white.

Holy-day Greeting.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Elder John G. Glock, of Aughwick, Huntingdon Co., Penn'a.

As fruit represents the tree in all its history and ramifications, so days may stand for centuries and millenniums, and ages. "The hour is at hand." Here all the past and future of God are epitomized in an hour. "The babe lying in a manger." Here the uncreated, Omnipotent, Omnipresent God, is compressed within the form of a tiny, helpless infant. The All-comprehending and All-sustaining can dwell in a "burning bush" with as much liberty and power, authority and omniscience, as in the "Excellent Glory" in the Heaven of Heavens.

Although the day of the Nativity is past, according to secular chronology, it is not too late to wish you a Happy Christmas. No one can truly celebrate the day unless he has the life of Christmas. Right before my window were two young men who thought to give the day fit commemoration by engaging in a shooting match. One of them is a communicant in a church of superlative pretensions. We have not so learned Christ. Christmas and shooting-matches are as incongruous as Christ and gambling. The day, as to time, is in the past; but the day, as to character, remains. If we had any Christmas at all, we still have it, and I trust will, not only to the end of the year and the end of life, but forever. The believer's Eternity is only an Everlasting Christmas. When Christ was born He was named "Emmanuel," which being interpreted, is, God with us;" and it is this Divine Presence that constitutes our Heaven on earth, and the endless, ever deepening beatitude to come—a Heaven over here and ever to be. In this high and glorious sense, I wish thee and thine a Happy Christmas. That is, a joy which has the very cream and flavor of God's own ineffable bliss. Christmas must needs be happy: there never was any other. Christmas and blessedness are synonyms. It means all that the Gospel means. "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." This is Christmas, not only among men, but among the angels. Luke 2: 13, 14. Only Christians, and the higher order of beings who are in perfect sympathy with the Cross, can have Christmas. To them alone the day means Emmanuel. To them alone the 25th of December means a year, a life, an Eternity—long enough and great enough to embrace not only the life of man but of God. Emmanuel means God with us not only as in society, but in constituency; not only as being proximate, but as being immanent—God and man in one Person. Christmas is the Day of days, being the Incarnation of Him in whom are the New Year, the Year of Jubilee, the "Resurrection and the Life," the Pentecost of time and Eternity,—“all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." The measures of the Infinite are committed to the finite, the Eternal has been revealed in time, the Holy-day of God and His Angels has become the Christmas of earth, the hope of sinners, and the joy and glory of saints.

This is the anniversary of that matchless wonder, and everlasting enigma of all created intelligences, the love-prompted, love-welded conjugation, when the Eternal God descended from His Throne to His footstool to take fallen man into everlasting wedlock with His Deity. On this day the bans of Jehovah were published: "God manifest in the flesh." As God took our nature to enshrine His Godhead, so we must take His nature as the Life of our life. Then the sacred mystery of Bethlehem will be consummated in us, and we become the Bride of the Lamb. The conjunction of Deity and dust transpired at Nazareth; but the public espousal took place at Bethlehem. "What good thing can come out of Nazareth?" The place originated in honorable circumstances, and was given a correspondent name—"GUARDED, FLOURISHING." But it had acquired a bad character, and become a hot-bed of vice. In this it fitly represents man. God must meet man in his degradation, or abandon him forever. The germ of the Life Everlasting is implanted in the house of corruption; but its oclar germination is in the House of BREAD—Bethlehem. Nazareth is the point of impregnation, and Bethlehem of Birth, Nazareth is the home of betrothment, and Bethlehem the place of nuptial celebration. Although Christ finds us at Nazareth, we find Him at Bethlehem. There is a dim, distant finding in being found, before there is the clear apprehension that answers to sight. An incipient Christ there must be, before the Wonderful can come to birth. The embryo has God in it, but it is the swaddled Babe that makes Christmas. It is the overshadowing power and indwelling of the Holy Ghost that infuses the properties of the Divine nature; but it is the exhibition of the indwelling Christ in Divinely-authorized form, that makes us members of the "household of faith" and joint-heirs with Emmanuel.

life? Are we in wedlock with God? Do we know either Nazareth or Bethlehem? Have we the Bride's nature, the Bride's relation, the Bride's privileges, and the Bride's attire and jewels? Do we bring forth spiritual offspring by the generating power and under the nurture of the Holy Ghost? Are we incarnations of love? faithful, sin-shaming, soul-luring representatives of the Manger cradled, Cross impaled Emmanuel? Do the "heights and depths, lengths and breadths of the love that passeth knowledge," crown and encircle and buttress the profoundest depths of our being, and the utmost reaches of our influence? Is the life of Jesus the pulse that throbs within our pulse, and is felt not only at the wrist, but at every point of contact with our fellows, in every relation of life? Is "our life hid with Christ in God?" and its unfolding the efflorescence of righteousness and holiness? Blessed are the Bethlehemites, for they shall see God.

Thoughts of a Young Christian.

BY DELLA HECKMAN.

"Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." 1 Cor. 1: 10.

There are a great many members I would like to write to. If you will give me permission, I will write some through your valuable paper. We have been having meeting here for sometime. Brother Billhimer has been with us, and we had some good preaching. There have been five added to the church within the last month, and there are many who are counting the cost. May they not put it off until it is eternally too late; now is the accepted time, and it is said to-day if ye will hear his voice harden not your hearts. Heb. 3: 15. Some say that they are too young, but I do not think when we can read for ourselves, and understand the Scriptures, we are too young to obey God's commands. But Jesus called the young unto him and said, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God." Luke 18: 16. I myself am not very old. I am but fifteen years old. I was only twelve when I united with the church of the Brethren, and I have never regretted that I turned to God while yet young. Although there are a great many temptations, the Lord said, "If thou do this thing, and God commands thee so, then thou shalt be able to endure, and all this people shall also go to their places in peace." Ex. 18: 23. It seems as though we do not think of our souls salvation as much as we ought, but when we meet our friends and have to part again, this then causes us to think of that great meeting where there will be no parting; and this very often causes us to turn to God when we would not otherwise do so. If we would not have been made to reflect back and think of the past when we enjoyed ourselves together, and then to think we perhaps shall never see each other again in this world, we would not have become interested in the great subject of salvation.

The Beatitudes of the Mount—No. 8.

BY JOHN CALVIN BRIGHT.

"Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." Matthew 5: 10-12.

"Blessed are ye, when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake. Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy: for, behold, your reward is great in heaven: for in the like manner did their fathers unto the prophets." Luke 6: 22, 23.

Persecute, the act of harassing, afflicting or punishing for adherence to a system of religious principles, or mode of worship. It comprehends in its enlarged sense all that the tongue can effect—calumny, slander, revilifications, reproaches, evil surmisings; and all that the hand can inflict—stripes, imprisonments, bonds, stocks, rack, death.

Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake. That the humble, penitent, meek, righteous, merciful, pure, and peaceful characters described by Christ should be persecuted is remarkable. And that they are happy who suffer, and are persecuted for their righteous and holy principles, is passing strange, but a stubborn fact nevertheless. "The carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be," and consequently, all who crucify it and live a holy life shall suffer persecution in some form or other. For as "Pure religion and undefiled before God the Father" gives no quarter to vice and sin, so neither will the ungodly and sinner, and those "who hold the truth in unrighteousness," give any quarter to those who "live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world;" and many and horrible are the persecutions which they have waged against them.

Blessed are ye when men shall hate you, revile you, and persecute you. This is the natural order. 1. hatred. 2. revilification. 3. persecution. The children of Belial, whose hearts are "deceitful above all things and desperately wicked," have a hereditary enmity to all righteousness. And their tongues are "set on fire of hell" to blaze abroad and heap all manner of infamy upon the humble disciples of Jesus. And then persecute them with all the fury of demoniacs.

Thus they hated the Master, and as he declared, hated his disciples also. They reviled Him, attributing His "mighty works" to the devil. And the early Christians received the same treatment. They were called "the filth of the world" and "the offscouring of all things." And they were charged with having "turned the world upside down."

"If they persecute me they will persecute you also." And this they verily did. He was mocked, spit on, scourged, and nailed to the accursed tree. And His followers were persecuted everywhere—some beaten, some stoned some beheaded, &c. And all who espouse "Pure Religion" will be persecuted to some extent.

The soul that would to Jesus press,

Must fix this firm and sure;

That tribulation more or less,

They must and shall endure."

"If so be we suffer with him we shall also be glorified together." "In the world ye shall have tribulation." "Tribulation worketh patience; patience, hope; and hope, an exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

And shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for the Son of man's sake. Here the whole matter hinges on the word falsely. It cannot be said in any other way. One who is a Christian "in spirit and in truth" does not sin. "For whoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him. And he cannot sin because he is born of God." And consequently none of such characters "suffer as a murderer, or an evil doer, or as a thief, or as a busy-body in other men's matters." A Christian owes no man anything but to love one another. His objects are, the good of his fellow-men, the sanctification of the soul, the prosperity of the brotherhood, the promotion of holiness, and the glorification of God. And therefore whatever evil is said of him is false.

And shall separate you from their company. They will excommunicate you and separate you from their synagogues. This they did to the blind man who went and wash ed and came seeing. And this was done to all who accepted Jesus as Christ.

And shall cast out your name as evil. This has reference to all opprobrious and censorious titles applied to them individually or collectively. Paul was called a pestilent fellow, a mover of seditions among the Jews, a profaner of the temple &c., but it was untrue. Nazarenes, Christians and many other epithets were given to the disciples in contempt. But says Peter "If ye be reproached for the name of Christ happy are ye."

Rejoice ye in that day, and be exceedingly glad, and leap for joy. Paul and Silas sang praises to God at night in prison. The apostles thanked God that they were accounted worthy to suffer for Christ's sake. And all who accept the truth as it is in Jesus "rejoice in tribulation." There is more joy in the furnace of affliction and fires of persecution than in all the haunts of sin and pleasure. Christ gave three reasons why we should rejoice in tribulation.

1. For so persecuted they the prophets which were before you. This is a grand reason why we should not fear persecution, but rejoice when under its power. The Holy man of old, who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, were there before us. Some sawn asunder, some slain by the sword, some stoned and all more or less maltreated. And Jesus was there, the apostles were there, and we should thank God for the privilege of taking their places

2. For great is your reward in heaven. "Joy unspeakable and full of glory." The pen of the scholar, the pencil of the artist, the skill of the fuller, the chisel of the sculptor, the tongue of the orator, the imagination of the poet all combined cannot describe the bliss of heaven's inhabitants. I say more, in the language of inspiration, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God has prepared for them that love him."

3. For theirs is the kingdom of heaven. In the first beatiude we promised a more minute explanation of his expression in the conclusion of this number. The limits of this essay however require us to use the utmost brevity. We will only notice a few points.

1. The following references prove that the phrases "the kingdom of heaven," "the kingdom of God," and the kingdom of Christ are the same. Matt. 5 : 3. Luke 6 : 20. Matth. 16 : 28. Luke 9 : 27.

2. In some of the parables the kingdom of heaven embraces the whole history of man. See Tares &c.

3. But it is generally confined to the gospel dispensation and Christ's universal reign on earth, or parts of it.

4. The different Scriptures which relate to the kingdom of heaven will all harmonize when properly applied to the different ages, stages, and aspects of it.

5. The expression the kingdom of heaven is at hand, means the introduction of the gospel kingdom, the presence of that salvation, Christ reigning in the heart which fits us for his glorious kingdom.

6. "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation,—not in external splendor, but in divine power in transforming men by renewing their minds.

7. "See the kingdom of heaven"—enjoy its blessings and privileges.

8. Enter the kingdom of heaven, obey its laws of naturalization by being "born of water and of the Spirit.

9. "The kingdom of God is within you"—its subjects are filled with "righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." So far we have only noticed the leaven and meal, the mustard seed stage of the kingdom. Let us proceed to notice the tree stage.

10. "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." This refers to the time when Christ shall reign on earth. "The Lord shall be King over all the earth." Zech. 14 : 9. Then the saints shall be "kings and priests unto God" and reign with him on the earth. Rev. 5 : 10.

11. This prayer will be answered when Christ will come the second time, in the clouds of heaven with all the holy angels. "And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of the Lord and of his Christ" Rev. 11 : 15. Then every knee shall bow and every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord of the glory of God the Father. And when Christ shall have conquered all enemies, death included, "God will be all in all." Here Revelation closes and we will go no further.

Ourselves First.

BY A. N. GRAYBILL.

Dear brethren and sisters in the Lord, we, as Christians, profess to be a peculiar people, zealous of good works, and to be different from unrighteous and worldly men, so we should be very watchful and prayerful, and practice in our lives what we profess; let our light shine to the world, and not keep it under a bushel, &c. Our prayer should be that God would give us grace and strength to keep us pure and unspotted from the wicked world.

If we want to be instruments in doing good, and leading sinners from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, we must take or keep the beam out of our own eyes, then we can see to take out the beam in our friend or brother's eye. The Psalmist says, "Create within me a clean heart, and renew a right spirit; then will I take transgressors thy ways, and sinners shall be converted unto thee." So we must have the mind and spirit of Christ, that leads us into all truth, and is the narrow path which leads to peace and happiness; and show by our walk and conversation, by all that we do, that we are the true followers of Christ,—not only in word but also in deed and in truth,—so that when the world talks all manner of evil against us, we can rejoice and know that it is not true. Here are a few stanzas of poetry that I saw a few years ago in the Companion, in which there is a great deal of truth :

"Thou must be true thyself,
If thou the truth wouldst teach.
Thy soul must overflow, if thou
Another soul wouldst reach.

A little truly said,
Can deeper joy impart
Than hosts of words that reach the head,
But never reach the heart."

Richfield, Pa.

A CHRISTIAN is a child of God, a brother of Christ, a temple of the Holy Spirit an heir of the kingdom, a companion of angels, a lord of the world, and a partaker of the divine nature. The Christian's glory is Christ in heaven, and Christ's glory is the Christian on earth. He is a worthy child of God, endowed with Christ's righteousness, walking in holy fear and cheerful obedience before his Father, shining as a light in the world, a rose among thorns. He is a wonderfully beautiful creature of the grace of God, over which the holy angels rejoice, and attended and administered unto by them wherever he goes. He is a wonder to the world, a terror to the devils, an ornament to the church, a delight to heaven.

Heaven help the man who imagines he can dodge enemies by trying to please everybody! If such an individual ever succeeded, we should be glad to know it. Wear your colors, in spite of wind or weather, storm or sunshine.

WE SHALL BE LIKE HIM.

We shall be like him, oh, beautiful thought!
Well may our spirits with rapture be wrought,
After the sorrows, the woe and the tears,
We shall be like him when Jesus appears.

After the conflict in peace to sit down,
After the cross to be wreathed with the crown,
After the dust and the soil by the way,
With him and like him for ever to stay.

Never again shall the throbbing head ache,
Never again shall the beating heart break,
Never the task drop from wearying hands,
Nor the feet ever fail in the brightest of lands.

Never shall sie with the trail of its shame,
Shadow love's anlight, nor chill its clear flame;
Savior, oft grieved in the house of thy friends,
Ne'er will we wound thee when earth's frail life ends.

Death! this dear thought does away with thy sting;

Makes us triumphant to meet thee and sing,
"Glory to God." When the Jordan is passed,
We shall go home and be like him at last

Master, alas, thee we've often denied!
When the world scorned we have shrunk from thy side.

Yet, blessed Jesus, thou knowest thy love,
Pardon and help us with grace from above.

When thou appearest, oh, rapturous thought!
Well may our souls into rapture be wrought,
We shall be like thee when this life is o'er,
Wound thee, deny thee, offend thee no more.

Look Up.

BY CHARLOTTE T. BOND.

Devout, pure, and religious minds look up to God as the Creator of the Universe. They adore him for bringing them into being, for supplying all of their temporal wants. They contemplate all of the beauties of nature, as the work of his hands, and they love to dwell on the thought that their Heavenly Father is so mindful of them as to arrange things so beautifully and harmoniously to their wants. It is the pure and good that can enjoy the beauties of nature; that can admire God's own pictures in the landscape in the beautiful flower, in the glorious sunshine, and in the beauties of the rainbow placed in the cloud as a covenant with man. Can any person look upon the rainbow without holy thoughts, and feelings of veneration and love? And the thought that the Great Ruler of the universe has condescended to make a covenant with man, is a suggestive one! Should we not look up with adoring hearts when we contemplate his greatness and his goodness? He has bestowed upon his children everything to make them comfortable, and everything to gratify the most exquisite taste. He is perfection itself, and claims the homage due him, and does not intend that these things are to draw the mind from him. He designs us to be temperate in all things, in our enjoyment of his blessings. The beautiful things of nature should be looked upon with grateful hearts and feelings of love to that good and glorious Being that has placed his children here with everything so well suited to their nature. If sin had not been permitted to enter the world, and if all were pure and good, and if Satan was cast out with his machinations, what a world this would be! All would be united in one band of brotherly love. There would be universal peace and good will among men. One combined shout of praise and adoration would go up to the Giver of all good. The happiest hours of man's existence upon earth are those he spends when he casts Satan behind him, and holds himself aloof from all sinful practices, and looks up to God for assistance and protection. He feels that through Christ he has a full forgiveness of all his sins, and goes on his way rejoicing. After all of the inventions of different sects, and discoveries of ages, the salvation of the soul through Jesus Christ, is the safest and best thing that mortals can aspire to. It is this that will teach them how to appreciate the beautiful works of God, their kind Father. When the eyes are filled with tears of penitence, then it is that Divine love clothes everything with beauty; and everything, even tribulation, is looked upon as a blessing. It is then we love to look up to the Divine Father with prayer of thanksgiving, and hearts of love and adoration. Then why not look up? Heaven is above; hell and Satan are beneath. Should we not look up to the first, and shun the last? Seek righteousness that we may be filled; hate sin in all its forms and pernicious ways. If we draw near to God, he will draw near to us. We should flee from sin as a deathly disease. It would be very foolish after gaining the victory over sin, to go back. Surely no one could have a taste for the carnal pleasures of earth, after once tasting the joys revealed to those that receive Christ in his own appointed way. Ye pleasure loving souls that are running to and fro on earth, building your happiness on sandy foundations, seek God while he may be found. Look up to that Being that created you for his own glory. Cast your care on Jesus and learn of him, for he is meek and lowly in heart, and you will find pleasures Divine that fade not away, pleasures pure and lasting, that will leave no sting behind, pleasures that will go with you through the dark valley and shadow of death, and when you pass this you will have access to the fountain of pleasure at God's right hand. My dear friends, this is no fiction got up by the imagination—but it is revealed in God's holy word. And I as a lover of your souls, insist and beg of you to read the Bible for yourselves. And while you will find that earthly pleasures will not last, and that they will soon pass away, those obtained by obedience to Christ will last through this life, and the life beyond the grave. The most fortunate that have ever lived, are those that have continued to labor until they gained almost everything that they could desire, found that it did not satisfy the longings of their nature. It seems that God has implanted this craving in the human heart that nothing earthly can fill, that it might bring the soul to him. But the adversary of souls is busy in pointing out different ways of deception. One plan is tried, but the poor soul finds instead of gaining the coveted pleasure, that the longing is increased two fold. In this way many go on until death comes, and alas! too late they see their error.

In God's word there is invitation after invitation to come to him, to seek him while he may be found. Come then, ye that thirst, and drink of the waters of life. God has given a desire for eternal happiness to man, and like everything else in man's constitution, this longing desire for happiness seems to be mysterious; especially should he not be destined to live forever. But man is "fearfully and wonderfully made." The whole body, mind and spirit are something we cannot understand. There is a controlling power however, and that power must be God. The heart keeps up its regular strokes and we cannot stop or start them, neither can we regulate them and make them go faster or slower. They are controlled by an unseen power. The mind too is ever busy, always engaged in something, only in sleep. And what a strange thing is sleep! But it is necessary, and we cannot fully control it. We must sleep to strengthen both body and mind. And though we cannot fully control the mind, we are permitted to improve and elevate it. What connection there is between the mind and soul, has never yet been revealed to man plainly, but amid all this mystery, God has informed us that he requires our love and service, and that we are to look up to him for every blessing; that we are dependant upon him for life, and health, for immortality, and for the aid of the Divine Spirit. All we are, and all we have, belong to him. What shall we render him for his goodness and mercy? A broken and contrite heart is what he requires; a meek and lowly heart, one that looks up to, and trusts in, God; one that goes through life performing all of the duties assigned it by the heavenly Master, with a never faltering faith in his divine promises, never disturbed by changing scenes or circumstances, but with a calm, serene faith in the one Ruler of destinies. Such is a man after God's own heart; and such will the King delight to honor. In the last day such will be allowed to enter into the joy of their Lord. No matter how lowly his position or calling on earth has been; though he may have lived in the greatest poverty on earth, yet will he be rich when called up to his Father's house, where there will be a place prepared for him, a kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world.

Sure are the Testimonies of the Lord.

BY A PILGRIM BROTHER.

Thy testimonies are very sure: holiness becometh thine house, O Lord, for ever. Ps. 93: 5.

Testimony and law are distinct in common usage. The word testimony is a derivative from the Latin testis. Its meaning is, evidence of a witness; open attestation; affirmation, &c. The word law signifies a rule of action or motion; a rule of conduct established by competent authority: synonymous with statute, regulation, edict, decree, &c. Testimony, law, and the word of God, in Scripture, are synonymous; at least in a great many instances. To show the truth of this assertion I shall cite the reader to a few passages of Scripture.

1. TESTIMONY.—“Blessed are they that keep his testimonies.” “Thy testimonies are righteous and very faithful.” Ps. 119: 2, 59, 138. “The testimony of Christ was confirmed in you.” 1. Cor. 1: 6. “Declaring unto you the testimony of God.” 1. Cor. 2: 1.

2. LAW.—“The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul.” Ps. 19: 7. “The law is holy.” Rom. 1: 12. “I will put my law into their hearts.” Heb. 10: 16.

3. THE WORD.—“They have kept thy word.” I have given them thy word.” “Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth.” John 17: 6, 14, 17.

We infer from the Psalmist's language that the word of God is infallible; worthy of all confidence. He qualifies the word “sure” with the word “very,” making it doubly strong. How careful, then, should we be to pay strict attention to the testimonies—to the law—to the word—to the Gospel of Christ, “lest at any time we should let them slip.” The Gospel of Christ is “the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.” What a magnificent, glorious declaration to every one that believeth. To every individual man and woman who believes, and obeys the Gospel. No one that believes and obeys is excluded. It is positively so, that we are to obey as well as believe, if we expect to obtain salvation. The doer, and not the mere hearer, hath the promises of being saved. “Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man.” Matt. 7: 24. “Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed.” James 1: 25. Thus, dear reader, we see the importance of “giving all diligence” to the testimonies of the Lord. We may know the will of God unto usward, and yet daily live in stubborn disobedience to his word and will. We are told that “knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth.”

My dear reader, whoever you be, let us turn our feet unto the testimonies of the Lord, we can safely rely upon them with all assurance. They are very sure. “The testimonies of the Lord maketh wise the simple.” “Blessed are they that hear the word of God and keep it.” May we become wise men and women; wise unto salvation, so that we may be numbered among the wise virgins, who, when the cry was made, “Behold the Bridegroom cometh,” were ready and entered in with him to the marriage. When afterwards the foolish virgins came, they were denied admittance; the door was closed against them, the doleful words from him within were, “I know you not.” These latter were also virgins, but alas! they were foolish, not having given that diligence to the testimonies of the Lord that they necessarily should have given them. The Apostle Peter saith, “Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall. For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly, into the Everlasting Kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.” The word of God is “quick and powerful.” It is so powerful that all the powers of darkness, nay, all the demons of hell cannot overthrow it. Yea, it is so powerful that heaven and earth bow at its command.

“Holiness becometh thine house, O Lord, forever.” If we in reality belong to the household of faith, to the house of the Lord, to “the church of the first born, which are written in heaven,” it then becometh us to be holy; and to be holy requires of us a complete, entire resignation unto the will of God, bringing the whole man into subjection to God. “Seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds.” So that we can say with Jesus, “Not mine, but thy will be done.” We are not to live unto ourselves, but unto Christ. He tells us that the first and great commandment is, “to love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength.” Mark 12: 30. In order to be holy the whole heart, soul, mind and strength must become obedient to God. It requires a full resignation—a yielding of our will unto his will. “I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God.” Rom. 12: 1. “Ye shall be holy, for I, the Lord your God am holy.” Lev. 19: 2. “Be ye holy in all manner of conversation.” 1 Peter 1: 15. This important injunction of the apostle, I am sorry to say, my dear brethren, is to a great extent not adhered to, but is abused to a very great extent. In all manner of conversation we are to be holy. If we converse, we are to show forth that we are holy. How is this? What an inconceivable amount of sin is committed through unholy, unbecoming and unchristian conversation! What an immense amount of idle, unnecessary talk! What gossiping, jesting, joking, and even slanging is there done by those who profess to be Christians—followers of Christ! Can this be so? Can a fountain issue forth bitter and sweet water? It is not possible. “Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment.” Matth. 12: 36.

My dear brethren, let us beware of these things; stand aloof from them; let us shun these unholy, sinful vices, as we would the most poisonous reptile. The true Christian must “abstain from all appearance of evil.” All these sinful habits belong to the “unfruitful works of darkness.” The children of God belong to another kingdom; they are children of light; they must necessarily walk in the light, as Christ walked in the light.

We are to be a holy people. All those that in reality are Christians are holy, most assuredly. "Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people."—Peter. But my dear brethren, I cannot conceive, comprehend, or believe, that to mar, or cut off, the corners of our beards, or to marry a pious widow, will in any way, shape, or form, disqualify us from being holy. A holy man, commits no sin in marrying a holy widow, only so it is done in the Lord. Rather, my dear brethren, let us have that inscription engraved upon our foreheads, "HOLINESS TO THE LORD." Ex. 28:36. May we ever show forth this inscription of holiness to the Lord in all our doings, wherever we be; may the world see and read it. "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord." "Blessed and holy is he, that hath part in the first resurrection." Fare ye well.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Caution.

BY HENRY P. BRINKWORTH.

"Abstain from all appearance of evil." Thess. 5: 22.

Dear fellow-readers and travelers to Zion: For some time past I have been pressed with a desire to speak to you on a subject that I thought may be properly classed under the above heading; hoping that you with me may be benefited by a few words of caution; knowing as we do that we are fallible creatures, prone to wander from the path wherein we should walk, and to tread the by-paths of sin and folly, thereby causing us to mourn our departure from the God we so much desire to follow in his own appointed way.

Our neglect of duty may be traced to more than one cause. In the first place we neglect to improve our privilege in coming to a throne of grace. And oh, how it ought to impress our hearts when we think what it has cost the Lord of life and glory to save us! How he has suffered for us, and then to think that we will refuse, or be ashamed to ask even for those things which he has so freely offered us.

"Must Jesus bear the cross alone?"

We feel the expression too true,

"No cross, no crown.

Then let us be willing, dear brethren and sisters, for we know our captain has led the way, and would not that any of his followers should quit the battle until the victory is won. Then onward Christian—win the day.

Our second neglect may be found in that word of so much meaning, Watchfulness. "Watch and pray lest ye enter into temptation," are words from the lips of our blessed Master; and if we would only heed them, the good that would result therefrom may be better imagined than described by my feeble pen. We may notice that in Christ's words, the command watch comes before pray; thus showing its necessity. And oh! what a world of iniquity would be avoided if this requisite command were obeyed in its strictest sense.

Such words as goodness, gracious, mercy, mighty and other words we might quote, which we think are too sacred to be used as they often are, and if we were more watchful, they would be altogether avoided, as they seem to be used in vain, and "the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his his name in vain." We might also say that as they are used in the place of stronger language, perhaps they may very properly be considered, mild swearing. Brethren and sisters and fellow reader, whoever you are, "abstain from every appearance of evil." Can you consistently pray for God's blessing on the use of such words, when used as we know they too often are, without the consideration due them as sacred words? If not, then consider your ways, and in the words of the inspired apostle, "present your bodies, a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." Rom. 12: 1. Then let us resolve, not in our own strength, (lest we fall) but through the assisting grace of God; to live nearer him who has said: If any ask, he shall receive. May the Lord add his blessing is my sincere desire and prayer.

The Covering for the Head—What is It?

BY DANIEL ROTHENBERGER.

"Every man praying or prophesying, having his head covered, dishonoureth his head. But every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered dishonoureth her head: for that is even all one as if she were shaven. 1 Corinthians 11: 4, 5.

This is such a plain command that I was made to wonder many a time why it is that so many pay so little attention to the apostles instructions in regard to this matter. While some do it out of neglect, others contend the hair is the covering spoken of. I agree that the hair is a covering, but not the covering spoken of. If the hair were the covering, it would have been useless for the apostle to say anything in regard to the matter; for we are all created alike in that respect. It is natural for us all to have hair on our heads. Then if the apostle had reference to the hair, it would become necessary for the man to take every particle of hair off of his head in order to make the distinction. No doubt all will agree with me, that that was not the design of the Creator; and if not, we must then conclude it means an artificial covering. If any will contend that the covering means the hair, they will please read the chapter; and when they come to where it reads cover read it hair, and then see what it will make.

All will agree that it would be inconsistent for a man to keep his hat on in time of worship. Then why not agree, that it is wrong for a woman to have her head uncovered in time of worship? The one is just as inconsistent as the other. Now as I am aware that our sisters often come short of this important duty, more out of neglect than otherwise, especially when they surround the tables of our daily meals which God has "created to be received with thanksgiving," 1 Tim. 4: 3, therefore I would admonish them to be more careful in this matter, and if in public worship, or in private at the family altar, or surrounding the tables of our daily meals, they should have the covering on the head.

I am sorry to learn that some of our brethren are also departing from the instructions given by the apostle, on some occasions. I have long felt anxious to have something said on this subject before our brethren will partake of the evil to such an extent that it will be a hard matter to get them to refrain from the evil. When I read that good and wholesome article from the pen of our brother D. P. Saylor, in PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, Vol. 1, No. 1, page 5, my wishes were that all might read and practice the wholesome doctrine contained therein.

O may our brother and others too, continue to warn us all of the evil. Brethren who wear their hats in time of worship or funeral occasions, are certainly violating God's laws, when the gospel is so plain that "way-faring men though fools shall not err therein." Is it possible that brethren will sit with their hats on and do not bow in time of prayer on such occasions? Is it possible that they will say we have no need of prayer on these occasions? Surely if ever we stand in need of prayer, it is in such trying times, when we are bereaved of those who were near and dear to us. Is it possible then that we pray not on such occasions? We hope not, for God alone can heal our sorrows.

Shall the minister pray for us, for God to comfort us, and we ourselves pray not? O may we all learn to be more careful and prayerful. Remember David who was a man after God's own heart, said when bereaved of one he loved, "I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me." Another example: Job, when he had lost all, said, "The Lord gave, and the Lord has taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." Job 1: 21. Brethren be steadfast, always abounding in the grace of the Lord, and earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints.

Pay Your Debts.

"Owe no man anything, but to love one another," is the text; and the sermon is all around us. Are you in debt? Then you hold in your possession that which is not yours. You shine in borrowed feathers; you are rich on other men's property; you are generous of other men's earnings; you have influence which other men have won. Your life is an elaborate sham. Men call you rich, when you are poor. You live in a fine house and are supplied with every luxury, while you are really poorer than the beggar without a crust or a shelter, if he owes no man anything. Men come to you for money, and you must give liberally, though every dollar you give belongs to other men who may never get their pay, and who may curse you as a rascal for cheating them. People come to you to borrow, and you loan money that is not your own,—perhaps you lose it, and so your friends or creditors are cheated out of it. You buy things you do not need because the money is in your pocket; but you dishonor Christ because you do not pay your debts. You may put your property out of your hands; you may convey it to your wife; you may give it to your children; you may donate it to religious objects; you may invest it in life insurance policies for the benefit of your friends; but do what you will with it, it is not yours, nor theirs, nor will it ever be, until you pay your debts. Your debts may outlaw in man's courts, you may slip out of mortgages, win law-suits, and defy executions; but still you can never stand square and honest before God and man till you pay your debts, or until you are freely and fully forgiven, after an honest and frank uncovering of the entire facts in the case. Any forgiveness obtained by falsehood and deceit is a sin and a crime, and will not pass muster in the day of judgment. Pay your debts. Pay them in full. Live poorly till you pay them. Work hard till you pay them. Dress plainly till you pay them. Sell the property you got in debt for if need be, and pay them. Stop pleading poverty till you are poor. Do not get in debt and make that an excuse for being stingy and robbing God in tithes and in offerings; but sell, pay up, get clear and square with the world, and then shout, Hallelujah! Do not spend other people's money. Do not lend other people's money. Do not give away other people's money. Do not live on other people's money. Do not squander other people's money.

Debt has made many a man a rascal, by giving him an opportunity to cheat, which he was too weak to resist. Debt has ruined many a Christian's reputation, when otherwise he might have been honored and respected. Debt has destroyed many a minister's usefulness, for who wants to hear a man preach if he does not pay his debts? Debt has made many a man a hypocrite, because few men who are in debt dare tell their creditors or the world the exact truth about their property, and often money is borrowed, or debts are incurred under false representations, and then all sorts of lies and shams are palmed off to blind the minds of the public and stop the mouths of clamorous creditors.

Debt has brought condemnation and sin upon many Christian women, who have had their husband's property put in to their hands to hide it from creditors, and who have been obliged to deceive, lie, cheat, and perjure themselves to conceal and keep their ill-gotten gains. Debt has swept away all men had, in thousands of instances, where people have risked and lost other men's money for uncertain gains, and have been compelled to make good the loss with their own. Debt has hindered the work of God, and many a man who had been accumulating money, hoping by and by to do good with it, has had it swept away in a day to pay the debts of others whose notes he had endorsed or in whose transactions he was involved. Debt has separated chief friends, for when a man has borrowed money from a friend and fails to pay it, then he feels meanly, and sneaks around and dodges his creditor and avoids his presence, and so the money is lost and the friend also. Debt has impoverished many a widow, who once had every luxury, through her husband's earnings and the money he borrowed, and who now, robbed of her husband's support, is obliged to strip herself of everything to pay the debts that he needlessly contracted, when able to live without. Debt sends many orphans to poverty and ruin. Taken at once from the comforts of affluence and sent adrift on the world; accustomed to spend the money they never earned, they try dishonest courses, and go headlong to destruction.

Man of God, pay up! Live within your means, if you eat nothing but roasted potatoes and corn cake. Do not roll in comfort and luxury, on other people's money while you live, and then slip out of the world leaving your children to brave the storm of adversity, and your wife to meet the creditors you have cheated, or face the responsibilities you have dodged. Come down where you belong. If you are in debt, pay up. Sell out, and clear matters up. Love can settle your business a great deal better than your executors will be likely to when you are dead. Come down to hardpan. If you are poor, own it. "Afraid of impairing your credit?" Let your credit go to the winds. It is a sham, a lie, a cheat, a curse. It would be better for you if you had never had any credit; your credit has been your ruin. Come down out of the chief seats in the synagogue, and sit with the poor. Let your name drop out of the lists of big donations, and instead cast into God's treasury an honest widow's mite. Live in a poor man's house, or in the corner of a house-top. Be poor as Lazarus, it need be; but don't die mortgaged to the devil for more than you are worth; if you do, when the angels come they will not be likely to carry you to any very good place. Pay up; square up. The day of judgment will be spent settling accounts. You had best settle yours beforehand. And be quick about it, for times are troublous, and life and health are uncertain; and when once out of debt, make it your unalterable decision to "owe no man anything, but to love one another."—The Christian.

"To be holy is to be devoted to God, and given over entirely to his use. Our hearts and lives must not, therefore, be 'common or unclean.' To live a holy life is transcendently above all success in money-making, and all perfections in the sciences and the arts. To whatever extent God's Spirit is upon us and in us, so much our present condition is more excellent than the highest worldly good can advance us to. To the true believer, God should be the first and last, and the all in all.

To spend and be spent in trying to do good makes man far more honorable in the sight of God than to command armies or to amass a fortune.

For The Young.

The Boys.

How anxiously we look upon the growing boy! What promises, what possibilities, are found in boyhood. What habits and characters are forming in the boys around us. Let us group together a few facts which will show how character is formed and the work of life dimly sketched, even in boyhood.

Genius, which has been defined as an aptitude for a particular study or course of life, has had much to do with the after experiences.

Galton has given some statistics of genius which are quite interesting. Of two hundred and eighty-six English judges, one hundred and thirty-three had kinsmen of great eminence. These may be grouped into ninety-five families. Of these there are thirty-eight cases of two eminent men in one family; forty cases of three; five cases of four and five; and six cases of six.

Daniel Webster was so quick in learning that his mother predicted that he would become distinguished. He could learn more in five minutes than some of his companions could learn in five hours. It is said that Nathaniel Bowditch, at the age of fifteen, made an almanac for the year 1790, containing all the usual matter.

Mozart, the celebrated musician, when only three years old, left his playthings to listen to his sister's music-lessons. At five years of age he attempted to write music, and soon after became a favorite among musicians.

When Pascal was only nine years of age he crept into the room where his father's scientific friends were assembled, to hear their conversation. At eleven he drew figures to demonstrate the mathematical propositions, and at sixteen produced a famous paper on conic sections.

At eleven Sir Thomas Lawrence took portraits.

As soon as he could write, Halleck, the poet, began to rhyme.

Bulwer, the great novelist, began authorship at the age of six, and at fifteen wrote a volume entitled "Ishmael: an Oriental Tale."

Benjamin West was at the zenith of his fame he related to a friend that among his boyish efforts were six heads in chalk which, coming under the eye of the father of General Wayne, were purchased by him at a dollar apiece. "West was surprised and delighted at their bringing so large a price, and this awakened in him a desire to devote himself to art as a regular pursuit during life.

Richard Whately, the great logician and rhetorician, was a poor, sickly child. Contrary to boyish experience, he never felt hungry till he was twelve years of age. He was a very shy youth, and used to say afterward, if there was no life but the present, the kindest thing one could do for an intensely shy youth would be to shoot him through the head. But so thoughtful was this boy that he used to say of many theories of government and civilization: "I went through them when I was twelve; I thought that out when I was thirteen."

Matthew Henry, the commentator, at the age of nine was able to make Latin verses and read in the Greek Testament.

Isaac Watts began the study of the learned languages at four, and composed devotional verses at eight. He had scarcely passed boyhood when his verses were sung by the congregation from printed slips, which were furnished every week.

But few have known until quite recently that Charles Dickens had lived in his own life in most of the scenes which he depicts, and which have afforded exquisite pleasure to so many. At the age of ten he was sent out to earn his own living. He was a poor little drudge at that early age. Said he: "No words can express the secret agony of my soul as I sunk into this companionship, compared these every day associates with those of my happier childhood, and felt my early hopes of growing to be a learned and distinguished man crushed in my breast. The deep remembrance of the sense I had of being utterly neglected and hopeless; of the shame I felt in my position; of the misery it was to my young heart to believe that day by day what I had learned and thought and delighted in, and raised my fancy and emulation up by, was passing from me, never to be brought back any more, cannot be written. My whole nature was so penetrated by the grief and humiliation of such considerations, that even now famous and caressed and happy, I often forget in my dreams that I have a dear wife and children,—even that I am a man,—and wander back to that time of my life."

Benjamin Franklin struggled up out of the most unpromising circumstances. He rose superior to every difficulty, and commenced a life of usefulness when a boy by making ballads and circulating them in the streets of Boston.

Ruskin speaks of the instinctive awe, mixed with delight, which he had even when a child in the contemplation of nature. He says: "There was a certain indefinable thrill, which made me shiver from head to foot."

These examples are sufficient to show the power genius has to form the character and to indicate the work of life. They illustrate the words of Watts:

"I must be measured by my soul;
The mind's the standard of the man."

And also the words of Dryden:

"What the child admires
"The youth endeavors and the man acquires."

—Selected.

Don't Complain.

Don't complain of your birth, your training, your employment, your hardships; never fancy you could be something if you only had a different lot or sphere assigned to you. God understands his own plans, and knows what you want a great deal better than you. The very things that you most deprecate as fatal limitations and obstructions, are probably what you most want. What you call hindrance and discouragement, are probably God's opportunities, and it is nothing new that the patient should dislike his medicines, or any certain proof that they are poison. No!—a truce to all such impatience. Choke that devilish envy which gnaws at your heart, because you are not in the same lot with others; bring down your own soul, or rather bring it up, to receive God's word and do his will, in your lot, your sphere, and then you shall find that your condition is never opposed to your own good, but really consistent with it.

How to Look at Things.

Two Rabbis approaching Jerusalem observed a fox running upon the hill of Zion, and Rabbi Joshua wept, but Rabbi Eliezer laughed. "Wherefore dost thou laugh?" said he who wept. "Nay wherefore dost thou weep?" demanded Eliezer. "I weep," replied the Rabbi Joshua, "because I see what was written in Lamentations fulfilled: 'Because of the Mount Zion which is desolate the foxes walk upon it.'" "And therefore do I laugh," said Rabbi Eliezer, "for when I see with my own eyes that God has fulfilled his threatening to the very letter, I have thereby a pledge that not one of his promises shall fail, for he is ever more ready to show mercy than judgment."

—There are some who hope in the Lord; but yet in vain, because they only smooth and flatter themselves that God is merciful but repent not of their sin; such confidence is vain and foolish, and leads to destruction.

RULES FOR AGENTS.

1. At the head of every letter give the name of your own post-office, county and State; and the date on which it is written.
2. Write the name and give the full address of every subscriber you send, as legibly as you can.
3. Write "New" before the names of all new subscribers.
4. In ordering a change of address, give the post-office, county, and State, to which the paper is sent, as well as the post-office, county, and State to which it is to be sent.
5. Do not mix up different items of business; but take up and finish one item before you take up another.
6. Write items intended for publication on a separate slip.
7. Make every lawful effort to obtain subscribers, and to do good in whatever way you can.
8. Send money by drafts, post-office money orders, or registered letters.
9. Observe the above rules, and you will expedite business, save us from much trouble, and yourselves and our subscribers from disappointments and vexation.

WAITING FOR THE SON OF GOD FROM HEAVEN.

"For they themselves show of us what manner of entering in we had unto you, and how ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God; and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come."—1 Thess. i. 9, 10.

The gospel is said to be "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." This is one of the grand characteristics of the gospel. "I have laid help on one that is mighty," said the Lord in referring to his work in raising up Christ to be a Savior. The moral condition of man that made a Savior necessary, was a deplorable one. "The whole head is sick, and the whole heart is faint. From the sole of the foot even unto his head there is no soundness in it; but wounds and bruises, and putrefying sores." He was in an oppressed state of servitude to sin and Satan. One of the many dark pictures which the pen of inspiration draws of the condition of men in their unregenerated state, is the following: "For we ourselves also were sometimes foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another."—Titus 3: 3. This dark picture was not designed to apply to the people of any particular locality, but was, we presume, a description of mankind in general, while retaining the carnal mind, with its ordinary characteristics.

The converts of Christ at Thessalonica, made by the preaching of the gospel there comprised both Jews and the Gentiles. The former possessed the inveterate prejudice against Christianity which was characteristic of their nation, while the latter were guilty of idolatry. But when the gospel was preached at Thessalonica by the apostle Paul, and was received by the people as it was, not "in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance," the change wrought in them was complete, and their reformation thorough. They were "turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God; and to wait for his Son from heaven."

Among the traits of Christian character for which the brethren at Thessalonica were noted, and for which they were commended by the apostle, was that implied in their waiting for the Son of God from heaven. This implied their faith in Christ—in the Christ that had been on earth—in the Christ that was then in heaven,—and in the Christ that was to come again to the earth, "to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe." And it is noticeable in our estimating the comparative importance of the various traits of Christian character, that the attitude of waiting for the Son of God from heaven with all that is implied in it, is expressive of the highest attainment in that character. Or perhaps we might more correctly say, the waiting attitude implied in the language is the happy result of the highest attainment in the Christian life. The apostle expresses himself in regard to the happy and prosperous condition of the church at Corinth at one time, as follows: "I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Jesus Christ; that in everything ye are enriched by him, in all utterance, and in all knowledge; even as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you; so that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."—1 Cor. i. 4—7. Here it will be noticed that the statement that they came "behind in no gift," is connected with the attitude of waiting for the coming of our Lord.

This waiting attitude of Christians for the coming of our Lord from heaven, is itself the fulfillment of one of his commands to his followers, given in the following words: "Be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh. Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season? Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing. Verily I say unto you, that he shall make him ruler over all his goods." Matth. xxiv. 44—47. Here we have the command, and a precious promise connected with it as an encouragement to secure its observance.

This attitude of Christians for the coming of the Lord implies a readiness on their part for his coming. It implies a faithful performance of duty whenever and under whatever form it may occur. No believer can with propriety be said to be waiting for the Lord, if he is putting off until to-morrow any duty that ought to be done to-day. To be ready, and waiting for the coming of our Lord, we must be at peace with him, by a faithful discharge of all our duties, or by a humble and penitential confession of our failing wherein we have failed in performing our duty.

This waiting attitude of Christians for the coming of the Lord is also connected with a desire to see that coming. Hence it is said, "unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin, unto salvation." Heb. ix. 28. But Christians in the attitude of waiting for the coming of the Son of God from heaven, do not only look for his coming, but look for it with anticipations of glory and blessedness, and therefore desire it, and pray, "come Lord Jesus." "They love his appearing," and this they do because they love him, and know that when he appears, they shall be like him, for they shall see him as he is. 2 John iii. 2.

In this attitude of anxious and yet patient waiting of Christians for the coming of our Lord, we see the development of Christian character under apostolic preaching, and in primitive times. Then the gospel was preached as it had been delivered to the preachers by its divine Author, and it was received as it was preached, and it produced a beautiful, exemplary, and influential character, one of whose peculiarities was waiting for the Son of God from heaven.

Dear reader, has the gospel produced the effect in you which it did in the believers at Thessalonica? Has it turned you from idols and all ungodliness to serve the living God? And have you served him so faithfully, that you are now waiting in readiness for the coming of the Lord from heaven, who will bring his reward with him, to give every man according as his work shall be? Re. 22: 12.

If so, you will love his appearing, and hail his return to earth.

"O happy servant be

In such a posture found !
He shall his Lord with rapture see
And be with honor crowned.

Christ shall the banquet spread,
With his own bounteous hand,
And raise that fav'rite servant's head,
Amidst th' angelic band."

APPEALS FOR HELP--AN EXPLANATION.

We have quite a number of letters in the form of appeals to the brethren for help, sent to us to be published, that the appeals may be made to the general brotherhood through our paper. Some of the brethren represent themselves too poor to procure a home for themselves, and as they are desirous of procuring one, they propose to ask the brethren to assist them either by donations or loans to obtain what they cannot obtain without assistance. We sympathize with such brethren, and would like to see their desires gratified, and feel like doing what we can to promote their wishes, but we hope they will appreciate our position, and our reasons for not publishing all such letters.

There are many of our brethren who have no homes of their own, and they all no doubt would like to have. And the same reasons that one brother would have for asking for help to procure a home, hundreds of brethren would probably have. And if all such would desire to appeal to the brethren through our paper, we could not with propriety publish their appeals. And yet if we give place for some to be heard, and would not give place to others whose cases are equally deserving of attention, we would subject ourselves to the charge of partiality. Our position will be seen to be a critical one, and desiring to give no offence, we make this explanation. An extreme case of necessity or of suffering, may admit of a general and public appeal through the papers, but we cannot encourage brethren to bring ordinary cases before the brotherhood in that way. Even if we thought it advisable to publish so many appeals, we do not think it the best way to obtain the desired help. They may become so common that they will not be likely to be read with the interest necessary to a prompt and favorable response.

The general rule of the brotherhood in regard to the poor is this : When there is a poor member in a congregation that needs help, his first application should be to the church in which he has his membership. If that church is not able to help him to the extent that the case requires, it may permit him to apply to others. But he should not go from home for assistance without the authority of the church in which he lives.

The poor should by no means be neglected by the churches, as our duty to them is so frequently taught, and pressed upon our attention from various considerations. The apostle Paul intimates that when James, Cephas and John gave to him and Barnabas encouragement to preach to the heathen, they reminded them of the claims of the poor. "Only they would," says the apostle, "that we should remember the poor; the same which I also was forward to do." Gal. ii. 10. Let us all be forward to do the same.

WILLIAM C. THURMAN ON DEFINITE TIME AGAIN.

William C. Thurman in a paper called The Word of God, published in Boston, and apparently edited by him, in referring to an approaching meeting at Lewiston, Maine, on April 7th, at which he expected to meet a number of his brethren and sisters, and with them celebrate the solemnities of the Lord's Supper, has the following : After quoting Dr. Kurtz in his History of the Church as saying, "With the first Christians this solemnity was deepened by the prevalence of an old tradition that Christ would return during that night," he continues : "And indeed, as noticed in our last paper, according to the best light we have, the 2300 years of Daniel end on that very night. But I am sorry that we have 'not room in this paper to show that every prophetic date in the Bible in harmony with this may end there. But if Jesus does not come this year, I shall honestly admit that my arrangement of those prophetic dates, is incorrect, for after much mature deliberation, and the closest investigation, I can extend them no farther. Therefore, if 'at the time appointed the end shall be' (Dan. viii. 19), I shall this year, even on the 14th of the 1st month, expect to see Jesus; though, after the shock of such a sad disappointment, I am almost ashamed to admit that I am on definite time again. But I am in good company ; for, if the Apostles 'thought that the kingdom of God should immediately appear (Luke xix. 11), we were, in our opinion, 1,845 years nearer the correct time than they were. If, then, you have patience to bear with them, why not with us?"

In another article on The Lord's Supper, he has the following : "Then the time for the Lord's Supper this year is Friday evening, at 33 minutes after 7 o'clock, April 7th. And it is possible that we may, on that night, see the Lord; at least according to the best light I have, the 2,300 full years end there, which is 2,300, at least as I understand it, is Daniel's time appointed. But, if disappointed and tried, we will have to wait until Jesus comes."

It appears from the foregoing that the author of The Sealed Book of Daniel Opened, was not so sanguine in his expectation that our Lord would come on the night of the 7th of April, as he had been in regard to previous times that his calculation of prophetic dates brought him to look for that event. He seems to have been prepared himself, and to have tried to prepare the minds of his friends for a disappointment. This was wise. He evidently is learning to distrust the correctness of his conclusions drawn from periods of time about which there seems to be some uncertainty.

A NEW EDUCATIONAL ENTERPRISE.

Our brother J. M. Zuck, has opened a Normal Select School in the "Pilgrim" building in Huntingdon. Brother Zuck is well recommended as a teacher, and we have no doubt but that he will use his best endeavors to advance his pupils, and to make their situation pleasant and comfortable. We hope he will meet with success.

Those wishing to know more about this school will address,

J. M. ZUCK,
Box 50, Huntingdon, Pa.

WESTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA.

By reference to the Minutes of the District Meeting of Western, Pa., for 1875, it will be seen that the meeting for 1876 is to be on Tuesday, two weeks before Whit-Sunday. This will be on the 16th of May instead of the 23rd as announced in No. 14. Let it be understood, then, that the meeting will be on the 16th of May. We are indebted to brother Mark Minser, of Decker's Point, for this correction.

The brethren of the Jacob's Creek congregation applied for the meeting for 1876, provided the liberty should be given them to select their own time; but according to the minutes their request was not fully granted. The meeting was given them, but the time of the meeting was fixed as above stated. No doubt our brethren at Jacob's Creek will feel a little discommoded; but as there is yet a few weeks' time to make the necessary arrangements, it is hoped that they will be able, without much inconvenience, to conform to the change. B.

Cleanings and Jottings.

THE first article in the present issue seems now to be out of season, but as the author truly says, while the Christmas day as to time is in the past, "the day, as to character, remains." We wish however, the article had not been overlooked or kept back so long. B.

BRO. Wm. Hiner, of Doe Hill, Va., says: "I enclose $1 60 to you for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. Our time will soon be up and we don't want it to stop." This is the way we like to see our subscribers doing. Many others have done the same thing; and, in fact, it is a very rare thing for any of our subscribers to ask us to discontinue his paper. We, however, do discontinue more than we like to lose, merely because they do not seem to notice when their time is up; or if they do notice it, they fail to ask us to continue to send.

It may be proper here to give the rule by which our subscribers may know when their subscriptions expire, so here it is: If there is a number after your name, and that number is less than the number of the paper, you will know your subscription expired with that number, and that it is only by an oversight that the paper continues to go; as, G. Arnon 6, means that, his subscription should have been renewed, or his paper stopped at No. 6. However, as we continue to send his paper, and as he continues to read and enjoy it, we suppose he will be willing to continue to pay for it. 25 after any name (or 1—25, as it is in some cases), signifies that the time subscribed for will be up with No. 25. Should it be 2-10 it means that your subscription ends with No. 10 of vol. 2. If there are no figures after your name, your subscription will continue to the close of the volume. We invite all to renew before their time is up and their names are taken out of our addressing galleys, and hope our patrons will appreciate and accept the invitation.

B.

BRO. Tobias Hoffer sends $1 60, saying: "You will excuse me for not sending the money for your paper sooner." Of course we will, and thank you kindly for sending it as soon as you did; but we cannot excuse you from telling us what your address is. It is necessary for us to know your address before we can attend to your wishes in a satisfactory way. Will you be so kind as to send the desired information on a postal card?

B.

THE attention of such as are wishing to purchase homes is called to the advertisement of a farm for sale by Joseph Holder.

CORRECTIONS.—In No. 14, in the second obituary notice, read Mary Ann Stouffer instead of Margaret Stouffer.

Also, in same No. 4th obituary notice, "sister Sallenberger" should be sister SOLLENBARGER. Brother Sollenbarger wishes to have this correction made lest the friends in Pa. should not know who was meant. We think right here would be a good time and place to ask those who send us marriage or death notices to be particularly careful in spelling names correctly and writing them plainly. Figures should also be well-formed.

These remarks will apply to names of persons, places, and things in general, and we wish our agents to remember this, as well as our correspondents.

ONE of our subscribers in writing from Cerro Gordo, April 5th, says:—"Please send my paper to Beatrice, Gage Co., Neb., instead of Cerro Gordo, Ill.," but we don't please to do it just now. If he sends us his name we will attend to it soon.

BRO. Peter Beer has changed his address from Decker's Point, Pa., to Troutville, Clearfield county, Pa. We wish him success in his new field of labor.

BROTHER John S. Newcomer, has changed his address from Columbia, Pa., to Mountville, Lancaster Co., Pa.

BROTHER James P. Harris, formerly of Mooresburgh, Ten., has changed his address to Newtonia, Newton Co., Mo.

BROTHER Abram H. Cassel of Harleysville, Montgomery Co., Pa., writing on the 7th ult., says:

"As I am much interested in the Danish Mission and Stein Fund, I hold forth the necessity of contributing to it, upon which the following young sisters (mostly sewing girls), resolved to contribute all that they could earn by one week's sewing; but while the price of sewing varies so much, the result of their labor (although equally industrious), is also very different. BROTHER J. S. Flory, Greely, Col., April 3rd, 1876, writes:

"During March we had a few meetings with the brethren in Boulder Co. The last was two weeks ago, in company with our dear brother minister Nicholas Brubaker, of Ohio, who, we think, is improving in health since his sojourn here. He remained in Boulder Co., thinking the high altitude at the base of the towering mountains would be better for him. On the 30th and 31st of March we had the heaviest snow storm known here for years at this season of the year. About one foot of snow fell. It drifted badly. Weather moderate; so it is now rapidly disappearing. The farmers regard the snow as a god-send, as it will put the ground in an excellent order for farming and the bringing up of the grain that is sown. Early irrigation will not be required.

BROTHER Martin Cochran, of Harrisville, Ritchie Co., W. Va., says:—"I received from the Nettle Creek church, Wayne Co., Ind., thirteen dollars, of which I was to give $1.50 to the brother who had his house burnt last summer in this state. Brother John Werking's name was signed to the letter. He said he had forgotten his name and address, and he wished me to send the money to him. This I would gladly do if I knew where to send it; but I know of no such brother." The attention of our brethren at Nettle Creek is called to this matter, with a request that they give brother Cochran more explicit instructions.

BROTHER A. J. Correll, April 9th, 1876, says:

"I have changed my address from Romeo, Green Co., Ten., to Limestone, Washington Co., Ten. I think this will be the last change I will make, if the Lord be willing. I am now near Limestone Station, and can pay more prompt attention to the mail matter I may receive in the future, hoping I may not be forgotten by the beloved brethren and sisters in the Lord. As it gives me much comfort, in my old age, to receive letters from them, I wish all of them to write to me. As I love the people of God, it makes me happy to receive encouragement and advice by them, in both spiritual and temporal matters; but particularly in religious matters, as I have but a few days yet to live here on earth. I have passed my three score years, and can say of a truth, as Job said a long time ago, "A man that is born of a woman is of few days and full of trouble." My day has been full of trouble, trials temptations; but thanks be to God, he has delivered me out of them all, and I continue until this day to praise his great Name. May God's love and mercy and blessing attend us all in the future, is my prayer. Yours is love,"

CAUTION.—The Brethren are cautioned of one Robert Hutchison, who has a letter in his possession signed by brethren Holler and Murray, of Dayton, O., and claims to be a brother but whose conduct does not become a member. He agreed to surrender his letter and make satisfaction to the church, but afterwards refused to do so; and the brethren of Ogan's Creek congregation, with the sanction of brethren Holler and Murray, have decided to publish him.

Penny Papers.

For the satisfaction of many inquirers, we will say that, Truth Triumphant consists of ten numbers each containing four pages. Price one cent each or 80 cents per hundred.

Many brethren and sisters of limited means have long desired something of the kind to hand to their neighbors and friends. This long felt want can now be supplied; and many have already availed themselves of this opportunity to spread the doctrine of Jesus.

We cannot supply any more Truth Awakeners, the same matter may be had in lesson 1, Truth Triumphant.

Should any one ordering books or tracts from us, fail to get them, please notify us at once. We try to make no mistakes in filing orders, but they will occur.

M. M. ESELMAN.
Lanark, Carroll Co., Ill.

Railroad Notice.

I have made arrangements with the Cincinnati, Sandusky and Cleveland Railroad Company from Cincinnati to Sandusky, and from Columbus to Springfield (both roads have agreed to the same arrangement), to return all persons for one-half cent per mile who shall travel over any of the above-named roads or any part thereof to Bellefontaine, on their way to Annual Meeting. Those coming from Virginia or Maryland on the B. and O. railroad, will change cars at Columbus and take the Columbus and Springfield road. Buy tickets through to Bellefontaine. (No change of cars from Columbus to Bellefontaine). Those coming from the west on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, western division, change cars at Tiffin. Those coming on the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago road, change at Forest, and those coming on the Lake Shore railroad will change at Clyde, and all run south to Bellefontaine, and there change cars and run west to Gretna Station, 4 1/2 miles, which is two miles north of the place of meeting. At whatever points you strike either of the above roads, buy your tickets through to Bellefontaine, paying full fare and asking no questions, and at the place of meeting I will furnish you with a certificate which you will present to the ticket agent at Bellefontaine, who will sell you a ticket to return you over these roads at the above rates, 1-2 cent per mile.

Lift up Your Hands which Hang Down.

God, in his infinite wisdom, never deprives us of opportunities to exemplify our faith. We have abundant assurance in his word that he will not forget our acts of charity, nor fail to repay us, provided they are done in the right spirit. He puts an abundance of tests before us, to see whether we actually believe that he will fulfill his promises, and these are the most definite tests of our faith and love. O! I feel belittled in the light of the glorious gospel, so abounding with acts of love, not only called for, but performed and recorded, when I turn to the columns of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, and read the different calls upon us to give just a little, and I have so far contributed to one and neglected to contribute a little to all. I suppose my case is that of many and therefore I am encouraged to write, as I send my little. We have bought a little farm, and it needs bringing up. We have scarcely ever any money that we do not need to pay our honest debts, and sometimes we don't get them paid so promptly as we should. But when we read the divine word, and "behold the lilies of the field," we see that as long as we have more than food and raiment, we are not justified in putting ourselves into a position that forbids us to appropriate a little of our earnings to the fund of charity.—We use no tobacco nor coffee, nor can we afford any unnecessary luxury; but our children as well as we, have better health on our plain diet than we would have if we fared sumptuously every day. All the excuses then that I could offer against helping a little, would be filthy rags to my soul; such as I pray I may not be dressed in when I appear before God. Our heavenly Father does not leave it for the rich alone with their great deeds of charity to swell the accounts on the pages of the great book, where the cup of cold water given in the name of a disciple shall receive its full credit; for the treasury two mites carried off the prize of greatest donor in all the multitude. There is no way in which we can better exemplify our love to our fellow-man, and our implicit faith that he will repay us, than by deeds of charity.

In conclusion to these thoughts we arrive at two facts: First, we cannot expect to be children of God without charity; and second, there is no such thing as unexemplified charity. Miles may prevent us from doing good to our fellow-man.—The absence of Scripture directly applying to similar specific cases; or a similar manner of accomplishing the good, may prevent some from doing good. The fact that we do not read in the Scriptures about a Danish fund, or a Stein fund, or a poor fund similar to the one in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN and a hundred other things may prevent the accomplishing of any good deeds, but none of these things are obstacles to charity. It is only our depraved nature that is prone to halt at these considerations. Look upon the example of the ancient church of Macedonia. Paul testifies that they were poor, but beyond their ability they contributed to the necessities of those poor saints in Jerusalem, when it had to be carried all that distance by Paul as he went on his journey.

We have no more poor saints in Jerusalem, but we have one—Martin Cochran—in Pennsylvania, Ritchie Co., W. Va., who lost all he had in one night by a flood. In No. 3 of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, page 44, we read a statement of his loss with a recommendation that each elder should lay the case before his arm of the church. I do not know how many responded to the call, but any one who reads the letter must feel like helping in such an extraordinary case. Such a total loss scarcely occurs in the brotherhood once in twenty years. Just about three miles down the creek from here lives a man who lost a grist-mill, with its contents about a year ago. Well, he belongs to the Masonic fraternity, and of course they helped him out of his difficulties.—

Now brother Cochran is a minister in the second degree in the fraternity of Christians, and we are not bound by an oath to help him. Charity, however, does not consist in helping when we must, but it consists in helping whenever we can, and if we don't help one another when the opportunity of doing good presents itself, we fail to exemplify charity. Must we take lessons of good deeds of kindness from secular orders? Our charity should outshine theirs as much as the noon-day sun outshines the light of a candle.—Without multiplying words let us simply help one another, and so fulfill the law of Christ.

I read an article some time ago in which allusion was made to brethren who talked about sending the poor to the county poor-house. I do not wonder that the brother was grieved at such expressions. We are all prone to err, but I do hope that not a single brother, after mature deliberation, would advocate such a course to get his little poor-tax back, and get rid of the poor members. O, no!—I hope the church has not nearly arrived at that policy yet, and I hope the abounding grace of God will never suffer it to come to that. "Let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

A PROPOSITION.

I would propose that a fund be started and solicited at the office of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN and also at the offices of the Pilgrim, and the Vindicator, in behalf of brother Cochran; but I will here leave the suggestion with the discretion of the editors. C. F.

GREELEY, Colo., April 3, 1877.

Dear Primitive Christian:

We more than ever appreciate your kind visits. Being somewhat isolated from the main body of the members of the church we are glad to hear every week from the same. We notice a decided improvement in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, as well as in other of our periodicals, and we hope we all shall learn more and more how to bear one with another in our faults, and not cultivate the spirit of criticism so much. We had better strive to cultivate the more worthy traits of Christian character, such as love and forbearance, and by all means labor to a more perfect union.

Our brethren editors are doing their part in endeavoring to send forth a banner of light to the benighted world, that thousands who are groping in darkness may be made to see the glorious light of gospel liberty—a liberty that not only sets the soul free from personal sins, but also a liberty of freedom from religious inconsistencies, such as bind burdens on both poor and rich—I mean from those enactments that require such extravagances to support the gospel merchants and to build idol temples.

This being the case, it stands us in hand to avoid everything that might blur the pages of our periodicals, and be detrimental to the best and broadest interests of the general reader. If we could always see ourselves in our productions as others see us, we would try to electrify our pens with the magnetism of mutual love and discretion.

Personalities, when of such a nature as to savor of discord, belong to individuals and not to such an extended community as our periodicals reach. General principles, general news, and a united mutual interest for the welfare of the church and sinners at large, is the mission of our journals, if I mistake not. Then we would say to all correspondents, if you feel impressed to improve your talents, have your say according to your wisdom, and grant to others the same liberty without endeavoring to bend every writer to your own notion. Let the productions of others take care of themselves—stand or fall on their own merits or demerits, and take care of your own pen, and I believe we will all have enough to do, and the editors less fuel for the fire. We, for one, expect to profit by past experience, and as much as lieth within us, go on the even tenor of our way as Providence may dictate or lead.

J. S. FLORY.

Moody and Sankey's Method of Converting.

The above are two celebrated revivals, of whom there is much said in different papers. Their success in our eastern cities, reaches it is said to not only hundreds, but thousands. We do not purpose to either eulogize or condemn their theory of conversion; but simply invite attention, to an item of means which they employ, which we regard as virtually the secret to their success. When they commence operations at any point, the first step they take is to organize the congregation into classes: married men into one class; married women into another; so also with the young men and young women, and if necessary these classes are divided and subdivided, so that every man and woman is called upon to act in the respective district assigned him.

It is a sad truth that the interest of our religion is ebbing in many congregations, and it is not without its cause.—Parents should first work in their own families ("charity begins at home"); then in their neighborhoods. When we fail to secure the membership of the brethren's children, we do not consider the increase in the church a healthy growth. Every community is dotted with persons who feel the visitation of God's Spirit, and are sensible of their duty; these are the persons that we can wait upon, and with propriety solicit them to come on the Lord's side. We have just closed a mutual joint effort, on the part of the church, assisted as we feel by the Lord, in which we witnessed fifteen souls returning to the fold, with a flattering prospect for a fruitful season during the summer. Brother Jesse Calvert was made instrumental in the cause. May the Lord abundantly bless and reward him for his earnest, zealous and untiring labors while with us for truly it was a soul-reviving feast.

MADISON, Ga., April 18, 1876.

Dear Brother Quinter:

I am now receiving many letters of inquiry from all parts of the north and west, many of them from brethren who think of emigrating to the south.

The desire to know more about the climate, soil, productions, society, and in fact, all about Georgia, is rapidly gaining ground among all classes who have any idea of removing from their present homes. It affords me pleasure to answer.

so far as able, all inquiries addressed to me, with the hope (at least that desire and hope is uppermost) that brethren may be induced to seek homes here, and that we may have a church established in Georgia.

But many questions cannot be answered in a letter, and I have pretty well decided to visit my aged parents, beloved brethren and friends during the spring season of lovefeasts, and, if possible, attend the Annual Council of the brotherhood. Having been deprived of the privilege of meeting with brethren around the communion table for almost ten years, I feel very desirous to once more celebrate the sufferings and death of our Savior, with the brethren at our old home, under the shadow of the Green Tree, and elsewhere.

If permitted to carry out these intentions, I hope to see you and may be able to do something toward inducing some of the brethren to make Georgia their future homes.

We are enjoying our usual good health; have had a mild winter, but an unusually cold, disagreeable spring. The first snow we have had for three years came the last week in March, followed by cold, freezing weather, and ice that killed vegetables and trees that were putting out. Peach and other fruit trees were in bloom; and whilst leaves and young branches were frozen, much of the fruit escaped unharmed. Strange as it may seem, it is true, that many peach trees have a fair crop of fruit, now as large as full grown cherries, whilst the limbs are entirely bare of leaves; but now we have pleasant weather, and I notice a few ripe, red strawberries in our garden this morning. Accept love for all.

As ever in Christian fellowship,

E. HEYSER.

Dear Editors:

By request, and for the benefit of your many readers, I give the following. At the request of the brethren of the Valley River congregation, Barbour county, W. Va., I, in company with brother Holsleyson, started on my journey, April 6th, to visit them. Went as far as elder E. Auril's same day, and meeting that evening at brother Ferguson's, who was sick.—The old brother is very feeble and far advanced in years. Stayed in that neighborhood all night. Next morning took leave of our relatives and started on the way; the roads being very bad in places, we reached brother John Keiser's in the afternoon, where we spent the time pleasantly together until evening. Then we went to worship where, we met a fair congregation. The meeting continued until Monday night. I formed acquaintance with some brethren that were in attendance, and had previously been acquainted with some of the members. During the meeting I had some pleasant interviews with the brethren and sisters. The church is not in as prosperous a condition as is prayed for by the children of God. Too much of a coolness seems to prevail over or among them. Although they have had their fiery trials and conflicts to pass through, yet I found earnest workers for Jesus, trying to make use of the means of grace that God has given them. We had some some very interesting meetings. There were no accessions to the church; but the brethren think the result is largely in the future. With the work begun they are trusting for its diffusion through the benign influence of the gospel.—

Brethren, we have, indeed, a source of congratulation, and with the earnest determination of Christians, we may hope to see the seed spring up and bring forth abundant fruit, being as bread cast upon the waters, seen many days hence. Brethren, prove faithful to your calling; neglect not the assembling of yourselves together; neither be cold nor lukewarm.—But lay aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset us, looking unto Jesus the author of our salvation. Brethren, let us pray one for another, and those brethren who have visited this congregation, lift your voice to God in their behalf. Let us all strive to meet Christ in peace.

Arrived home on the 11th at six o'clock p. m., and found all well. Thank God for his goodness.

Z. ANNON.

Dear Brother Quinter:

I here acknowledge the receipt of another package of pamphlets sent by brother J. H. Moore and ordered by a sister in the east. I am very thankful to that sister, whoever she may be, and may the Lord bless her; and if we never see or know each other in this world, may it be his will that we meet in that bright world where we will unite in singing praises to God and the Lamb forever. I shall make use of all the printed matter the brethren and sisters are kind enough to send me, I possibly can.

We have had another visit from the Ohio brethren. Brother Jesse Stutsman and Jacob Garver preached several sermons for us which encouraged the members and built us up in our most holy faith. The people generally turned out well and paid good attention to the word preached. I conversed with several of those who attended the meeting. They seemed well pleased. I shall take this opportunity to again beg the brethren not to desert us. They have done so much for us that it seems presuming too much to ask more; but brethren, we are told to never weary in well-doing, and I hope this, together with the love you have for poor souls, will stimulate you to continue the good work. If I was idle myself it would be more like pressing the matter too much, but the brethren that have been here will bear witness for me that I am at work trying to surmount every obstacle that presents itself. After begging an interest in your prayers, I subscribe myself

Your sister,

CHARLOTTE T. BOND.

Dear Brother in the Lord:

Inasmuch as church news seems to be of general interest, I will give your readers a sketch of part of the church in Clayton county, Iowa. We have had several meetings here this winter. Brethren Peter Forney and Elias Troxel, of Benton county were with us in December. Brother Miller, from Lion county, and brother Benjamin Beeghly, from Waterloo, were here in February. There were 12 added to the church by trine immersion.

Brethren John Ridenour, Mahlon Smith, Elias Trall, and B. Beeghly were with us in March. We number 40 memhers here. These meetings were well attended, considering the weather, and we feel that there has been much good done here. We have reason to believe that there are many more almost persuaded to turn in with the people of God. Oh, that the Lord may help us all to so live that when we are done with the troubles and trials of this world we may be found ready for heaven and its happiness, is the prayer of your unworthy sister,

Editors Primitive Christian:

I noticed some time since a desire on your part to know the causes that have led members to the Brethren church who were brought up under the teaching and influence of other churches; hence, inasmuch as I am one of that kind, I will proceed to relate the causes that finally brought me to the "Brethren church."

I was born and raised in Ohio. My parents were members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and took great pains to bring me up in that faith, to which I assented till I was about twenty years of age. From that time till I was about thirty-five, I grew worse and worse, till I became almost a hardened sinner. In 1872 I went into the United States service. At Murfreesborough, Tenn., I took sick and was placed in the hospital.—There a Lutheran minister visited me and offered me a fan, which had written on it these words, "To day if ye will hear my voice harden not your hearts." I asked my comrade whether this quotation was correct. Said he, "Yes." I objected, and began to read the Testament, and read it through, and discovered that instead of the passage reading, "hear my voice," it read, "hear his voice." This prompted me to read more carefully than ever. I was discharged June 29th, 1863, and I returned home. Soon after this, our house burned with all its contents, also our only daughter. This caused me to stop in my wicked career. No house, no home, no daughter, no hope! Being an alien from the commonwealth of Israel, and a stranger to the covenant of grace. We resolved from this time to set our affections more on heavenly things. In 1865 we joined the Methodist Episcopal church, and were taken on six months probation. This gave us some relief from our former sense of guilt. At the end of that time we expected to be received as full members, but were somewhat disappointed. At the next quarterly meeting several Methodist ministers were present and we happened to dine together. The conversation and actions of these preachers was such that I was ashamed of them. And we sometimes think the devil himself might have been ashamed, if there be any honor about him. This disgusted us very much. Sometime after this we attended a camp meeting. Several preachers were appointed to keep the peace. They carried revolvers. Trading and trafficking and cheating were carried on in the Sabbath day on the ground. This, with a good deal of other corruption, again disgusted me. We left the camp meeting, never to return, with the firm conviction that if any could get to heaven by traveling on this road, they could do more than I felt I could. In the fall of 1868, we moved to Henry Co., Mo., and made an effort to connect ourselves with the Methodist church here. But we soon found them as corrupt as those in the east. Hence we withdrew from them forever. We then began to look around for the true church. I wanted to see that kind of baptism as I thought the Bible taught. Also the Bible method of sending out preachers. Where could I find the church that had these marks or features? The Baptists offered to take me into their church if I would join them. The Campbellites also made overtures; but these proposals did not suit me. I soon had the pleasure of meeting a brother, and as soon as I saw him I believed he belonged to the Dunkard church; and asked him whether he did not. He replied in the affirmative.—This aroused my curiosity to know something of their doctrine, and I asked him for a Scriptural conversation soon, which was granted. I soon discovered that their doctrine was in harmony with the word. I now wanted above all things to see them observe the ordinance of feet washing, the Lord's Supper, and the communion. This privilege was also afforded soon.—Then and there I was thoroughly convinced I had found the true church if there was one on earth. I then offered myself for membership, was baptized, and am more than ever satisfied with my present church relations, hoping that my dear brethren and sisters will pray for me that I may prove faithful, as I have great trials to endure, having formerly been a very great sinner, and spent the greater part of my life in sin, and am now called to testify of Jesus, whom I once crucified.

A Letter to the Isolated Members of Southern Kansas.

HAMILTON, Caldwell Co., Mo., }
April 7th, 186.

Brother Quinter:

Please say through the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN to the isolated brethren and sisters of southern Kansas, that I have concluded to locate somewhere in southern Kansas this coming fall. Hence I would say, that if any wish to secure my service in the ministry, we should be pleased to hear from all such, in order that we may be enabled to have some idea where the Lord wants to us labor. We hope and pray that our kind Father in heaven may guide by his divine Spirit, that good may result from our contemplated move. Yours in the hope of a glorious immortality,

LOVE-FASTS.

The Aughwick branch of the church of Christ expects, God willing, to celebrate the ordinances of God's house, in the Stone meeting-house, Germany Valley, Huntingdon county, Pa., May 25th, 1876; worship to commence at one o'clock, p. m. Also, meeting on the next day.

A. L. FUNCK.

The brethren of Hudson, McLean Co., Ills., intend, God willing, to hold a love-feast on the 26th day of May, and will continue until the 28th.

TROS. D. LYON.

The brethren and sisters of the Rome church expect to hold a lovefeast 5 miles south of Pistoria, in Hancock county, Ohio, on Saturday and Sunday the 23rd and 24th of June next. An invitation is extended to all who wish to be with us on their way to A. M. Those coming by railroad will meet with conveyance at Pistoria on the 2nd to take them to place of meeting.

JOHN P. EBERSOLE.

We intend, the Lord willing, to hold our lovefeast, in our meeting-house three miles north-east of Monticello, White county, Ind., on the 10th day of June, commencing at 10 o'clock. We want our western brethren to notice this when they make arrangements to go to Annual Meeting, so that they can be with us at the meeting and over Sunday.

By order of the church.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In West Branch church, Ogle county, Ills., Feb. 27th, 1876, CLARA ENMA, only child of John and Elizabeth Reisinger, aged 10 months, and 9 days. Disease, scarlet fever. Funerary by brother Michael Emmert from 1 Cor. xv. 17.

Also, in the same church, March 8th, JOHN WILSON, youngest son of brother Enoch and sister Mary Ann Norris, aged 6 years, 1 month and 9 days. Disease, scarlet fever. Funerary by brother Melchor Newcomer, from John xi. 26.

Also, in Grundy county, Iowa, March 6th, GEORGE T. REISINGER, son of brother Simon and step-son of sister Rebecca Reisinger, and brother-in-law of the writer, aged 21 years, 7 months and 29 days. Disease, black measles.

ELIZABETH ANNA REISINGER.

Near Nappanee, Elkhart county, Indiana, March 22nd, 1876, brother ZENO ROGERS, aged fifty years and sixteen days. Disease, typhoid pneumonia. He leaves a widowed sister and three children to mourn their loss, which is his grief. Our brother was a consistent member of the church for a number of years. He fulfilled the passage of Scripture which says, "In your patience possess ye your souls," for he was the most patient person when sick I ever saw. When he took sick, he told me he never would get well, and called his neighbors in and made settlements with them so as to owe no man anything, and also fixed his property in such a shape that there is no chance of quarrelling about the estate. Then he called for the elders of the church to "anoint him with oil in the name of the Lord." Thus we have reason to believe he has gone home to a better world than this. Funeral services by brethren John Miller, John Anglenyer and the writers, from Rev. xiv. 12, 13.

DANIEL WYSONG.

In the Logan district, Logan county, Ohio, on the 23rd of March, 1876, our old, respected mother, NANCY MOHR, aged seventy-five years, five months and five days. She leaves a kind husband, children and grandchildren to mourn their loss. The deceased and her husband, Conrad Mohr, were married fifty-two years, 11 months and 13 days. Funeral preached by friend David Plank in German, and in English by the writer, from Luke xii. 4, 5.

J. L. FRANTZ.

In the Bear Creek church, Montgomery Co., Ohio, April 11th, 1876, sister MARY TRISSEL, aged 80 years and 14 days. Funeral discourse from Rev. xii. 12, 13, by David Bowman, Samuel Garber and Isaac Hier.

BENJAMIN METZGER.

In the Iowa River church, Marshall county, Iowa, March 27th, 1876, sister ESTHER NICHOLSON, aged 61 years, 10 months and 27 days. Sister Esther truly lived a Christian life, and, we believe, died the death of the righteous; and by the multitude assembled at her funeral, manifestations were given that her many good deeds and kind acts through life were appreciated by her neighbors and friends. God grant grace to our bereaved brother Jesse and their two sons and four daughters, to enable them to prepare to meet with her again where all their troubles and trials will be ended.

JOHN MURREY.

(Pilgrim please copy.)

In the Maumee church, Defiance county, O., Jan. 31st, 1876, GEORGE LESTER SNOOK, infant son of David and Martha Shoug, aged six months and four days. D. SNOOK.

Of consumption, in the Shannon church, Carroll county, Ill., April 2nd, 1876, sister MARY ANN CURTIS, daughter of brother Isaac and sister Elizabeth Lutz, aged 26 years, 9 months and 24 days. She leaves a husband and three children to mourn her loss. Funeral services by brother Lemuel Hillery, from Rev. xiv. 12, 13. S. H. SPROGLE.

The old sister has left four and 5 daughters and a great many grandchildren.—She was a member of the church for 53 years, and was blind for the last 15 years. She was born in Somerset county, Pa., near Berlin, and brought to Ohio in 1806. She was the daughter of Nicholas Schultz. Funeral services attended to by elders Joseph Risser, Samuel Rairigh, and others. JOHN MONTLER.

A Toast.

Two Important Discoveries: The discovery of America by Columbus, and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery; the one opening up to mankind a new continent, the other a fountain of health, which is indispensable to the full enjoyment of life and its blessings. In response to the above sentiment come the unsolicited attestations of tens of thousands of grateful patients, who have been relieved of chronic ailments through its instrumentality. Those voices are limited to no locality, but from every city, village, and hamlet, in our broad domain, as well as from other climes, and in the strange utterances of foreign tongues, like the confused murmur of many waters, come unfeigned and hearty commendations.—It is, in combination with the Pleasant Purgative Pellets, the great depurator of the age. Under its benign action eruptions disappear, excessive waste is checked, the nerves are strengthened, and health, long banished from the system, resumes her reign and re-establishes her rosete throne upon the cheek. All who have thoroughly tested its virtues in the diseases for which it is recommended unite in pronouncing it the great Medical Discovery of the age.

The above is an accurate picture of the Waterbury Eight Day Clock, (with or without strike) which I have been offering as a premium to those who aid me in establishing agencies for Fahrney's Balm, in localities where it is yet unknown. Those who have received the clock are highly pleased with it, and as an evidence that they appreciate the gift, offer to do much more in the future. I therefore extend the time to the middle of May, so that others may avail themselves of this opportunity of securing a handsome and durable Clock. I will then discontinue to give clocks. ## BRIDLE THE TONGUE.

BY E. J. MYERLY.

"If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, that man's religion is vain."—James i. 26.

How blest the heart, how wise the man,
Who bridleth his unruly tongue!
For he is monarch of a crown
That kings and conquerors seldom own.

How vain the form of righteousness
That wreath secret slander's dress
Beneath, and, like the poisoned dart,
Will often wound the tender heart!

Can Christians in this garb be dressed
And think to obtain a heavenly rest,
When truth doth solemnly declare
That such shall never enter there?

O child of God! such evils shun,
And in the path of duty run;
All evil speaking lay aside,
And by your Lord be justified.

"The way of righteousness is life,"
Hence free from ev'ry deadly strife;
To all who seek 't is freely shown,
It is to heaven their stepping-stone.

My God, My God, Why Hast Thou Forsaken Me?

BY J. S. FLORY.

Was it true that the Father had really forsaken his Son while upon the cross? Or was Christ mistaken? We have every reason to believe this agonizing cry, "My God! my God! why hast thou forsaken me," was the offspring of a sad reality. Christ in all his life never made a mistake—never judged erroneously. He knew the will and providences of his heavenly Father. During his ministry on earth the Savior felt that God was with him and by Divine grace sustained him through trials and temptations and overshadowed him by his all-abounding love. All along the thorny pathway and way of sorrow he felt the presence of Divine influence. It was indeed meat unto his soul to do his Father's will; for at any turning point prior to this God revealed a smiling countenance and upheld him by his sovereign power. No marvel, then that a turning day on the part of his Father should bring such sorrow, and from him be heard such a cry. The withdrawal of Divine love was as the drying up of the fountain of life. Well might he cry "I thirst." The cup of living water was denied him. The midday sun which had so graciously illuminated his pathway of life was eclipsed. "Blackness and darkness" spread its thick gloom all around the agonizing Son of God. Oh! why this wonder of wonders? Why should the Father forsake his Son—his only Son? He so pure, so holy, meek and lowly, so humble and so obedient! Yes, why should he? This question we propose to answer. The reason is couched in the following quotation from Paul's 2nd letter to the Corinthians. "For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him."

Now we know it Christ was made to "be sin for us" he was made or became our substitute. To become our substitute is to take our place. No one can really be a substitute to suffer the penalty due a guilty person unless he himself is innocent or free from guilt. For if the offered substitute was guilty he would have to be punished for his own guilt. But thanks to God, Christ our substitute who came to fulfill the law, which man could not or did not keep, was one who "knew no sin." He was "holy, harmless, undefiled separate from sinners." 'Tis true, he was of the "seed of the woman" but free from the taint of original sin. Conception through Divine influence could not be other than immaculate. Of the Virgin was born a son holy, pure, and spotless, the offspring of the overshadowing influence of the Holy Ghost. In all his life Christ "knew no sin." 'Tis true he was surrounded with sin and iniquity, but experimentally he "knew no sin." He was well acquainted with grief and sorrow, but with sin he had no acquaintance—was a stranger to it. Not that he was ignorant of its effects on man, but he himself joined no hand with sin. In his thoughts, desires and life he "knew no sin." Oh! the purity of our Savior. His garment of milk-whiteness was preserved unsoiled, kept spotless even to the end. Thus we see he was indeed a fit substitute for man. In every respect he filled the requirement of the law, "a lamb without blemish." He came not of himself to officiate in the high priest's office, but like Aaron was made a priest by the calling of God and "made sin for us." Being ordained of God to make an offering "to take away the sin of the world" he made the offering, even his life. He was not called upon to select an offering from the "cattle of a thousand hills" or from the flock that fed in the valleys. Nay, the offering must be the "chiefest among ten thousand the most worthy one in all the universe—God's only begotten Son! And now when the time to make the offering comes, oh! wonder of wonders! he is made sin for the whole world, not a sinner, but "SIN." In him all sin culminates. Rapine, murder, adultery pride and all the devices of Satan, yea all the guilt of the world centered on him who is "made sin." God could not endure to look upon such a hideous mass of sin here piled mountain high. The beast in former times that was offered for sin had to be "taken without the camp." So Christ when he became "sin" our substitute, must be taken without the camp, away from Jerusalem—away from Zion—with him up to Calvary's rugged brow he is taken.

Sin always separates from God. Christ was "made sin" for us and as sin separated us from God, so he, when he became "sin" must be separated from God his Father. The crisis had come. God turns from sin, cannot behold it with pleasure. Mercy and love flee away—the light of the Father's countenance is withdrawn. No wonder darkness envelops the sun. Oh! what sorrow! Oh! the depths of agony in these words "My God! My God! why hast thou forsaken me?" To be deserted at such a moment, oh! what a calamity! His was bodily suffering the most execrating, yet this was nothing in comparison to the rivers of mental sorrow and pain that overwhelmed the spotless Lamb on Calvary. He was "made sin for us," therefore he must needs drink the bitter cup to the dregs. He, our substitute, must endure the wrath laid up for sin. Here we can see what would have been the doom of the world, forsaken of God and plunged in an abyss of woe, blackness and darkness the most appalling. All eternity would have resounded with the cries of a lost and ruined world. But Christ our substitute bore it all—he made the cry of agony in our stead that we might go free. The whirlwind of divine wrath pent up for a sinful world, burst in all its fury upon his innocent and defenceless head, that the guilty world might escape. He who was the very essence of purity and uprightness was “numbered with the transgressors,” became “a curse”—was “made sin,” all for us. Oh! what love—who can fathom its depths? The time at length was come when the Lamb must be slain—the passover killed. The “rock is smitten by the divine rod and from out the cleft cometh forth “blood and water!” A fountain was opened “for the healing of nations.” A famishing world washed and cleansed through the efficacy of the blood of the vicarious sacrifice. The fountain of everlasting life, so long pent up, now gushes forth in all its sparkling beauty. Stupendous wonder! Silence in heaven! Nature is paralyzed when the Son of God dies upon the tree. “It is finished.” “God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself”—the atonement is made. The Saviour has “trod the wine-press alone” “was buried for our transgressions” and reconciliation is complete. That the grave might be sanctified and death robbed of his power, the mangled body of Jesus must be buried to “rest in hope,” because it was written “thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, (darkness) neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy one to see corruption.”

Behold a new wonder! Darkness fleeth away, the heavens are resplendent with glorified light—the light of God’s reconciled countenance. Shining angels are sent to welcome home the Holy one. God’s mighty arm reaches down to earth to pluck the royal Heir from out the embraces of death. “Come forth my “blessed Son!” “Come to my arms—to my bosom!” Up, up, the shining pathway the Lord of life and glory ascends. Hear, oh! hear, the triumphant shouts of welcome; there is no silence in heaven now. “Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in. Who is the King of glory? The Lord strong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battle. Lift up your heads, O ye gates, even lift them up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in.” (Ps. 24).

Need we now ask why God forsook his Son while he was on the cross. When we consider what a fearful thing sin is we need not wonder why God should turn from it in any phase in which it is found.

Christ being “made sin,” at that most momentous period, separation from God the Father must needs take place; not “divorcement,” but separation for the time being. But just how this mystery took place and to what extent, is not for us to say, not knowing, neither does it matter. We know enough to teach us all that sin always separates from God and that person who come to die full of sin, never having known Christ in the pardon of their sins, must be separated from God and that forever.

One word relative to those commentators or persons who deny the doctrine of the imputation of the sin of the world to Christ, and strain the text to read, “He made him to be a sin-offering for us, who knew no sin.” Greek scholars inform us that the same word in the original is used in the first place in the text, as in the latter. If it means sin offering in one place, it also means the same in the other. Then we would have, “He hath made him to be a sin-offering for us, who knew no sin-offering. Such a rendering of the text would be ridiculous. Hence we are driven to the necessity of taking the English text just as it reads. We will leave the latter part of the text, used in the forepart of this essay, for another time.

Greeley, Col.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Earnest Prayer.

BY E. B. WHITNER.

“The effectual fervent prayer of the righteous availeth much.” James 5: 16.

Prayer is asking for a favor, and particularly in earnest. The Savior, in that memorable prayer in Gethsemane, said, “Father, if it be possible let this cup pass from me, nevertheless, not my will but thine be done.” And there appeared an angel unto him from heaven, strengthening him, and being in an agony, he prayed more earnestly, and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground. It is this earnest prayer that is effectual and that availeth much. “Ye ask and receive not because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lust.” Asking favor in earnest is pouring forth the desire of our hearts to God for the accomplishing of certain objects in view. And the object in view must be the desire of the heart and in harmony with God’s revealed will.

One of the first essentials to prayer is, that whoever petitions should well consider the object for which he or she petitions, lest we ask for inconsistencies; lest we ask God to do that which we, through his assisting grace can do alone. We should not ask for anything but what we really and earnestly desire. These things we cannot know except we know our own hearts. “From the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.” Then if we know our heart, we know our desire, and knowing our desire, we, according to the language of the text, must pray a fervent prayer, or pray in the earnest of the spirit, which God giveth us. But in order to be qualified thus to approach God in prayer, we must according to the text, be also righteous, or it availeth nothing to pray. It is of importance then, in this solemn undertaking, to know our own heart, and to know whether we are properly qualified by being clothed with the garb of righteousness, and if not thus clothed, we must come to Jesus Christ, the righteous, and buy, “and we can buy without money and without price.” “Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled,” said Jesus. “In every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness, is accepted of him.” Acts 10: 35.

“If ye love me,” said Jesus “keep my commandments.” John 14: 15. Having then purchased this saintly garb, let us go forth in the earnest of the spirit, and pray more earnestly, trusting to God for that which we pray for, having faith in his promises. “He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father. And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do.” John 14: 12, 13. So declared our Lord. But says one—“I cannot pray.” To that, dear reader, I would kindly say, consider well the import of that saying, “I cannot pray.” Prayer as defined at the head of this article, is simply asking favor. Oh! come and ask; does not your heavenly Father know what ye need ere ye ask of him? Yes, “he heareth ever the young ravens when they cry” Oh! dear reader, who is so poorly clad with language that he cannot ask for what he so much needs—the Spirit of the Lord? Look at the little child that cries to its mother for what it wants. In simplicity of heart, go to God in the same way.

But let us not expect to receive without asking, or to find without seeking, or that it shall be opened unto us without knocking, because the promise is conditional, and our part of the condition is the most important, because it must be first, and the blessing is sure to follow.

Much has been accomplished by effectual, fervent prayer. Elias prayed earnestly and it rained not for the space of three years and six months. And he prayed again and the heaven gave rain and the earth brought forth her fruit. Daniel prayed in his house three times a day, and God delivered him from his human enemies and from the beasts of prey. Prayer was made without ceasing by the church for Peter, and he was rescued by the angel of God. Paul and Silas at midnight prayed, and there was a mighty revelation of God's power displayed in the person of the Roman jailer. To these we might add almost an endless variety of instances where the prayers of God's people were heard and answered—but we merely refer to those few to show the power in prayer. And now let us learn from these examples, and let us take courage, and adorn our profession by obeying the commandment, "Pray always," "pray without ceasing." We are also to "pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands to God without wrath or doubting."

Having shown that prayer is a command, how stands the case with such as have said they cannot pray, and especially when we remember that it is not the amount of words we use, for he heareth us not for our much speaking. It is not the eloquent flow of language that will "avail much" but "the effectual fervent," "Lord have mercy on me a sinner." The cry must come from a broken spirit and a contrite heart, and be seasoned with faith. "Therefore I say unto you, What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." Mark 11: 24. "But when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut the door, pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." Lord, increase our faith, confirm our hope, and perfect us in love. Amen.

Popularity vs. Notoriety.

BY GEORGE BUCHER.

A man is popular when he has the good affections of the people; a man is notorious when he has the bad affections of the people. A man may be popular with one class of people, and notorious with another at the same time. In some professions a man may be either popular or notorious: the way he manages his affairs will decide that. In some professions a man can be only notorious. A minister may be either; a thief can only be notorious.

These words are applicable to characters both in church and state. No doubt but many would feel an impulse to leave notoriety and strive to be popular, if they were aware of the true sense of the words. As a consequence of the late rebellion, notorious characters seem to be more numerous in the state than popular ones; and, apparently the church has reaped some of the bitter fruit, too. The state has many notorious characters in public trust, with a multitude to govern. The church, too, has felt the volcanic shudder. How many hearts have been bleeding when seeing the occasional eruptions! The way, and the only way to become popular in the church is to be virtuous. But such popularity is not popularity with the world. The way for a member to become popular with the world, is, to think, and say, and act as the world does. Fashionable members are not popular, but notorious with the church; and they are not notorious, but popular with the world.

Members who are always afraid "the narrow way" is not wide enough, who are always ready to gainsay everything the church does, who encourage rebellious members, who are lovers of self and despisers of order, such are notorious in the church and popular with a part of the world. Members who, at church, District, or Annual Councils, think they must say something on every subject, will likely be notorious in the church. Brethren have prided themselves with being popular when, in fact, they were notorious. Lamentable fact! These notorious characters are found here and there over the brotherhood. They form a somewhat obscure but compact body. Like Elihu "they are full of matter, the spirit within them constraineth them. Behold their belly is as wine which hath no vent; it is ready to burst like new bottles." They only want a little more time, and a little more power, and they imagine to be the guiding senate of the church. Then the old brethren,—the well-tried, faithful, apostolic brethren,—will be things of the past! Then a brighter (?) day will have come! Things in general will be a little smoother! Itching ears must not be offended, &c. Shall that time be allowed to come? Brethren, sisters, young and old, who will say YES, and who will say NO? Know we what manner of spirit we are of? This appeal is made specially to the young. We see the aged pass away. Will we not, as their followers, be faithful sentinels in the trust committed to us? "Cry aloud, and spare not." Let us put on the whole armor of God. Let us put our trust in God. Let us look unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith. Let us go back for the Living Waters. Back, not only fifty years to see how the practice was then,—back, not only back to the reorganization of the church,—but back to the source and fountain of all that's Christ-like; and there study the heavenly way with a zeal worthy of our high calling.

Stand Still.

Faith can stand still. There are times in the Christian's history when the greatest thing to do is to do nothing, and the grandest stand that can be made is to stand still; and faith is strong enough for all this. Strength oftentimes manifests itself in impatience, but the greatest strength is that which can be patient. In quietness or confidence, (or faith,) lies our truest strength. Though the Red Sea be before us, and there be no bridge, no sail, nay, not a raft nor a plank on which to float over, when on either side of us are mountains that we cannot climb, and behind are Pharaoh and his avenging hosts;—then to stand still and see the salvation of our God, simply because God hath bid us do so, that is the sublimest exercise of faith, for it is the most complete renunciation of self, and the most thorough dependence upon God. Such faith as that shall not have long to halt. For such faith God will open up a way, even though it be across the bed of the sea, and "go forward!" shall be the cry. Whatever the night may be, in the morning faith will start the timbrel and dance, calling joyously for a song unto the Lord, who so gloriously hath triumphed on behalf of his own. When we see how nobly, how grandly faith can act, and the blessed results that follow, we are not surprised that the inspired apostle should say of faith that it is the gift of God. The power calmly, quietly, patiently, confidently to wait and to endure, could come from none other than the all-patient and almighty God.

LET us read the Gospel, not so much to know what truth it contains, but as we say our prayers, that we may possess our hearts with the same spirit which Jesus Christ discovers in them; observing his actions and manner of life, and striving continually to imitate them, following his instructions and believing his promises and threatenings.

IMMANUEL.

BY JAS. Y. BECKLER.

In olden times the prophet's word
Proceeded straightly from the Lord;
And in the word was written thus,
By inspiration, "God with us,"
Immanuel.

The prophet spake, his word believe :
"Behold a virgin shall conceive
And bear a son, him shall ye hear;"
For he with wisdom shall appear,
Immanuel.

The word of God went forth to kings,
Because the spreading of his wings,
And the outstretching of his hand
Should fill the borders of thy land,
Immanuel.

Behold in Bethlehem, a child
Born of Mary, meek and mild,
And cradled where the camels fed,
In swathing clothes, in humble shed—
Immanuel!

The angels shed their living light
Around the shepherds in the night,
Who heard their hallelujahs ring,
Rejoicing in the new-born king,
Immanuel.

The eastern Magi from afar
Came guided by an unknown star;
Inquiring at Jerusalem—
They found at last in Bethlehem,
Immanuel.

Conversing, in Jerusalem,
Among the doctors, wisest men,
His wisdom their attention won,
Because he was the Royal Son,
Immanuel.

Unnoticed by the world at large,
And subject to parental charge,
A carpenter at work was seen,
It was the lowly Nazarene,
Immanuel.

A Messenger by night and day
Before him went to pave the way;
And afterward we see the same,
The humble, meek, and loving Lamb,
Immanuel.

Resolved to ope the way of peace,
And to fulfill all righteousness,
Some thirty miles from Galilee,
Unto Bethabara, went he,
Immanuel.

Obedient to the will of God,
He went into the Jordan flood,
And was immersed beneath the wave—
Such easy rite and pattern gave
Immanuel.

And open'ning thence the space above,
The Holy Spirit like a dove
And the eternal Father's voice,
Descending, made their hearts rejoice.
Immanuel.

Here, with astonishment we stand
And gaze with wonder o'er the land,
How people from their duty swerve,
And by the pattern will not serve
Immanuel.

The prince of darkness came around,
When in the wilderness was found
The "Man of sorrows," wrapt in gloom;
But Satan could not overcome
Immanuel.

Again, upon a mount, unfurled
Were all the kingdoms of this world
In panoramic view. With guile
The Tempter never could defile
Immanuel.

In Galilee and by the way,
A Light appeared as bright as day;
It spread its brilliancy around
On all the land where'er was found
Immanuel.

At Cena first in Galilee,
A few his miracles did see :
But thousands when he gave them bread,
Perceived by whom they all were fed,
Immanuel!

One day there came to Jacob's well,
A woman strange; and what befell
In conversation, Sychar's daughter,
When she demanded living water?
Immanuel!

The house of God, the temple great.
A house of merchandise was made.
But One there came with cleansing power,
Who drove the traders out that hour—
Immanuel!

To Sidon where Astarte stood
In images of brass and wood,
There came a man with mien benign,
In being human and divine—
Immanuel!

A man of Judah doing good
In Tyre and all its neighborhood,
By healing sick, the blind and lame,
Who merited a wondrous name,
Immanuel.

A ship was riding in the storm :
The fearful sailors took alarm,
When o'er the waves of Galilee,
Came walking on the surging sea,
Immanuel.

At Nain a miracle was wrought :
The dead arose as he was taught,
And other dead, when called, arose,
To prove the pow'r none else could use.
Immanuel!

In parables a man was heard
To speak and vindicate his word.
He sought the lost of Israel,
Because he was Immanuel.
Immanuel!

The counsels from the court of heaven,
By Jesus Christ to man were given :
He gave the counsels by command,
For all the borders of thy land,
Immanuel.

The Pharisees of high estate,
The rulers of the land, the great,
Those men of honor, wealth and fame,
Despised the unassuming Lamb,
Immanuel.

Three witnesses on Tabor's height,
Beheld three men in shining white :
Two strangers from eternity
Come back to view thy majesty,
Immanuel.

A king, though born in Bethlehem,
Once rode into Jerusalem,
While all the air was made to ring
With loud "hosanna to our king,"
Immanuel.

Assembled in a chamber upper,
To institute the sacred supper;
Before their supper they did eat,
The Master washed his servants' feet.
Immanuel!

How changed the scene! What agony
Was felt in cold Gethsemane!
When Jesus bowed his soul in prayer,
His sweat like drops of blood fell there.
Immanuel!

He prayed, if possible, the cup
He might not drink, but give it up—
In anguish bowed, he raised his face,
And did to God submit his case.
Immanuel!

At last came the momentous hour
For Antichrist to show his power :
To make his felon crime accord,
The traitor Judas sold his Lord,
Immanuel.

The powers of hell combined at last,
And a decisive judgment passed;
The treach'rous Jews were heard to cry,
"O, crucify, O, crucify"
Immanuel!

But Pontius Pilate, governor,
Was somewhat moved with pity for
The innocent, who was accused,
By wicked, unrelenting Jews.
Immanuel!

So Pontius thought he would release
The man, and him dismiss in peace—
But then the Jews refused his plan,
And chose a murderer, rather than
Immanuel.

The cruel Jews at length prevailed,
That Jesus to the cross was nailed.
Six hours he hung : but then he cried,
"T is finished,"—bowed his head and died.
Immanuel!

The angels saw the awful sight,
The sun refused to give his light,
The earth perceived convulsive shocks,
That shook the mountains, rent the rocks.
Immanuel!

Rich Joseph a disciple was,
Who took the body from the cross,
And, wrapped in linen for the grave,
He laid it in his own new cave.
Immanuel!

But then the grave so still and cold,
The Savior's body could not hold :
For on the third day morn he rose
Triumphant over all his foes.
Immanuel!

Ye heavenly hosts, astonished stand,
And meditate this wonder grand.
Behold the power and majesty,
That captive led captivity—
Immanuel!

Ye conq'ring spirits all combine—
Ye saints on earth your voices join
To praise the Lamb that once was slain,
That conquered death, that lives again—
Immanuel.

He vanquished Satan, broke the thrall
That fettered Adam since his fall,
And made a way for all mankind,
A throne of grace by faith to find—
Immanuel!

He gained all pow'r in earth and heav'n,
The keys of hell to him were given,
He took the sting of death away
From those who do thy will obey,
Immanuel.

He next ascended up on high
To God's empyrean in the sky,
And left to us his word and will,
That we thy righteousness fulfill,
Immanuel.

How will it be in that great day
When heaven and earth shall pass away?
The word of God will steadfast be,
And every human eye shall see
Immanuel.

The righteous then shall freely stand
Before the Judge, on his right hand,
In garments washed with blood be free,
With approbation they shall see
Immanuel.

The wicked trembling in that day,
When ev'ry hope shall pass away,
Lamenting, shall with sadness rue
That in this life they never knew
Immanuel.

The wicked shall go down so hell,
Where Satan and his angels dwell,
In darkness and in torments dire,
To realize thy dreadful ire,
Immanuel.

Not so the just, who lived by faith,
They shall not see the second death:
They washed their garments in his blood,
And shall be kings and priests to God,
Immanuel.

I am the Way.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To a perplexed saint.

Not unfrequently it requires two applications of spittle fully to restore our sight, so "that we see every man clearly." Mark viii 23—25. When we "see men as trees, walking," it is safest to conclude that the difficulty is ophthalmic, and not that every person is a giant. Our clearest vision "cannot see afar off," as by intellect, while in most things we are stone blind, save by trust. It is as easy to stumble into a theoretic labyrinth, as for a purblind man to fall into a pit. The meshes of Chrystal in his "Modes of Baptism," in which you have become entangled, and which seem as if made of wire cable, are no more than cobwebs. They may hold a fly, or a gnat, but an animal of larger proportions will walk through them without being aware of any obstruction. So will you after your eyes get another touch from the hand of Jesus.

Perhaps nine-tenths of our perplexities originate in misapprehension. Our narrow moral horizon shuts us in to imperfect apprehensions of the truth, and these half-perceptions become to us the whole truth. When a new stand-point gives us a view that overtops and outreaches the old, we are in a maze, and apt to bring the old and new into conflict instead of making them complementary. It is very easy for Chrystal to ask questions which nobody can answer—a child can do that—but it is not easy for him to establish the premises from which his questions proceed. He speaks and you apprehend, as if the continuity that gives validity to the ordinance must be in the ordinance itself. Continuity implies life, and baptism is as lifeless as the inkly letter that mediately enjoins it. Whatever life is in the letter, is put in by Christ; and whatever vital significance is in baptism, is put in by the same Person. Christ acted and spoke as one "having authority," because "all power in Heaven and in earth" was committed unto Him. Christ is not a power outside of the Church, but is a part of the Church, just as really as my head is a part of my body. The authority to baptize is in Him alone, and when no one lower than the Head can be found to administer according to the Word, the injunction remains the same, the action is unchanged, and the authority as imperative, as if the last sinner on earth were the applicant, and all the others were empowered to administer the rite. When the ordinance was established, some one had to be the first administrator; and his qualification lay not in being immersed himself, but in being Divinely-authorized for his work. If he was immersed he received the rite at the hands of God, or, like Naaman, dipped himself. "There was a man sent from God whose name was John." "He that sent me to baptize with water," &c. Should circumstances necessitate a re-institution of the ordinance, the same principle would obtain as at the beginning. The same Word that came unto John, came also to the little, Divinely-illuminated, Divinely-guided company which were the nucleus of the Brotherhood. When there is no John to welcome Jesus, no Philip to accommodate the Eunuch, no Peter to induct Cornelius, and no Ananias to immerse Paul, what then? Does the absence of a baptized agent render the "word of God of none effect?" If no one can be found whose authority to act as God's vicegerent is sealed by immersion, shall we therefore starve, even while the whole Loaf of Heaven is in our hands? God forbid. If there is no parveyor left to feed us with "every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God," shall we therefore perish beside the Golden Table, with showbread enough within our reach for all Israel? If you are the only seeker after God that is left, baptize yourself; or, if you have company in the faith, do as did Mack and his associates. Rightly apprehended, we are never without fellowship. Christ as much a member of the Church as you or I; and if we are morally reduced to Alexander Selkirk, we can do in Him, for Him, and with Him, what in other circumstances is valid only by dual action, as acceptably as if done by Paul, or Peter, or John. If there is unbroken historical connection, we are under obligation to honor it on the one side of our faith, even as we honor the vital connection on the side of God. Where the historical bond fails, the obligation Godward remains. The baptism of to-day, as practiced by the Brethren, derives its validity not from Mack, nor from John, or from Peter, but from Peter's Master and Lord, whose relation to us as individuals is as immediate as with the eleven to whom He gave the original commission. Better be self-baptized, or unbaptized, or baptized by a sinner, than be sprinkled, or have water applied in God's name that does not represent God's mind. Better have the child circumcised on the eighth day by the mother, than disappoint the Divine ordination in the absence of a priest. Better be self-immersed, or receive the ordinance at the hands of an unbaptized John, than convert the possible into an excuse for not being baptized at all. Had our ancestors done otherwise, and that by the unyielding stringency of the principles of the Gospel, the Brotherhood would have no existence, and the world be a moral wilderness without an oasis to relieve its sterility. Thank God that He found a septenary beyond the Atlantic, who were ready to populate the world anew with genuine Apostolic successors, whose connection with Primitive Christianity is through Christ Himself, and not through mundane history.

The Tabernacle, Typical and Transitional.

BY S. T. BOSSERMAN.

In all the various modes of worship, the people had a particular place to which they resorted to hold communion with God. Generally they put up some structure in which they worshipped the true and living God, and those places that they resorted to for this special purpose were styled tabernacles. A tabernacle is a slightly built structure of wood, a portable structure that can be moved at the will of the possessor. That may be styled a tent under which the ancient Israelites worshipped God. Those tents were regarded as holy places, and were regarded by the faithful as places of happiness. "How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel." Num. 24: 5. Job understood a tabernacle or house of worship to be a holy place, and it was the earnest desire of his heart that no evil should dwell there. "Let not wickedness," said he, "dwell in thy tabernacles." Job 11: 14. But if the heart should again be led into the paths of sin, he encourages us to divest ourselves of all evil. "If thou return to the Almighty thou shalt be built up, thou shalt put away iniquity far from thy tabernacles." Job 22: 23.

Again, a tabernacle may be regarded as a tent that can be put up or taken down as occasion requires. And during the time of Moses, this was regarded as the palace of the Most High, "the dwelling place of God." It was the place in which they worshipped God in the camp of Israel. It was this holy tent that contained the Holy place, in which the high priest entered once a year. And wherever the Israelites traveled, they carried this tabernacle with them in order that wherever they pitched their tent, they could erect an altar. Our tabernacling in this life is regarded as transitory, or of short duration. Christ tabernacled in the flesh, and remained long enough in the world to show unto us his "human nature," of which some regard the "Jewish tabernacle as a type, God having dwelt in both." Christ as a minister of the true tabernacle, came from heaven and showed the way, so that if life is but short, we can still qualify ourselves for that upper and better tabernacle which will last through all eternity. He is said to be "a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched and not man." He became a "high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands." The soul, if faithful to its calling while tabernacling in the flesh, can enjoy the pleasure of the "good things to come" in this life, and in the life to come.

If we are as much concerned in the great matter of our salvation as we should be, we will endeavor to live up to all the requirements of the Lord. The apostle exhorts his brethren to faithfulness, and as a reason for them doing so, says, "that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand."

In the 15th Psalm we have described a true citizen of Zion. And the tabernacle named in the Psalm, may represent the Christian church. This should be kept pure, that it may be prepared to receive the Lord, when the cry shall be heard, "Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him."

Lastly, the natural body in which the soul abides and makes its home, may be regarded as a tabernacle. "For we know that," says the apostle, if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

Peter realized this transitory life while he was in the flesh, and he labored earnestly to establish his brethren in the "present truth," in the truth as he learned it from his blessed Master. He knew that life was short, and that there was danger of the flock of Christ being led astray. He says, "Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance, knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath shewed me." Thus did he exhort his brethren, that by his earnest endeavors they might be able after his decease to have "these things always in remembrance." The apostle would have us to understand that we must labor earnestly in order to gain heaven, that life is but short; that this earthly tabernacle must soon perish. Yes, my friendly readers, our bodies soon must be consigned to the tomb, though we may cherish them and indulge them in all the luxuries that this life can afford, yet they must die. Oh, let us then so live, and so do, that when the pale messenger comes, we may be enabled to say, "Come welcome death, thou end of fears, I am prepared to go." Let us all "humble ourselves under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt us in due time."

Fasting and Feet Washing.

BY D. P. SAYLER.

I have been requested by several brethren, and also sisters, to write an essay on fasting, alleging as a reason for it, that they never heard a brother preach on the subject, while they think it a Christian duty to fast &c. I always feel reluctant to write on such subjects, as there are brethren always ready to volunteer their personal criticisms; especially if a Christian duty is neglected, or a truth disobeyed by themselves, then their pens become the pens of ready writers, though on practical religion they are never heard.

Fasting was much in use by the ancient people of God, in times of sorrow and afflictions. Nature, under these circumstances, denies itself nourishment, and takes off the edge of hunger. I do not now remember an example of fasting, properly so called, before the time of Moses; he, Elijah, and the Saviour each fasted forty days. These were miraculous fasts. But the Old Testament Scriptures abound with accounts of fastings. When Benjamin destroyed of the children of Israel in two days fighting about 40,000, the children of Israel wept and sat before the Lord, and fasted that day, &c. After Israel under Samuel's administration put away Baalim and Ashtaroth, and served the Lord only, they fasted that day. When the valiant men had buried the bones of Saul they fasted seven days. David and the men that were with him, when they heard of the death of Saul and Jonathan, mourned, and wept, and fasted until evening. David besought God for his sick child, fasted and lay all night upon the earth. When Ahab heard the denunciations of God by Elijah against him for his dreadful wickedness, &c., he rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his flesh, and fasted, &c. And so I might continue citations; but let these suffice.

In all these cases the people fasted when they were in trouble and sore distress. I do not now remember an instance of fasting, but in times of affliction and sorrow. In cases where the heart was humbled, the Lord blessed the fasting mourner. But the prophet said, "Wherefore have we fasted, say they, and thou seest not? wherefore have we afflicted our soul, and thou takest no knowledge?" The Lord answers and tells them why: "Behold, in the day of your fast ye find pleasure, and exact all your labors. Behold, ye fast for strife and debate, and to smite with the fist of wickedness: ye shall not fast as ye do this day, to make your voice to be heard on high. Is it such a fast that I have chosen? a day for a man to afflict his soul? Is it to bow down his head as a bulrush, and to spreadsack cloth and ashes under him? Wilt thou call this a fast, and an acceptable day to the Lord?" It would appear that these fasted for the sake of form only; that is, had stated days and set times to fast, that is, to abstain from food, whether there was sorrow of soul or not. And so, it appears, the hypocrites fasted in the days of the Saviour. But God here tells them what the effect of a godly fast is. "Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? where thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?" Isaiah 58: 3-7. I hold that if the mind and spirit to do all this are formed in the soul, abstinence from food is not necessary to bring it into exercise.

It does not appear by our Savior's practice or commands, that he instituted any particular fasts to be observed by his disciples. But when the Pharisees in the way of reproach told him, that his disciples did not fast as often as theirs or John the Baptist's, "He said unto them, Can ye make the children of the bride-chamber fast, while the bridegroom is with them? But the days will come when the bridegroom shall be taken away from them, and then shall they fast in those days" Luke 5: 34, 35. I feel well assured, in my own mind, that an enforced abstinence from food will profit nothing, but rather tends to evil. A healthy man, feeling no trouble or sorrow of soul, purposely deprived of food when the cravings of nature demand it, becomes peevish, fretful, and cross. The lives of the apostles and first believers were lives of self-denial, sufferings and fastings. The bridegroom was taken from them, and they fasted. So may we in times of sufferings, of sorrows and regrets over our own depraved natures, &c., fast with profit; but we ourselves must know these seasons and adapt ourselves to them. There is no law to enforce it. We may (and some of us certainly do) recommend it, and the serious ones may get themselves into a proper state of mind to abstain from food with profit; for, fasting is confirmed by our Saviour's discourse on the mount, not a stated, but an occasional duty of Christians humbling their souls because of their sins, or when under the afflicting hand of God, &c., &c.

FEET WASHING.—A sister writes in connection with the fasting question: "My husband differs a little with the Brethren. He thinks when brethren travel preaching, and stop, tired and fatigued, over night with the brethren, then should there be water brought, and wash their feet as was done in olden times, &c."

Dear sister, in reply to this question, as you put it, "I wish to know your mind on it," I can only say, that while it was a custom with the ancients to do so, I nowhere find that it was a law that it should be so done. From their mode and manner of living, walking bare foot, and with sandals, on all roads and in all weather, such an act of hospitality was proper, and, no doubt, often necessary. Our manner and mode of life has obviated this necessity. But should a ministering brother come to your house to remain over night, or otherwise, and your husband should feel overwhelmed with love to him, and the blessed truths he declares, and to manifest his love by bringing water and washing the brother's feet; or you, the sisters, while there is no law to impose the act upon you, there is none to forbid you doing it; and if you do it, you have the ancient Bible worthies, and our own dear primitive brethren to sustain you. By tradition I know that one hundred years ago, and less, my grandfather used so to treat the ministering brethren; and my grandmother, the wives' the sisters' when they came to their home. One time the act was performed upon me by the good old brother with whom I lodged, as well as all the brethren present at the time. The sister, the brother's wife, performed the same services to the sisters present.

Now dear brethren and sisters, I have disposed of your question as best I could; and as you requested me to answer through the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, I send it to its editors for inspection; and if they think its publication will stir up controversialists, to consign it to the waste basket at once, and I will ever be grateful, as I hate controversy.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

The Priest.

BY JOSEPH MYERS.

"For the priesthood being changed, there is of necessity a change also in the law." Hebrews 7: 12.

In No. 11 of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, brother C. F. DeWeller in his comments on an article headed "Be ye Holy," says, "When I was received into the church of the Brethren, I was informed that the professed discipline of faith and practice among the Brethren is the New Testament. This is exactly my case, and I believe so yet. I agree with brother DeWeller from beginning to end in his article. Now it is evident that in this case of the priest we and the brethren that instructed us at the time when we were received into the church would differ with brother Saylor. And since we are to be of one mind and speak the same thing, it is further evident that we cannot all be right. Therefore I think it becomes our duty to give a reason of the hope that is in us, with meekness and love.

In the first place I will give for my reason the words at the head of this article, as touching the priest.

Next, Paul says, "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." Rom. 10: 4. Again, "Therefore the law was our school-master to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after faith is come we are no more under a school-master." Gal. 3: 24, 25.

Again, in speaking of meat and drink, and holy days, and new moons, and Sabbath days, he says, "Which are a shadow of things to come, but the body is in Christ." Col. 2: 16, 17. Again the apostle says, "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel. In that he says a new covenant, he has made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away. These are only a few of the passages which might be quoted to prove that we are no more under the law, but under the gospel.

When the question was brought to Jerusalem whether the Gentiles should keep the law of Moses, all that was demanded of them, deduced from the law, were these necessary things: "To abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication." Nothing about the priest, or the full beard. Brother Saylor says shaving was a heathen practice. These Gentile converts were heathens. Why not tell them they must wear a full beard. I find no fault with the brethren wearing their beard as described in Lev. 19: 27, "Thou shalt not mar the corners of thy beard"—In the German Bible, "Ihr sollt euer Haar am Haupte nicht rund umher abschneiden; noch euren Bart gar abschneiden." By this we understand, and the Brethren fifty years ago understood, that the Israelites were commanded to cut their beards not quite all or entirely off. But now it has got to be the fashion among those which we would class with the heathens, or Gentiles, to wear a full beard, or mustache, as they call it. When this fashion was first got up, some who would justify themselves in it, I heard say it was good for sore eyes, and now, finally, some make it out to be a Christian duty. I think the most of us believe that were it not for the fashion, but few of our young brethren would wear a full beard, and even some of our old ones are obediently bowing to the goddess of fashion, and by so doing are more likely to take a "sip from the golden cup" of the lady Fashion than our old brethren which adhere to the old order of shearing off or shaving as much of their beard as is opposed to decency and cleanliness, and for this are stigmatized and charged for taking a sip from the golden cup of the great whore, the mother of harlots: a very hard expression against our dear old brethren who have gone before us. But we will try to bear with those that see proper to make use of the language. I believe that holiness has its seat in the heart, and the fruits thereof are faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity; if we do these things we shall never fall.

If I thought that the priest with his full beard and the marrying a virgin had anything to do with holiness, I should think the holy garment ought not to be overlooked with his linen breeches and the whole dress in full. But the priesthood being changed, there is of necessity a change also in the law.

For The Young.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Botany--No. 3.

The parts of a plant as every reader very well knows, are the root, stem and leaves; and each part has its own peculiar office and part to perform. The root takes up the sap, which is nothing more than water; and after it has passed to the leaves, it returns and is built into the body of the tree or plant.

But a very curious change has taken place at the leaves. The air all around us is composed mainly of a gas called oxygen; and every time we breathe a large portion of this gas is taken up by the blood, and is what gives it its color. At the same time another gas is thrown off by the lungs, and its name is carbonic acid. This carbonic acid is very poisonous, and is what causes the death of those whose business leads them to go down to the bottom of old wells, whether it has sunk through the air; for although we cannot see it, it is heavier than air, and is certain death to those who breathe it.

Now the life-giving oxygen that keeps us all alive, and also every animal, bird, fish, and everything else that can move of itself, is the very gas that the lungs of the plant throw off, and can not use. The leaves, which are full of pores or breathing holes, which I have called lungs, throw off this oxygen, and take up what is poison to us, the carbonic acid I spoke of. Thus you see there is a balance of forces, if you understand what I mean, that is, plants and animals using the one what the other leaves, one taking the fat and the other the lean, (which is unscientific enough to suit even the editor, who has said I must put things plainly.) This is universally true of all plants, except when in flower, when the blooms give off carbonic acid gas. Plants are beneficial in a house except when they bloom: then they are not so, although all the poison a few flowers give off will hurt nothing. In another paper we will discuss what is done with the carbon the sap takes up.

Now for a question for all of you: Does a tree grow up, or not? For instance, if it is just ten feet from the ground up to the lower side of a limb of a tree, after the tree has grown for ten or twenty years will that limb be closer or farther from the ground, or will it be just ten feet? and, my dear young friends, Why? One of the greatest things in this world, is to be able to tell the why for what is going on around us. So always look up the why of everything. You and the "old folks" can talk this over and endeavor to settle it among yourselves. I am not going to tell in the paper, but if you disagree about it and write to me, I will make it clear to you. Some years ago the papers were full of arguments about this matter, and some very funny things were written by men who did not hunt down the why or observe closely.

Some plants have no roots of their own, but live on other plants. They are called parasitic plants; that is, hangers on to others. The commonest one I happen to think of is a yellow vining mass of tangled stems about as thick as a straw and found in fence corners on elder bushes. It is called dodder, and—I hardly know about it but will risk trying you—its scientific name is cuscuta.

Work.

What consistent people Americans are. Continually bellowing about the dignity of labor, equal rights and honorable toil, and all time showing by actions that they do not believe a word of their own buncombe. Nine-tenths of them think that if they were not obliged to work they would be happy, and they are looking and hoping for a time when they will enjoy this happiness. They think, and sometimes say, that, if they were only as rich as this, that, or the other man, they would not work as he does; just as though they were slaves now, working because compelled to. It is very doubtful whether these same persons would do very much less if they were what they now call rich; it is a question whether they could enjoy themselves without something that would busy either head or hands, or both, especially those who have been brought up to work, who have worked all their lives, and who of all others think a life of idleness necessarily one of happiness.

One is going to work till he gets a certain amount of money; another till an education is acquired; another till this or that object is gained, and then they are all going to be happy; forgetting or rather ignoring the fact that our wants increase as the square of our means, that no man ever yet found himself possessed of "an education;" what he has learned seeming to him only the rudiments of what he sees to learn, and that this or that object gained only creates as great a desire for something else.

We know with our heads that these things are true, but we cannot believe them with our hearts. Others who have found them so, tell us their experience, but we think ours will be different. Sometimes, though, we are fully convinced that this testimony is true, that our heads were right and our hearts wrong, and there is a very critical period. If this knowledge takes away the stimulus to all our effort, better indeed to have kept up the old illusion, but if it teaches us to make every day as near as possible like our model future, then happy are we. These desire were given us as springs of actions, and it is the acting that we are to enjoy in this world, while using it as a means given of God to prepare us for that other, the glory of which, eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man.

"Tis being and doing and having that make All the pleasures and pains of which beings partake,
To be what God pleases, to do a man's best,
And to have a good heart is the way to be blessed."
—Selected.

A Child's Faith.

In the highlands of Scotland there is a mountain gorge twenty feet in width, and two hundred feet in depth. Its perpendicular walls are bare of vegetation, save the crevices, in which grow numerous wild flowers of rare beauty. Desirous of obtaining specimens of these mountain beauties, some scientific tourists once offered a bigblaud boy a handsome gift if he would consent to be lowered down the cliff by a rope, and would gather a little basket full of them. The boy looked wistfully at the money, for his parents were poor, but when he gazed at the yawning chasm he shuddered, shrank back, and declined; but filial love was strong within him, and after another glance at the gift and at the terrible fissure, his heart grew strong, his eye flashed, and he said, "I will go if my father will hold the rope." And then with unshrinking nerves, and heart firmly strong, he suffered his father to put the rope about him lower him into the wild abyss and to suspend him there while he filled his basket with the coveted flowers. It was a daring deed, but the faith in the strength of his father's arm, and the love of his father's heart gave him courage and power to perform it.—Sel.

No man can safely go abroad that does not love to stay at home; no man can safely speak that does not willingly hold his tongue; no man can safely govern that would not cheerfully become a subject; no man can safely command that has not truly learned to obey; and no man can safely rejoice but he that has the testimony of a good conscience.

—"UNDER her wings." It is nature that teacheth a wise man in fear to hide himself. But grace and faith doth teach him where. Where should the frightened child hide his head but in the bosom of his loving father? Where a Christian but under the shadow of the wings of Christ, his Saviour?

MANY of us have to lament not so much a want of opportunities in life as our unreadiness for them as they come, and "it might have been" is oftener the language of our hearts than complaining words. God sends us "flax," but our "spindle and distaff" are out of repair.

RULES FOR AGENTS.

1. At the head of every letter give the name of your own post-office, county and State; and the date on which it is written.
2. Write the name and give the full address of every subscriber you send, as legibly as you can.
3. Write "New" before the names of all new subscribers.
4. In ordering a change of address, give the post-office, county, and State, to which the paper is sent, as well as the post-office, county, and State to which it is to be sent.
5. Do not mix up different items of business; but take up and finish one item before you take up another.
6. Write items intended for publication on a separate slip.
7. Make every lawful effort to obtain subscribers, and to do good in whatever way you can.
8. Send money by drafts, post-office money orders, or registered letters.
9. Observe the above rules, and you will expedite business, save us from much trouble, and yourselves and our subscribers from disappointments and vexation.

THE MISSION OF THE CHURCH.

"As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world." John 17: 18. So said our Lord when praying for his disciples. The point of resemblance between his disciples and himself did not consist alone in the idea that they were both sent, though they were alike in this respect;—the Father sent the Son, and the Son sent his disciples. But another point of resemblance more striking, and very suggestive of practical thoughts to believers, is seen in the circumstances that their mission into the world had the same object in view, namely, the reformation of the world. Christ came to do that which was necessary in order that men could repent, as his commission to his apostles containing the following words, implies: "Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. And ye are witnesses of these things." Luke 24: 46-48. And the apostles "went out, and preached that men should repent," Mark 6: 12. Here we perceive the similarity between the preaching and work of Christ, and the preaching and work of his apostles.

The church is represented, and declared to be the body of Christ, by Paul, who, in speaking of his afflictions and the motive which led him to endure them, says, "for his body's sake, which is the church." Col. 1: 24. And in addressing believers he says, "for we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones." Eph. 6: 30. It is true, he declares the close union of believers with Christ, to be a mystery, Eph. 6: 32, and so it surely is in some respects, and though we cannot understand much pertaining our to bodies and the laws of their organization, there are some things in regard to the union between believers and Christ that we can understand, as there are some things in our natural lives we can understand, though life itself may be a mystery.

In regard to the union between believers and Christ which constitutes them his body, we know that Christians are in sympathy with Christ, in his deep and anxious concern for the salvation of souls, and for the promotion of the glory and honor of God; that he is likewise in sympathy with them in all their troubles and sufferings, for he is touched with the feelings of our infirmities, and was in all points tempted like as we are. Heb. 4: 15; that they both are actuated by the impulses of the same spirit and same mind. The church which is the body of Christ, is in some respects the vicegerent of Christ, his substitute on earth, to which he delegates power to act in his stead, and to transact business for him, in the redemptive affairs of the world.

Such being the character of the church and the relation it sustains to both Christ and the world, the position it occupies is one of vast responsibility and power. And every individual member of the church shares in that responsibility and power. The church is made up of individuals; and these individuals in the aggregate constitute the church or body of Christ. The members of the church have not been redeemed and organized into a body merely for their own salvation and edification. Neither was it designed to be no more than the depository and protector of the truth. The church may be sound in doctrine, and the members constituting it at peace among themselves, and yet it may not by any means be filling the commission, or doing the great work committed to its trust. Soundness of doctrine, peace, and fraternal love are desirable in every branch of the church, and should be sought for with diligence perseverance and self-denial. But these are not to be sought as an end merely, but also as a means for the accomplishing of something else. The church is the "salt of the earth," and "the light of the world." The heathen have been given to our Redeemer for an inheritance, and the utmost parts of the earth for his possession. Ps. 2: 8. But the world that he came to redeem, was "sold under sin." "The wickedness of man was great in the earth, and every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." Gen. 6: 5. And his wretchedness and misery were commensurate with his guilt. The groans of misery, the sighs of sorrow, the agonies of death, the ills of poverty, the deceitfulness of riches, social troubles, civil wrongs and oppression, wounded spirits and bleeding hearts, were some of the numerous evils inflicted upon the human family by sin. To save such a mass of morally diseased, and perishing humanity, by an application of the redemptive blessings of Christ, is the great mission of the church. And it is a glorious mission. Its conquests are deathless spirits taken from the broad road which leads to ruin, and transferred to the Kings highway of holiness, by which they "shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads."

Oh if the members of the church more fully appreciated the greatness of their work, estimated by the value of souls it is commissioned to serve, and by the joy that the salvation of sinners produces in heaven, and especially that afforded to our Redeemer, who in seeing the travail of his soul is satisfied. Isai. 53: 11, they would surely act with more consistency, and would do more for Christ and less for self, and more for the church and less for the world; they would be more liberal in their contributions to promote the church's extension, and more fervent and importunate in their prayers for its success. And why not appreciate the work in all its magnitude? Has it not been opened to our understandings and pressed upon our consideration with a clearness and force which leave us without an excuse for being ignorant of the work that we as members of the church of Christ are to perform? Among the last communications he made to his disciples, was the following: "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." Acts 1: 8. Christians are to be witnesses for Christ,—to the purity of his doctrine, and to the holiness of character which it forms. And hence the Savior prayed for the union of believers as follows: "That they all may be one, as thou Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." John xvii. 21. From this it seems that the success of the work of Christians would be promoted by their union. Their important relation to the work of Christ is clearly implied.

The estimate we put upon our own salvation, will also enable us to estimate the importance of the work we are called to perform in our labors to save others.—And that estimate will be very high, if we have the assurance of salvation, after we have the terrors of an awakened conscience. The salvation of every human being is of equal importance to that of ourselves. In this great work every Christian is not only permitted to do something, but required to do it. None is so young, none so poor, none so weak but that he can do something, and what he can do he will be held responsible for. Then let every one carefully and anxiously examine what he can do in the great work of rescuing a guilty world from the misery of the fall, and when he has ascertained this, let him "do it as unto the Lord," and great will be his reward in heaven.

Querists' Department.

Does the Bible justify a brother minister to assume the title of Rev.? and can we call a minister Rev. and not commit sin?
NOAH LONGANECKER.

Answer.—It is somewhat doubtful whether the Bible justifies the application of the term reverend to ministers of the gospel.

1. It is nowhere in the Bible applied to them.

2. We have various other names applied to them, such as teachers, preachers, ministers, evangelists, elders, bishops, &c. These are all terms expressive of the nature of the work and office of the Christian minister, and not of honor.

3. We believe there is no term of honor applied to ministers in the New Testament, by divine authority. And as reverend is a term expressive of respect or honor, the application of it by ministers to themselves or to one another, is of doubtful propriety.

4. The following words of our Lord would seem to be against it: "Be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren.—And call no man your father upon the earth: for one is your Father which is in heaven. Neither be ye called masters: for one is your Master, even Christ." Matth. xxiii. 8–10. The prohibitory precept contained in the above language of our Lord, forbidding his disciples to accept titles of honor to themselves, would probably not allow the term "reverend" to be accepted by his ministers. The highest of titles is "Servus Servorum Dei," Steward of the servants of God. Hence the Apostle Paul frequently calls himself "the servant of Jesus Christ."

But we would not say that we would commit sin by applying the word reverend to ministers of the gospel. Webster defines it to mean, worthy of reverence; entitled to respect mingled with fear and affection. It has been applied to the aged and to those who have been called to fill important offices in government, and not always applied to ecclesiastical offices. The apostle directs the wife to "reverence her husband." Eph. v. 33.—So it seems that reverence is due to husbands from their wives. And if it is due from wives to husbands, it is due from the people to the ministers of Christ, if they are faithful to their holy calling.—But, although they may be worthy of reverence, it is not advisable, as it is not in accordance with the humble spirit of religion of which they are ministers, to assume the title of reverend, even if it is not sinful to apply it to them. It is said that Diogenes in rags was prouder than Plato in robes, so many without any titles, may be prouder than others with many. It is the spirit of vanity that seeks the honor of man, that is to be guarded against, and the spirit of self-abasement that is to be possessed not only by ministers of the gospel, but by all Christians.

Brother James:

What does the apostle mean when he says, "Owe no man anything?" Rom. xiii. 8, first clause. Please give an explanation through the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
MICHAEL HOFF.

The meaning of the apostle probably is that we should defraud no person of what we owe him. If we borrow money of a person or go in debt for some article we purchase, whenever the time arrives for the payment we should pay it or have an understanding with the creditor and obtain his consent to extend the time. If the creditor wants the money when it is due, we should make every effort we possibly can make to pay it; and if we do not make such efforts, and the debt is not paid, we commit sin. If a debt is contracted for a certain length of time, it is no violation of the apostle's command, provided measures are taken to have it paid when it becomes due.

It is very wrong to withhold from our creditors what is theirs and what we promised them, and to apply it to the promotion of our own interests and enjoyments. "The wicked borroweth, and payeth not again." Psa. xxxvii. 21. But Christians should "owe no man anything." The following remark of Henry upon the language of the apostle under consideration, is very true: "Many that are very sensible of the trouble, think very little of the sin of being in debt."

There is another application of the precept, "owe no man anything;" we think should be made. It is this: All persons should keep out of debt as much as possible. There is much truth in Solomon's proverb, "The borrower is servant to the lender." Prov. xxii. 7. Pecuniary embarrassments are a source of annoyance, and they weaken the mind, and hinder progress, and expose to temptations and many troubles.

Brother James:

Please answer the following query through your worthy paper. Have the bishops of Pennsylvania or Virginia a right to install a bishop into office in other States, or wherever called for, if the church in which the bishop is wanted has never been represented?

A DEACON.

Answer.—The above query is not as plain as it is desirable it should be. When in the case alluded to, it is intimated that the church was not represented, we should like to have known in what respect it was not represented. Perhaps not represented at the District Meeting, nor through the District Meeting at Annual Meeting. Every church should be represented at the District Meeting in which it exists. But should it not be, that circumstance in itself would not necessarily hinder it from being recognized as a branch of the brotherhood.

The bishops from one state should not go into another state and ordain a bishop without consulting the bishops of the churches that are nearest to the one that needs and desires a bishop. But if the bishops of the nearest churches would approve of an ordination in the church desiring a bishop, and would commit the matter to the bishops from another state, in that case, we presume they might perform ordination.

We presume the above course as a general rule should be observed. But a church might be connected with peculiar circumstances, which might change the manner of proceeding somewhat. In such cases it is necessary to know the condition and circumstances of a church, to give a satisfactory answer.

FIRE AT SOMERSET.

Only a few years ago the best portion of Somerset, our county seat, was burned. On Thursday, the 4th inst., in the afternoon, it was the scene of another fearful conflagration. At this writing we have not been able to learn the particulars; but we are credibly informed that there were twenty dwellings and business houses burned; some of which were fine buildings, erected since the former fire. Besides these there were several stables and other buildings of minor importance consumed. The loss is heavy, amounting to several hundred thousand dollars, besides the inconvenience and suffering which usually attend such cases. We hope they will have such aid afforded as may be necessary to prevent actual suffering. B.

Gleanings and Gottings.

A brother in the south requests us to "tell brother U. M. Beachly and that other brother (Bro Jos, Fahnestock, Covington, Ohio), who sent us the copies of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, that the papers have already produced some fruit." We take this way of complying with his request. B.

We have a letter from brother D. P. Saylor, dated April 29th, in which he briefly sketches a three weeks' tour among the brethren in Yellow Creek, Clover Creek and James' Creek congregations, the first in Bedford Co., the second in Blair Co., and the third in Huntingdon county, Pa. He says: "I preached 29 times; installed and laid on hands in the ordination of two elders—Leonard Furry and Daniel Snowberger; conducted the election of John L. Holsinger to the ministry, and installed him into the first degree; conducted the election of two deacons and installed them into office, I was alone on the trip and the labors fell fast and heavy upon me. I was transported over the country and my efforts not concentrated, excepting in the vicinity of New Enterprise (Bedford Co.), where four very substantial persons,—three men and one woman,—were baptized. The brethren saw their mistake in not concentrating the effort, and promised themselves to do better the next time. . . . I am in my usual good health." B.

BROTHER W. B. Woodard of Vinton, Iowa, says:

"My heart has been in sympathy with the 'Poor Fund' ever since its birth; but every time I looked at my purse it gave me an excuse; but recently it has been removed, and I now enclose one dollar fifty cents for the 'Poor Fund,' and may God open the hearts of more to do likewise. It would be strange if two hundred brethren could not be found in the brotherhood who are able and willing to do the same. Let those that are not so able give what they can, remembering that the mite is often more acceptable with God."

A sister at White Hall, Pa., who is interested in missionary work says:

"We rejoice in the good work which the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN is doing. It is arousing many who have been long sleeping in regard to missionary work. Can any one read brother Hope's letter in No. 16 without tears, with prayerful sympathy in his sore afflictions privations and sufferings? Oh! brethren and sisters, think of it, and let us be more in earnest in rendering him all the assistance we can to aid him in his missionary work. Enclosed you will find one dollar for the Danish fund."

BRO. L. E. Prickett of Newtonia, Mo., says:

"As I have not seen any funds from this part of the church, or from any brethren here, we will cast in our mite; perhaps it will encourage others in these parts to do something for the poor, or for the Danish cause, or for the Stein fund. As I believe them all to be good works, I enclose 25 cents for each, for myself and my wife." He adds: "We have beautiful weather at this time. The crops look well. Since the winter set in, there have been seven young souls made willing to take up the cross and follow Christ."

BRO. B. F. Moomaw sends us the following under date of April 28th:

"You remember from the sketch of my visit to North Carolina, that the brethren thought there was an awakening. I received late intelligence from them informing me that there had since been four additions to the church; and that there is still quite an interest, and large attendance at their meetings. May the good Lord continue to bless their labors and to add to the church such as shall be saved.

Since my return from Carolina I made a tour into Old Va., 50 miles east; had several meetings; formed some interesting acquaintances, and had the assurance that some were awakened to the resolution to seek for the old paths and to walk in them. The winter seems now to be past, and spring has set in, with all its beauty and cheerfulness, to gladden the hearts and arouse the energy of the husbandman. Nearly all the fruits, however, such as pears, peaches, and sweet cherries, were destroyed by the late freeze. On the morning of the 18th inst., the mercury was 8° below freezing point. There will be plenty of apples yet and also sour cherries. The prospect for a wheat crop is as good as ever we have had in this country. Other vegetation is doing finely. We are having warm weather and refreshing rains. The health of our country is now tolerably good; but during the winter and early spring there was much sickness and a number of deaths, especially among persons advanced in age."

FOR want of space in the proper department the following items of correspondence are here inserted.

Correspondence.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood.

UNION CENTER, Elk Co., Kan., }

Brother Quinter:

By your permission I will drop a few lines for the ever-welcome PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, which comes regularly, laden with good news of such variety as to present nearly all classes of readers with something that they love to read, and those that are not suited are those that have little or no relish for the truth of God. Our little church, away down here in southern Kansas is in good spirits and increasing in faith, and, we believe, in love toward God and man. Our strength in laborers, has been quite insufficient, until recently. Brother John Clingenpeel has located with us; and some two months ago an election was held which resulted in the choice of brother J. C. Ulrey to the ministry, and brethren Conrad Sholl and Leander Bolinger to the office of deacon. These are worthy brethren, and we have great hope that they will adorn their profession and office in such a way that through them good may be done to the glory of God. We have had some twenty additions during the past year, and quite fair prospects ahead. With four speakers and other helpers, with our trust in God and his Spirit, we hope to labor together for the good of souls.

I wish, by your permission, to say a word to brethren who are inquiring after this country. There are a number of us that are receiving letters of inquiry—more than we think we are justified in answering because of time and expense (an occasional brother thinks of the necessary stamp, and such are answered). I propose in the course of a week or two, to write out a full description of this country for the brethren's papers and call the attention of those interested to the fact that it is an imposition upon our editors to advertise without some compensation, and hope the readers will compensate the editors for the publishing of the foregoing article.

In love, E. SMICK.

The Old Home.

The word home probably is dear to all, and many a heart is made sad as thoughts steal over the mind of the home of our youth. The play-ground of our childhood, the fire side of our parents, the pleasant association of brothers and sisters in bygone days, all appear to tell us that time is swiftly passing away, and that the time and place that now know us will soon know us no more forever.—The dashing rain, the howling wind, the darkness of this night, tell us no pleasing story of earthly joys, as we are silently meditating upon our sadness of one year ago to-night, as we returned to our old home after following the remains of our dear old mother to their resting-place 'neath the clouds of the valley, where we placed them beside the body of our dear father, there to await the resurrection morn.

The old home, where I had grown from childhood to manhood, that twenty-seven years before had been the happy home of nine, was now desolated till I alone of that number was left to call it home. Here I had heard the merry laugh of brothers that are now slumbering beneath the dust. Here I have heard the happy songs of loving sisters mingling their voices together as I shall never hear them more. Here I have heard the sobs of wounded hearts around the death-bed of loved ones as they were about leaving the shore of mortality. Here I was first taught to love my Savior in sweet words of consolation that fell from my mother's lips. But amid these thoughts my heart is made to rejoice in the happy prospect of immortal glory.—Within these walls was the gospel first preached in its simplicity and purity in this part of God's moral vineyard among the savage tribes of the western wilds; but the little vine that was planted here has suffered much from the storms of persecution; yet most of its branches still survive and are reaching forth their twining tendrils that they may ascend higher upon the tree of heavenly wisdom, that they may enjoy more of the shining rays of God's infinite love, have bowed in the depths of humility, that they might drink deep of the waters of the living fountain. Oh! that we knew how to persuade others to stoop to drink of this living water. Christ is that fountain, and is ready and willing to give to all that will come and drink.

Dear reader, you that are out of the ark of safety, to you he is saying, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest;" rest for the soul in the Paradise of God, the home is the blessed; a home not such as our earthly homes, but where all is joy and serene. May we ask you to accept of that home where sorrows will never come?—No sickness, no pain, no death, no bitter tears shall be shed over the graves of departed ones. No separation of friends will be known there. There long-parted friend shall meet again. There the mother will realize that God heard her prayer when upon earth, as she strikes glad hands with her darling on the other shore to sing the song of redemption.—Oh! that we could all exclaim,

"Redeeming love is now my theme,
And snail be till I die!"

Who would want to exchange such a place as this for the whole world? then how much less for a few sinful pleasures of the world. Young man, young woman; "procrastination is the thief of time;" put not off your return to God. To day you have the promise, to-morrow may be none of thine. My heart, with the hearts of many others, is full of sympathy for you, but for the present I must bid you good night.

Death of Bertie Skinner.

The little boy took sick on Sunday, the 23rd of April, and died on Monday, aged 8 years, 11 months and 18 days. Remarkable were the speech hand actions of this beloved boy. Children of ten bring us to consider our ways that we may be ready also to go when God will call us.—It will long be remembered by those who were with him during his sickness and death. Young as was Bertie, and aware, as will be seen, of the approach of that monster who is dreaded by all, he gave directions for the disposal of his books and boots, also of himself, with a self-possession that few of more mature years can equal. Truly it was a house of mourning, bringing tears and sobs to men of the strongest nerve, while Bertie remained as composed as a little soldier, telling all not to feel troubled for him, as all was well—"The Lord is with me."—As the disease was fast pulling him down, and while resting in the arms of his aunt, he looked up and said, "I am going to die. I knew I was last night. Mide, remember this." Looking toward his father, he said, "Good-bye, Pa, you have always been good to me;" then to his mother, "Good-bye, Ma, you have been good to me." He also said the same to his aunt Mide; his little sister in her turn, receiving the same kind words. He kissed every one in the room, as he called them one by one to his bedside, and would not receive a kiss on the cheek, but mouth to mouth. Looking around the room for his uncle Wells, and not seeing him, he asked for Leander, saying that he wanted to bid him good-bye.—He was told that he had gone after medicine for him. His aunt told him Leander must come to him. He said it would be a long time, but he was back in time to receive his kiss and good-bye. Turning his eyes toward Mr. Young he said, "Good-bye, Benjie." He bade good-bye to all present; also to his friends he could not see a good-bye from him must be given, and a request to all to turn and meet him in heaven. His books and boots he gave to Bertie Young. These two little boys were intimate friends for children as they were. From this we may learn a lesson to love our brethren and sisters; for the word of inspiration says, "He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?"

Next came directions in regard to himself. "I want Mr. Winterbourn to preach my funeral sermon. Have the funeral in Young's school-house. Bury me at Rossville; then when you go to the store you can stop and see my grave. Put a gravel walk around it, and a picket fence around my grave. Plant flowers on my grave every spring. Mr. and Mrs. Young will lay me out. Aunt Mide will comb my hair. Leander and Benjie, I want you to get my coffin made, and get a raised lid. Mide, I am getting weaker. Willis, how is my pulse? Mother, put your hand upon my heart and see if it beats. Keep me one day and bury me the next." His mother said, "Yes, Bertie, as long as we can." "No; keep me one day, and bury me the next. Tell every one to come to my funeral. When I get home, I am going to see a lot of little children." He was asked if he did not want to live. He smiled and said, "No; Mr. Young, will you pray with me?—When I am gone, pray for yourselves.—Tell everybody to pray. They will see so many good things if they live right, and do as the Lord has said." Then he said, "Help me to die, O God! help me to die, Lord!" With a smile on his face he closed his eyes in death.

Now let us take warning, that when God shall say time shall be no longer, we may have a hope in God, and with David of old say, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me, and thy rod and staff they comfort me." Christ said, "If a man love me, he will keep my words."

A Letter from Aged Brother.

With a solemn mind, to the honor of him who knows the secrets of my heart, I will undertake to write something that may, perhaps, be worthy of your notice. I am now in my 81st year, and my wife and I were received into the church in Virginia, Botetourt county, and am now here in Linn county, Oregon, as a member of the church where brethren David Brower and Daniel Leedy are the ministers. What I intend to write is, perhaps, too simple to be worthy of notice; but will write plainly, so that it can be understood.

I had my home in Albany, a brother Baltimore's, and there was a brother there that has not had the use of his legs for years, and his arms body and mind were good. I mentioned to him something in regard to calling the members of the church together to have, as might be said, a prayer-meeting, and I failed.—

Next morning was the Sabbath, and I went to see another brother, and I saw a brother going a different way; and I find myself guilty of not having done my duty, as I fear it is the case with too many of the brethren. God has given us a mind, a conscience, and when our hearts condemn us, will not God also condemn us? It is true, we can plead weakness, but there are not many that can plead ignorance. We well do know where there are appointed meetings once a month, within 30 miles that we could assemble ourselves together in fasting and prayer, to encourage one another, and build each other up in the most holy faith. We are here in Oregon, we might say, with but one speaker, that is, David Brower.—Daniel Leedy is going to California, is somewhat discouraged because there are no more meetings than once a month in the Willamette Valley, that is in Linn county.

Here in Oregon the harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few. I have lived in 4 States, and by experience I do know that people can make a living here with less labor than in any other State that I have been in. Land in Albany valley is from $40 to $60 per acre; but some of the farmers raise from 20 to 30 bushels per acre on the average. If some of the ministering brethren would come to Oregon, not full handed, it might be that the brethren would help them; for some of them are wealthy, having come here in an early day, when a man with a family got a section of land. I understand that there are so many ministers that the churches could spare a few to labor in the word for the cause of Christ, and for the prosperity of the church, for which I always was zealous, and contended for the faith once delivered to the saints, which binds us together as Brothers and sisters, heirs of that heavenly kingdom; and it is our duty to pray for each other, that God may enable us to perform the duties required of us, to have our minds and affections on things pertaining to our soul's salvation. As I before stated, the harvest is great and the laborers are few. I have seen men here of good report that said they did not know that there were such people on earth as the "Dunkards." I would then explain to them the meaning of the word. Many good meaning people are in the dark, not knowing which way to go; and it is our duty to preach to them and try to bring them to the light.

Unto us is committed the word of reconciliation, and we are to beseech all men to be reconciled to God, and to be brought into union with us. Christ came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

Now, dear brethren, we are the light of the world, and should not only continue at home in the churches, where we reside with our families; but we are commanded to teach all nations. Some of the States of America have never heard the gospel preached in its purity, that would gladly hear the word, and perhaps receive it; but if we only preach a sermon one day, and perhaps go away the next, it is like a seed planted and not cultivated.—Our savior says, "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness;" and we are commanded to feed the hungry with the bread of life that comes from heaven, and he saith, "My words, they are life and truth." It might be that some of the brethren are acquainted with some of my father's brothers, or some of their children. The family of the Zells was raised in Adams county, Pa. I was in Adams county, near Getysburg, in the year 1830, then a member of the church.

A BROTHER.

The Lord's Treasury.

Brother Quinter:—

I would like to say to the brethren, through the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, that they have commenced a good work in sending spiritual supplies to those who hunger and thirst after righteousness.—By the Penny call and the Poor Fund much good is done; but we have more to do. We, as a church, need a treasury, as there was one in Christ's time on earth, unto which we can cast our gifts for the Master's use, that we may lay up treasure in heaven, and finally receive a heavenly reward. In this way we can give something to the poor and needy, for while we are sending out spiritual food many need something more for this life. We have members in the church who have not clothes fit to wear to meeting, and who, if they do go, must walk, as they have no other way of getting there. Is it not too hard to bear all this? Brethren, can we suffer all this to be, and we be contented to live in our fine houses and go to meeting in our spring wagons, or fine carriages or buggies? Do we think of the poor? Are we not commanded to help the poor? If we have two coats to give one? Jesus says: "Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not unto me."

We must not think that we are good because we prosper in this world. The rich man, who would not give the crumbs that fell from his table, lifted up his eyes in hell. It is better to give than die rich. You who have something to give and do not, do you think that it will be all well with you in the last day? You must have treasure in heaven or the gates will be shut against you. Lend to the Lord and he will repay you.

I will now make a proposition for the church treasury. Needy Fund is the name I will give it. Let the Yearly Meeting discuss it, or fix it rather. My plan is for the committee to appoint a treasurer in each district of the church,—or one treasury in the brotherhood, if they think best,—and any one at any time can send his mite to the appointed treasurer, the same to be acknowledged in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. Let the deacons of each church see after the poor and determine the amount needed from the treasury, and report the amount drawn from the treasury, and for whom it is drawn, through the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. Let it be understood, if this is decided at the Yearly Meeting to be a rule, that the Needy Fund is for all the poor of the brotherhood, according to their wants. The deacons who draw the money for them can best decide this matter. I hope the brethren will not pass this by unheeded.

Yours in Christian love,

J. MEYERS.

Bainbridge, Ohio.

MOUND VALLEY, Labette Co., Kan.
Dear Brethren and Sisters, Greeting;

In perusing the pages of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, I find a good many letters from brethren and sisters in this State; but none from this county. I believe I am the only one in this county; I feel my isolation very sensibly, in being deprived of the society of the brethren and sisters. Oh, how I would be delighted to have the brethren call and see us; and preach for us! for we greatly need their admonitions. Truly the harvest is great, but the laborers are few. Brethren and sisters, pray the Lord of the harvest to send us more laborers, especially in this new county of ours.—There are many living around here who have never heard the brethren preach, and our church rules seem to be new to many of them, though they ought not to be to Bible readers. But how can we hear without a preacher? or how can they understand except some man guide them?

I hope ere long we may have the pleasure of hearing the brethren preach in our neighborhood, and much lasting good be done by having the gospel preached in its purity. I am living with my sister, Mrs. George Kiles, 16 miles west of Parsons, and the same distance east of Independence, 7 miles east of the L. L. and G. railroad. Our nearest station is Cherryvale, six miles north-west of us. I desire the prayers of the church.

Your unworthy sister,

LOVINA SMITH.

GLENWOOD, Cass Co., Neb., }
April 12th, 1876. }

Brother Quinter:

Please say in your valuable paper that we, the brethren here, need help, spiritually; in short, we want a preacher to preach for us. There are eleven members here and there within 14 miles around and we have no organization and no preacher. I have written to brother Henry Troxel, of Oakley, Macon county, Ill., and he says if I can Ily writing to your paper prevail on some one to buy him out, he will come and stay with us one season, and if he likes the country will locate permanently. Now, brethren, do devise some means to send more laborers into the west. What preachers are here are doing nobly. They are sacrificing home comforts, and going abroad, spreading the gospel of peace; but they cannot fill the calls. We have not had any preaching for nearly one year, and there are several here who would join the church if they had a chance. I am glad to see the brethren getting zealous in the missionary cause; for we need them here. There are plenty of people here that never heard of a "Dunkard." We have a good country here, and healthy. Now, brethren, come to the rescue, and buy brother Henry's farm, and let him come west and preach for us poor starving souls.

I would say if any other ministers contemplate coming west, or any brethren, if they will address me, I will give them all desired information.

Yours in the bonds of the gospel,
MOSES KEEFER.

Annual Meeting Notice.

I have made arrangements that those who are not conscientiously opposed to traveling on reduced fare can, in going to Annual Meeting, go and come for one and one fifth fare from the following places to Bloomington, Illinois. Those coming from the north will get these benefits from Chicago to Bloomington, on the C. and A. railroad. Those coming from the west can get these rates from Mexico, Mo., and Cedar City, Mo., via East St. Louis to Bloomington, Ill. It is expected that brother Moore will make similar arrangements over the I. B. and W. railroad to place of meeting at DeGraff, O. If so, it will be published.

JOHN BEECHLY.

Auburn, Ill., May 1, 1876.

Railroad Privileges.

WALKERTON, April 24th, 1876.

Brother Quinter:

Will you publish through your paper that I have made arrangement with the Baltimore and Ohio R. R. company for the benefit of the bre thren going to Annual Meeting from Chicago to Shelby, where it crosses the Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati and Indianapolis, road. Brethren that are coming from the west through Chicago will ask for Baltimore and Ohio railroad depot near Exposition Building not far from foot of Lake St. Trains leave Chicago at 8 a. m. and 5 p. m. Brethren will purchase tickets wherever they can get to the B. and O. railroad the handiest and ask no questions, and at the meeting they will be furnished with return tickets.

ZACHARIAH TROYER,
Walkerton, Ind.

MARRIAGES.

By the undersigned, at the residence of the bride's parents, March 8th, 1876, Mr. JAMES AT BARKLOW, of Coos county, Oregon, and sister FRANCINA LLEWELLEN, of the same place. SAMUEL S. BARKLOW.

On the 24th of April, 1876, at the residence of the bride's parents, by the undersigned, brother JOHN STEUBS, of Caldwell county, and SUSANNA E. WALTERS, of Gentry county, Mo. W. B. SEIL.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Berlin congregation, Somerset county, Pa., April 13th, 1876, brother JACOB COVER, aged 74 years, 9 months, and 13 days. The deceased was a worthy member of the church, and a respected citizen. He left a wife and several sons. The funeral services were performed in the Brethren's meeting-house of Berlin, at which place a large number of sympathizing friends assembled, by the EDITOR.

In the Conemaugh congregation, March 19th, 1876, ELIZABETH REFLOGIE, aged 75 years, 10 months and 7 days. Occasion improved from Matth. xxiv. 44, by the Brethren and the writer. WILLIAM BYARS.

In the Yellow Creek church, Elkhart county, Ind., sister EVE, wife of Elder David Y. Miller, aged 64 years, 2 months and 2 days. She leaves a husband and 13 children, 61 grandchildren, and 4 great-grandchildren to mourn their loss. She lived a devoted sister 45 years, and was much liked by her children and grandchildren, and all that knew her, and during the time she was a member, she never was complained of in the church. She was a plain and modest sister.

Oh, could we have all such, and we would have much light. She took sick on Monday night, March 6th, and died on the 12th. She was anointed on the 10th, and she suffered much with pain in her side. It was lung fever, or pneumonia. She bore her affliction with Christian fortitude. On Sunday about 4 o'clock, she said we should sing, as the time would pass away faster. So we sang a hymn and then she waded us to pray once more with her, and so we did, and while praying she said the German language "O my God, take me home," and in one minute breathed no more. She died as you would blow out a lamp. A few hours before this she called her children to her and admonished them of their duty to meet her in heaven, and then she called her husband, and told him to provide for the family, and take care of them and be kind to them, and to stand to his post in the church, and prepare to meet her in heaven. She was buried on the 15th of March. Funeral preached by brother John Stutzman in English, and elder John Stutzman in English, from Rev. xiv. 13, to a large congregation. Sister Miller was a sister of my first wife; her maiden name was Eve Banter.

JOHN KNISLEY.

In the Coquille congregation, Coos county, Oregon, March 13th, 1876, brother GEORGE W. REECE, aged, as near as known, about 64 years. He was sick about nine months, the most of the time bed-fast, and suffered much. He and his youngest daughter, about 10 years old, came from Kansas to this country about two years ago. His means were about exhausted when he got here, and consequently he was a church charge. He has many friends and relatives in the Atlantic States, but no relatives here, except his little daughter; but for their satisfaction I will say that he was cared for. Funeral services by the Brethren.

S. S. BARKLOW.

In the Coal Creek congregation, Fulton Co., Ill., brother JOHN MARKLEY, aged 83 years and some months. Funeral January 1st, 1876. Occasion improved by the writer, from Psalms xxxvii. 37.

Also, in the same congregation, April 6th, 1876, brother SPENCE, in the 73rd year of his age. The deceased lived here seven years ago from Pennsylvania, and had been a member of the Presbyterian church until 1873, when he and his wife united with the Brethren. Funeral occasion improved by the writer, from I Cor. xv. 22, 23, to an interested congregation.

SAMUEL TENNIS.

On the 16th of April 1876, in the Beaver Run congregation, Mineral county, W. Va., DAMARIS BISER, wife of brother Solomon Biser, aged 46 years, 2 months and 10 days. Disease, gastric fever. She was a consistent member of the church over 27 years. She leaves a husband, who is an elder in the church, and three children, two of whom are members of the church, together with a large number of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. Yet they sorrow not as those without hope. Funeral services by the writer and others, from Rev. xiv. 13, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

DANIEL B. ANOLD.

At Chest Creek, Clearfield county, Pa., April 1st, 1876, EMILY, daughter of brother T. F. and — Dunbar, aged 22 years, 9 months and 15 days. Disease, consumption. Occasion improved at the house on the 3rd by the undersigned from Rev. xiv. 13. MARK MINSER.

In the Queanabong congregation, Somerset county, Pa., April 10th, 1876, sister SARAH

BEAM, aged 25 years, 10 months and 23 days. Died April 11th. Funeral services by George Schrock, Daniel Walker, and the writer.

Xantippe.

It seems that the memory of this woman, like that of her renowned husband, is likely to be kept alive to the end of time. She is said to have possessed a very irritable temper, and her name has become a synonym for 'rixen,' or 'scold.' It is more than possible, however, that the judgment passed upon her by mankind has been too severe. A more charitable disposition would undoubtedly have discovered in her many good qualities, and have attributed her failings more to physical infirmities than to moral obliquity. — The party most intimately acquainted with her, and therefore best able to form a correct opinion, gives her credit for many domestic virtues. It is now known that many of the diseases to which women are subject, have a direct tendency to make them irritable, peevish, cross, morose, unreasonable, so that they chafe and fret over all those little ills and annoyances that a person in health would bear with composure. It is fair to infer that most of the tantrums of Xantippe were due to these causes alone: and could Socrates, as he returned from the Senate, the Gymnasium, or the Athenaeum, have stopped at Pestle & Mortar's Drug Store had carried home a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, now and then, no doubt he might have evaded many a "certain lecture," allayed many a "domestic broil," made it much pleasanter for the children, and more enjoyable for himself, and rescued his wife's name from the unenviable, world-wide and eternal notoriety it has attained. Thousands of women bless the day when Dr. Pierce's Favorite prescription was first made known to them. A single bottle often gives delicate and suffering women more relief than months of treatment from their family physician. In all those derangements causing backache, dragging-down sensations, nervous and general debility, it is a sovereign remedy. Its soothing and healing properties render it of the utmost value to ladies suffering from internal fever, congestion, inflammation, or ulceration, and its strengthening effects tend to correct displacements of internal parts, the result of weakness of natural supports. It is sold by all druggists.

FOLLOW THOU ME.

Have ye looked for sheep in the desert,
For those who have icised their way?
Have ye been in the wild, waste places,
Where the lost and the wandering stray?
Have ye trodden the lonely high way,
The foul and darksome street?
It may be ye'd see in the gloaming
The print of Christ's wounded feet.

Have you folded 'ome to your bosom
The trembling, neglected lamb,
And taught to the little lost one
The sound of the Shepherd's name?
Have ye searched for the poor and needy,
With no clothing, no home, no bread?
The Son of man was among them,
Who had no where to lay his head!

Have ye carried the living water
To the parched and thirsty soul?
Have ye said to the sick and wounded,
'Christ Jesus makes thee whole'?
Have ye told my fainting children
Of the strength of the Father's hand?
Have ye guided the tottering footsteps
To the shores of the "golden land"?

Have ye stood by the sad and weary,
To smooth the pillow of death,
To comfort the sorrow-stricken,
And strengthen the feeble faith?
And have ye felt when the glory
Has streamed through the open door,
And fitted across the shadows,
That I had been there before?

Have ye wept with the broken-hearted,
In their agony of woe?
Ye might hear me whisper beside you,
'Tis the path I often go.
My disciples, my brethren, my friends,
Can ye dare to follow me?
Then, Wherever the Master dwelleth,
There shall the servant be.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

An Important Question.

BY MATTIE A. LEAR.

"Then said one unto him, Lord are there few that be saved?" Luke 13: 23.

Christ in the days of his flesh had many questions addressed to him. Some he answered directly, and some of them indirectly. To the question at the head of this essay, he gives no direct answer. Why does he not? It would have been easy for him to have done so. He was perfectly familiar with the spirit world, and knew just who, and how many crossed the threshold of bliss, yet he refrains from disclosing the secrets of that world. May we not then conclude that the question was not altogether a proper one? From our Savior's answer we may also learn an important lesson. Many persons in their ignorance will presume to answer a question which the Son of God declined to answer. Much unnecessary time is often consumed in speculative theories with regard to the future world; as, for instance, such questions as these: "Shall we know our friends in heaven?" "What will be the condition of the heathen?" "Will any get there who have not obeyed the whole gospel?" or, in other words, "how far may a person venture to live in sin?" If only people would employ the same diligence in trying to obey every precept of the gospel, as they do in trying to find out how far it is safe to disobey, methinks there would be more saved. All such theorizing is unprofitable. "The secret things belong unto the Lord our God: but those things which are revealed belong unto us," (Deut. 29: 29); and surely all that is necessary to our salvation has been revealed. It behoves us in the transitory period which we have allotted to us in this life, to engage our attention, not with speculative theories, but with plainly revealed facts.

We will now try to consider our Savior's reply. "Strive to enter in at the strait gate." In this sentence we are taught that to gain heaven requires a struggle, an effort, a powerful contention with opposing elements. The candidate for immortal glory must be no sincere. Heaven is attainable to all, but it is barely attainable to any. It is placed within the reach of everyone, yet it requires the utmost diligence, the utmost efforts, of each to gain admittance there. Of the humblest it is only required that he do what he can, and this is required of the most giant-minded. Son, daughter, give me thy heart, is the demand which Christ makes of all, irrespective of difference in talent, in condition, or in influence.

The portal, or gate of heaven is called a strait gate. This implies narrowness, or difficulty of access. It may be entered, but it is entered with difficulty. Christ, in his sermon on the mount, commands his followers to enter in at the strait gate. The gate that leadeth to destruction is wide. One may pass through this gate and carry with him all his sins and all his pollutions; but the strait gate, the gate that leadeth to life eternal, will barely admit one to pass after he is divested of every encumbrance. Every one, no matter what may have been his moral character, or what may be his intellectual powers, or his position in the world, must be stripped of everything, and throw himself, helpless and undone, upon the merits of Christ alone. Christ demands of us a thorough annihilation of self, a thorough deadness to the world; for it is written, "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him.

It is not enough merely to inquire the way to heaven; it is not enough merely to search the Scriptures, and learn theoretically what they teach; we must not only know, we must do, for it is written, "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. 22: 14.

We must not only seek to enter, but we must strive to enter. We must first learn our duty, then put this knowledge into practice. We must lend all our energies, all our talents, to this one grand object, the attainment of eternal life. "Not every one," says our Savior, "that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Matth. 7: 21.

But why will not all be able to enter who seek to enter? The apostle says, "And if a man also strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully." 1 Tim. 2: 5. There is much striving, much labor under the name of Christianity, that is not according to the prescribed law of God. Such labor is perhaps what the apostle would call unlawful striving. Zeal in the cause of religion is not always a sure mark of true piety. Paul in speaking of the disobedient Jews, says, "For I bear them record, that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge." Rom. 10: 2. Again he says, "But it is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing." Gal. 4: 18. The head must be enlightened as well as the heart warmed, e'er we can have zeal that is according to knowledge. How often do we see persons who take a very active part in revival meetings, and who loudly proclaim their love for Jesus and their devotion to his cause, indulge in those things that are plainly forbidden in his revealed law, and ignore his commands. They refuse to enter the sheepfold by the divinely appointed door, but seek to climb up some other way. Such persons, if they persist in their disobedience, are doomed to a bitter disappointment; for though they will demand admittance, he will say unto them, "I know you not whence you are."

It follows, then, from the above scriptures, that we must not only strive to enter in at the strait gate, but we must strive lawfully, that is, according to the rules and regulations laid down in the Scriptures of eternal truth. In a carnal warfare, suppose each division, and each regiment, and each company, should, according to its own idea of the science of war, engage the enemy, what would be the result? Certainly discomfiture and utter ruin. One mind, the commander-in-chief, must control the entire energies of the war, and all the different divisions and departments must act in unison and harmony, to insure success. So in this great conflict in which the Christian soldier is engaged, there must be a perfect union and harmony of sentiment and action e'er the church will be able to fill her grand and noble destiny. Sectarian strife must cease, and all who love the name of Christ must give him their implicit confidence and ready obedience. They must cease to turn their weapons upon each other, and all unite, as one man, against the common foe. If the professed followers of Jesus had always acted thus wisely, if they had striven lawfully, no portion of our world would at this time be overshadowed by heathen darkness, ignorance, and superstition.

Kindness to Animals.

BY D. E. BRUBAKER.

A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast. Prov. 12: 10.

The reader, at first thought, may question the propriety of treating a subject of this class in the columns of a religious journal. It is granted that many other more important subjects claim our attention more frequently; but believing that the religion of Jesus Christ was designed to be of practical use, even in our common affairs of life, I feel that a few thoughts in behalf of the dumb brutes around us will not be out of place.

Of late I have had special sympathy drawn out toward the ever faithful servant of man—the horse, which has drawn out this article, which I hope may have the desired effect of correcting the abuse of the most noble of God's brute creation. I believe that, as a society of christian people, we have, in general, a good reputation for kindness to animals. But I am pained to know that there are a few (thanks that they are so few), that seemingly do not apply, practically, the sentiments of the above quoted saying of the wise man. In speaking of the abuse of horses, I have reference more to the careless and negligent (not to say sinful) manner in feeding and watering, over-driving, often, in inclement weather, then allowing to stand and cool off without proper protection, &c. I have thought that some brethren ought not to think of owning a team, unless it be of that ancient species of which the Blessed Master made use in his triumphant entry into Jerusalem.

To me there are but few things that look more like a "limb out of joint" than to see a poor, low-spirited, rattle-bone of a horse in the hands of a brother. It is one of the most pitiable sight imaginable, to see a fine, meek looking brother riding along the road on, or sitting astride of, a horse whose head and ears are pendant, and whose ribs and bones are the most prominent features about the poor thing, while the poor animal almost groans under the weight of his master. Again, when seeing such pitiable objects tied up to the hitching posts at the sanctuary of worship, I have thought that if endowed with the capabilities of Baalim's ass they would most undoubtedly offer up a petition to the Creator for a change of masters, or a change of heart in the one they are compelled to submit to.

Not all of us realize how correctly the qualities of our hearts may be estimated by our treatment of animals. A man that will criminally neglect to give proper attention to his Stock, need not be expected to be a blessing in the household; for a lack of the refining influences of christian principle is the difficulty in both cases. If any animals have a gospel right to mercy and kindness they are those owned by christians; but how often do we see, even the non-professor excel in kindness the professor. "These things ought not so to be." Any brother that has not enough intelligence and observation, or is deficient in kindness to his animals, ought to "ask of God, who giveth to every man liberally" for a little more light on the subject.

To a Bereaved Family.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

On a certain occasion a young man came running to Jesus with the most anxious inquiry, "What shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" "Then Jesus beholding him, loved him." Such was my feeling in my interview with you a few days ago. Your modest demeanor, your subdued tones, your sad, sorrow-clouded countenances, won my regard, and I loved you.

There was no inquiry on your lips, but was there none in your faces? Your eyes wore a pleading look, as if there was a fountain of tears not far back ready to burst forth. There was a mute eloquence in your expression embodying the earnest inquiry, "What must I do to be saved?" Have not your hearts been wrestling with sin and the awful realities of eternity, ever since the Rider of the Pale Horse bore away the loved wife and mother? When you look back, you see dark, towering mountains of sin piled along your path. Looking forward you see a God of holiness and justice sitting on a great White Throne, with a drawn two-edged sword, ready to avenge all the indignities offered to His Holy Name. When you look down you see a yawning hell waiting to engulf you into its flaming depths. When you look within, you meet a guilty conscience which is day and night lashing you as with the venomous tail of a scorpion, and shaking your soul with the thunders of judgment and the terrors of damnation. O friends, "if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." "Our God is a consuming fire." Let these awful declarations sink deep into your soul and become the quickening power of Eternal Life.

You are passing a most important crisis of your life. A more fitting season to consecrate yourselves to Jesus you will never have. You can lose a mother but once, and the same may be said of a wife. The place can be filled but not the relation. That breach can never more be closed up. Death has made a desolation in your family which no time can repair. O what a treasure have you deposited in the tomb! To see such a wife; such a mother, pass through the dark valley, and have her dear face forever shut away by the coffin-lid, is enough to break and melt the hardest heart. I trust you have all been made very tender and impressible by your great bereavement, and are "almost persuaded to become Christians." Why not altogether? Why not now? May the prayers and tears and dying gaze and lust melting farewell of the departed, come back with tremendous power into your souls, until your hearts break, and your knees give way, and you lie prostrate in the dust at the feet of Jesus. May she still plead with husband and children from the dark, silent sepulchre, till you are all in the fold of Christ. When you enter the room where she wrestled with disease and death, and gaze into the corner where she breathed out her soul into the hands of waiting angels, may you be overwhelmed with intense desire to "flee from the wrath to come," and to prepare for the solemn adjudication of your destiny. When you look at the vacant seat at the table she used to occupy, and think of her many loving words and kind offices, how can you keep your inmost souls from dissolving to tears? O children, how often have those eyes wept for you! How often have those hands ministered to your wants! How many a throb of joy and of sorrow beat in that heart for you! Now those love-lit eyes are dim in death. Their smile will gladden you no more. Those hands are crossed upon her bosom beneath the coffin-lid. Their faithful ministry is ended. That heart, so alive with sympathy and so gushing in its affections, lies cold and pulseless in the embrace of death. That bosom was the pillow of your infant head. From those alabaster globes of love you drew your early nourishment. Those arms encircled you with all the fervor of maternal devotion, and on that lap you spent many an hour of your guiltless life. Now all is over; the loved and loving mother is become a feast for the graveworm, and the place that knew her once shall know her no more forever. I know what it is to see the shadow of the grim foe steal over a mother's face, and see the ghastly spectre lay his cold touch on lip and eye and feature, and witness the last quiver that rends the soul from its mortal tenement. When I saw my saintly mother disrobed for the celestial sphere, I felt as if the concentrated powers of two world's were tearing me asunder. O how many whose bleeding hearts respond amen.

O, that God Almighty would bless this dispensation to you all, and that you all would make it a blessing. Will you let this call pass unheeded? Will you quench the Holy Spirit and make your mother's death the means of aggravated condemnation? God forbid. Flee to the Cross. Seek for Golgotha till you find the laver of redeeming blood. Forsake your sins. Give yourself wholly to the service of Him who bought you. Make every faculty of your souls and every member of your bodies an "instrument of righteousness unto holiness." "Search the Scriptures." "Pray without ceasing." Let no grass grow between you and the closet. And may He who "dwelleth between the cherubim," be your life and peace here and forevermore.

To the Watchmen.

Watchmen on the walls of Zion, the cry is to you. Are you on duty? The Savior says in tones of pity, "Feed my sheep." "Feed my lambs," was the savior's cry to his shepherds. The same is to you—"Feed my lambs." Are you faithful?

Watchmen on the walls of Zion, the enemy is within your lines scattering four sheep, and devouring your lambs for want of pasture. Watchmen, you who sit at ease in Zion, wake up; Jesus came "not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." Watchmen, the enemy is on the edges of your pastures. Be on the watch for the sheep that are hungering. Watchmen, why not pray when called on? You do not know who in the congregation is hungering and thirsting after righteousness. Jesus sent his disciples to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Shepherds, be on your watch, or there will be souls required at your hand. The church has chosen you, and, I trust, the Lord has called you to watch his flock, not only in the midst of the flock but also on the outskirts.

More Momentum.

The church needs a change in quality as well as quantity of membership. One half the professed Christians amount to nothing. They go to church. They have a kind regard for all religious institutions. But as to any firm grip of the truth, and enthusiastic service for Christ, any cheerful self-denial, any overmastering prayer, any capacity to strike hard blows for God, they are a failure. One of two things these half and half professors ought to do, either withdraw their names from the church roll, or else go as near the fire as to warm. Do you not know that your present position is an absurdity? You profess to be living for Christ and heaven, but all the world knows you are lying.

Wake up! Do something before you are dead. Either help pull the Lord's chariot, or get out of the way. We want more old-style holiness, the kind they had before railroads, steamboats, and telegraphs. A consecrated heart is momentum for all Christian work.

The Lord give us all a higher life, a deeper life, a broader life. We cannot do much toward saving others till we ourselves are more surely saved. We cannot pull others out of the surf when our own feet are slipping on the rock. More purity, more faith, more consecration will be more momentum.—Sel.

Gems of Thought.

BY A. E. KEAGY.

It must be allowed, that through all the different parts of nature, there appears a most benevolent intention in the providence of God for man's preservation and comfort. The earth and waters administer to his food and raiment; animals of various kinds are preserved for him in due season, as we every day experience; and he has given us the help of divine revelation which shall lift the veil from the dull eyes of mankind, and reveal to them the grandeur of the universe, and the designs of God; for "the heavens declare the glory of God," and the firmament sheweth his handiwork." Psa. 19 : 7.

We must gather those seeds of virtue and knowledge, which may be of use to us, and comfort to our friends, for the rest of our lives. Therefore we shall have respect to all the commandments of God, allowing not ourselves to neglect them; "for the heart of man is deceitful above all things."

In all our duties and devotions towards God we should perform them joyfully; for God loves a cheerful giver.

We should trust in a merciful God, who is able to conduct us through the thorny paths of this "life," to another and better world.

TIME.—Time comes and goes. How small is the portion of it which we may call our own! A moment—a meagre present! What a thought! And is this all that we can claim as ours? All. The past is gone; the future has not come; all that belongs to us is now. And yet, when time will be no longer; when the sun shall no more rise in her beauty, no more sink away in her magnificence; when there will be no more night, but all will be light and loveliness; then, then we may call, not time, but eternity ours.

MARY C. MILLER.

THE mass of professed Christians are guilty of too much time serving, too much drifting with the current, too much concealment of needed truth, and too much compromise with Christ's enemies. The boldest are none too bold; the cowards are as much despised by themselves as by others. Men of the world expect more faithful dealing from Christians than they receive; secretly they feel an utter contempt for a shamfaced professor of religion.

Do not conclude the Lord is not with you because things go contrary, and he does not appear for you; he was in the ship notwithstanding the storm.

SOME mourn more the shame which sin brings, than the sin which brings the shame.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
 The Mode of Baptism.

BY C. F. DETWEILER.

"God hath made man upright, but they have sought out many inventions." Eccl. 7: 21.

I sometimes hear that the "Dunkers" harp too much on baptism, and build too much on the natural element; but I believe a fair examination of some of the oppositions waged against the truth of God on this subject, occasionally, is altogether proper and expedient. I read in a religious periodical (Herald of Truth), a discourse delivered by a Lutheran divine on this subject, upon which I will make some comments. He first defines the term according to the general definition of classical authors, "Baptizo from bapto to immerse, to wash, to sprinkle, pour on water, and to color, as with a liquid."

Here I will throw a little light on the subject, by a few facts in regard to the classical definition of words.

I. All classical authors give first the primary meaning of the word, next the other words that can be appropriately used to express the same idea, and we know that the word "wash" is frequently used to signify an immersion, though the two words are not strictly synonymous. In addition to this, all the definitions are given according to customary application among learned classes, whether they have any analogy to the primary meaning or not.

2. There are other Greek words, which, in the primary meaning, express the idea of each of these secondary classical definitions of the word baptizo.

3. Every one of the opponents to the ordinance of immersion ought to know that there was primarily but one mode of administering the rite.

4. Not only immersionists, but some of the most noted divines and commentators among those who are not immersionists, frankly admit that the rite was originally performed by immersion.

5. The whole Greek church defines the word in its primary meaning by practice at the present time the same as ever before.

We will now pass to the scriptures of the Apocrypha Eccl. 34: 25, where he says, "The son of Sirach, speaking of one who had been purified from the pollution of a dead body, says, 'He was baptized from the pollution of the dead.'" In referring to the English version we read; "He that washeth himself after touching a dead body, if he touch it again, what availeth his washing?" Now he refers us to Num. 19: 13 for the washing or "baptism" alluded to by the son of Sirach. The 13th verse, to which he refers, reads thus: "Whosoever toucheth the dead body of any man that is dead, and purifieth not himself, defileth the tabernacle of the Lord: and that soul shall be cut off from Israel because the water of separation was not sprinkled upon him, &c. Here I will quote the 19th verse: "And a clean person shall sprinkle upon the unclean, on the third day, and on the seventh day; and on the seventh day he shall purify himself, and wash his clothes and bathe himself in water, and be clean at even." Now I will let the thoughtful reader read the quotation referred to, and make the comparison, and judge for himself which of these passages the son of Sirach referred to. It needs no comments. The wayfaring man can understand it.

Next he tries to prove by the preposition with that John the Baptist applied the water to the person, and not the person to the water. But the same preposition being properly translated into, he says, "Now, admitting this construction, it should not be forgotten that 'into' is not 'under;' while immersion does not signify into water but particularly under water." This assertion coming from a learned divine, is simply ridiculous. I will venture to say that the word into is used in connection with the idea of dipping, or immersion, more than ten times as often as the word under, by the best grammarians, and is correct. Let us illustrate. "He colored the wool by immersing it under dye-water." "He dipped his bread under the gravy." This is the kind of grammar the learned divine teaches, by saying "Immersion does not signify into."

He then passes to the baptism of the Holy Ghost, and says, "The Holy Ghost is everywhere represented as being poured upon 'sent down,' 'shed forth,' 'came,' 'fallen' &c. All these passages show that the baptism of the Holy Spirit was an application of it to the person baptized." Here I will first state that the Scripture does not teach that the application, or the giving of the Holy Ghost always constitutes baptism. It plainly teaches that the baptism of the Holy Ghost is an immersion, and it does not matter how it was effected. Immersion does not consist in the manner of effecting it. If you put cloth into a tub and then pour it full of water, it is just as completely immersed as if you pour the tub full of water and then put the cloth into it (or "under" it as my friend would have it); therefore the fact that the Holy Ghost was poured down and applied to the person, while John applied the person to the water, does not destroy the analogy at all. Every sane man knows that the heavens being the throne of God, and the earth his footstool, is sufficient reason for the manner in which the baptism of the Holy Ghost was effected. Also as the water of John's baptism was just where the laws of nature put it, is sufficient reason for the manner in which John effected his baptism, and that the Savior after replying to the remonstrance of John by saying, "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness," went down and was baptized, and "came up out of the water."

Here is the testimony of God in regard to the baptism of the Holy Ghost: "And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance." God is a Spirit; and as there is only one good Spirit, the manifestation of the Spirit of God is the manifestation of God's presence. He that would deny or evade the testimony of the noise from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, must close the eyes of his understanding to the testimony of God.

The baptism of the children of Israel in the cloud and in the sea. He thinks the cloud sent its sprinkling rain upon them. Well, how is it about the sea? It certainly did not sprinkle them while they were in the sea, for it was then between the Israelites and the Egyptians. Paul says they were baptized in the cloud, and in the sea, and any one who can make more of it than a metaphorical baptism, makes more of it than the Scriptures. They went through the sea on dry land, and the water stood on both sides of them. The Scripture in this case does not relate any sprinkling, pouring nor immersion.

He now passes to Hebrews 9: 10, where Paul speaks of divers washings, and quotes, "Which stood only in meats and drinks and divers washings (original 'divers baptisms')," and says, "They were not performed by immersion but by pouring." He then quotes, as testimony, Num. 19: 18. Here he simply omits the divers washings and quotes the sprinkling. Paul, in his epistle to the Hebrews, abundantly explains the signification of these sprinklings, which were all patterns, verily, not of baptism by sprinkling pure water, but of better things to come—of the blood of the atonement that is able to take away sin, sprinkled upon the altar of sacrifice, from the crown of thorns. Now the water of purification that was commanded to be sprinkled was made in this wise: Cedar wood, scarlet, and hyssop, were to be cast into the midst of a burning heifer. Verse 17th we read, "And for an unclean person, they shall take of the ashes of the burnt heifer of purification for sin, and running water shall be put thereto in a vessel." Read Num. 19: Here is Paul's testimony. "For it the blood of bulls and of goats and the ashes of an heifer, sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, How much more shall the blood of Christ, who, through the eternal Spirit, offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?" So we see, by Paul's own language, that in these sprinklings not the water but the other ingredients represented the purging elements. Pure water in the absence of other ingredients to represent the purging elements, was never commanded to be sprinkled upon man in all the ordinances of the Old Testament. These were not the washings at all that Paul speaks of, but they were the other "carnal ordinances." Heb. 9: 10. (Read the whole chapter.)

And now for the divers washings. These my friend never touched. The leper, after all the other ordinances were performed, was commanded to wash himself in water. So was the man who was unclean by being in contact with a dead body. The priest was also to wash himself in water. Hence the mottened sea and the brazen lavers in Solomon's temple. These are the washings which Paul alludes to, and they are analogous to Christian baptism, and it harmonize with them in their signification. Read the 9th and 10th chapters of Paul to the Hebrews, where he concludes his discourse on the washings and carnal ordinances, saying, "Let us draw near with a true heart with full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." For the washings in the Old Testament read Lev. 14: 8, 9; 15: 5—11; Num. 19: 7, 10, 19. Baptism by immersion requires the coercion of the person baptized with the one who baptizes, and thus harmonizes with the washings of the Old Testament. In harmony with this fact Ananias said to Saul (Acts 22: 16), "And now why tarriest thou? Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord."

He now comes to John's baptism, explaining that it was not Christian baptism, and gives the testimony to that effect. But he says, "It was the introduction of Christ into his priestly office, which he himself says," and quotes the verse in which he wants him to say so, namely, "I knew him not, but that he should be made manifest to Israel, therefore am I come baptizing with water." John did not come for the purpose of anointing Christ into his priestly office. He came to prepare the way of the Lord. He said to the Pharisees who came to ask him who he was, "I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, make straight the way of the Lord, &c." John 1: 23. After some remarks he states: "If our Savior had been inducted into the priestly office by immersion, then his induction into that office would have been contrary to God's own appointed way." Here he again omits all the washing as well as the anointing, which consists in pouring the oil upon Aaron, and goes down to the middle of the consecrating ordinances, where the blood upon the altar and the anointing oil, is commanded to be sprinkled upon Aaron and his sons, and upon their garments, &c. (Ex. 29: 21) Thus read the fourth and seventh verses, which he omitted: "And Aaron and his sons, thou shalt bring unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and shalt wash them with water." "Then shalt thou take the anointing oil, and pour (not sprinkle it upon his head.)" (Read the whole chapter.) After some reasoning, he comes to the conclusion that Christ was not inducted into his priestly office by immersion, but by sprinkling, thus fulfilling the righteousness of the law in God's own appointed way! O the recklessness of such an assertion! Aaron indeed was a type of Christ, but he was no more equal to Christ than the blood of purification was equal to the blood of Christ. Our high priest was not inducted into his priestly office "according to God's own way of consecrating the high priest into his office," by having a little water sprinkled on him, after it had been applied to hundreds of others as a baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. He was not baptized for his own consecration, neither was he inducted into his office by mortal man as Aaron was. He was a "high priest after the order of Melchisadek and had neither beginning of days nor end of life." The Scripture says in regard to his anointing, "That word I say ye know, which was published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee after the baptism which John preached, how God anointed Jesus of Nazareth, who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed with the devil," &c. Acts 10: 37. See also Acts 4: 27. Christ was baptized to give us a pattern to follow, and that pattern Mr. Biddle earnestly contends against.

After some explanation in regard to the baptism of the Eunuch by Philip, he says, "He was riding in his chariot, and was reading in the prophecy of Isaiah where a description is given of the humiliation of Christ, and in which Scripture this passage occurs: 'So shall he sprinkle many nations.' Isa. 52: 15. The prophet had been speaking of the kingdom of Christ in the world, and here declares how different nations of which he was one should be introduced into Christ's kingdom. He declares that it shall be done by sprinkling, as the initiatory rite, and if it was to be done by sprinkling, then certainly the Eunuch would not have been willing to be immersed. Neither would Philip teach him one thing and practice another. The Eunuch then must have been sprinkled." So says Mr. Biddle. Now let us see what the Scriptures say on the subject: "The place of the Scripture which he read was this: He was led as a sheep to the slaughter, and like a lamb dumb before his shearers, so he opened not his mouth. In his humiliation his judgment was taken away, and who shall declare his generation? for his life was taken from the earth." "Then Philip opened his mouth and began at the same scripture and preached unto him Christ." So says the scripture. The place where Mr. Biddle would have begun to preach unto him Christ and the sprinkling, is in Isaiah 52: 15. The place where the Scripture says that Philip "opened his mouth and began" is 53: 7. The Scripture which Mr. Biddle would have chosen speaks of God, sprinkling many nations. The Scripture that Philip selected treats on a different subject, namely, the humiliation of Christ.

He then says, "We have every reason to believe that this prophecy was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost where the baptism of three thousand converts is mentioned." This I readily admit, and God did the sprinkling, when they believed and were baptized. Then indeed they had their hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience which no man could do, and their bodies washed with pure water, as a figure of the washing of regeneration, of the burial of the old man, and the resurrection of the new creature. Oh, how beautifully did all things harmonize the figurative with the real, the type with the antitype! What a glorious change, from aliens to the commonwealth of Israel, to adopted sons of God, by the word spoken, which, through their obedience, was to them the power of God unto salvation!

He says three thousand could not have been baptized by immersion in so short a time. Well let us see. One man can baptize four in one minute, by immersion, with perfect ease. (Recollect, the ceremony was brief then, simply baptism according to the commission, on the confession of faith.) That is two hundred and forty in an hour; and if there were only twelve, they could have done it in one hour and a quarter. No man knows how many there were to administer the ceremony.

The baptism of the Jailor, Acts 16. Mr. Biddle again, as several times before, states that there is no mention made that he and the apostles Paul and Silas went out either to a stream of water or to a pond. I will simply say that one statement that "John was baptizing in Ænon near Salem, because there was much water there," is as good as a hundred. I have read one of the Brethren's papers for more than a year, and read of more than a hundred different baptismal notices, and in all of these probably there was one or two in which mention was made of going to water.

He states, "According to Roman laws it would have been death to the jailor to have left the jail for any purpose whatever with one of his prisoners, and it was midnight when they were baptized." They were beaten and cast into prison un-condemned being free citizens, and that was contrary to Roman laws. The jailor was responsible for nothing more than their safe keeping. He did not entertain any fear that they would run off; for "when he had brought them into his house, he set meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God with all his house." He was over his "scare."

Paul's language in Romans 6: 4: "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." Here, as an explanatory passage, he brings in, "For," says he, "if we have been planted together (still by baptism) in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection: knowing this that our old man is crucified (still by baptism) with him, that the body of sin may be destroyed, that hereafter we should not serve sin." Here he connects the baptism with the crucifixion, and then says, "There can be no possible resemblance between crucifixion and immersion." Now, friend Biddle, you have made a clean sweep of it. I will readily succumb to your statement, and add, neither can there be any resemblance between burying and crucifixion, nor between pouring and crucifixion, nor between sprinkling and crucifixion. The fact is you have pulled down the house and buried both Paul and yourself in its ruins. You say that "Paul includes himself and the Romans in the burial." According to the third verse, he just includes, "So many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ."

You also ask the question: "How can we reconcile the baptism into Jesus Christ?" One explanation will simplify all these points. In the first place if you examine the Scripture you will see that Paul does not say nor teach, directly nor indirectly, that our old man is crucified by baptism. Though the crucifixion, the burying, and planting had all reference to our "old man," the crucifixion is separately considered. Christ bore in his body the penalty of death that we inherited from Adam's transgression. This inheritance was our "old man" of sin, which in his person was crucified, that we in our newly regenerated man might live. Now while our inherited body of sin was crucified with him, our physical body through which this inheritance was handed down to us from Adam, is also subject to decay and death. But it has pleased the all-wise Creator to place within this mortal body, the germ of regeneration into everlasting life. Then the body of sin being crucified with Christ, unable longer to harm this vital germ of regeneration we are planted into the garden of his kingdom on earth, so that this vital germ may grow into everlasting life while the old seed of our mortal body withers and dies. Baptism is a symbol of our planting, and of regeneration; of the burying of the old man, and the resurrection of the new creature. Therefore in the symbol of baptism we are planted together in the likeness of his death. Baptism is our entrance into the kingdom of Christ, and consequently we are baptized into Christ.

Now, friend Biddle, you sum up the ordinances of pouring and sprinkling and say, "Surely they agree in one mode as well as in one object." I cannot conceive the idea that they agree in one mode, for they are two distinct modes in themselves. In the Old Testament we have the pouring of oil, the sprinkling of purification, and the washing or bathing in water. In the new dispensation, we have the pouring forth of the Holy Spirit, the sprinkling of the blood of Christ, and the symbolic washing of regeneration. There is nothing saving in the natural element, but the pattern as handed down to us from God, and taught and exemplified by our Savior, is one of the test weights of our faith in Christ, whether we mean to learn of Christ his ways or teach him our ways.

You say, or, rather infer, further that John no doubt selected Ænon near to Salem as a place to baptize, on account of its "beautiful scenery and convenience." That might do, if the Scriptures did not state the exact reason why he was baptizing there. The remainder of the argument I will not follow. I will here submit it to the candid judgment of every reader. Love of truth has constrained me to write it. If I made any errors they were due to the inaccuracy of my understanding and comprehension. Examine it all, and hold fast to that which is good.

Botany—No. 4.

Every part of a plant, from the far ends of the roots to the top leaf, is comprised of cells, very small, but in a ripe apple or mealy potato we can sometimes see them. The floury look of some fruits is due to each cell's being gorged with juice and being partly separated from the others. But we can not see them well in the wood and bark because they are packed together so closely. If four hundred cells were laid side by side, taking them out of a leaf, they would measure about an inch; but in the case flax or hemp the bark cells are nearly half an inch long and that is the reason why the fibre of the bark is so tough as to enable us to make it up into wearing material, etc.

These little cells in the leaf contain, floating in them, little green particles, to which the name of chlorophyllite is given; and this chlorophyllite is what gives the leaves their green color. The light on the leaves largely helps to make chlorophyllite and so gives us our green fields. If there were no light, there would be no chlorophyllite manufactured in the leaf cells, and the plant would be white. Now you boys and girls who have often noticed potatoes and turnips growing in a dark cellar can tell why they are not green.

Now the sap, spoken of before, goes from cell to cell, from the ends of the roots to the very top of the tree, passing through sapwood. When it gets to the leaves, it gets full of carbon and other plant food, and starts from the top down to the root again, going between the bark and the hard wood. On its way down it builds up cells, which, as we all know now, make up the whole plant.

If you will take a sharp instrument and very carefully girdle a tree, now, this spring's sap will go up the sap wood, get its load of food, start down and build up the tree till it comes to where you have girdled it where a ring of new wood is formed. Next year the sap can not get up over the girdled place, and your tree dies. While we talk of a tree growing up, really the line of growth is down.

So much for the growth of a plant.

Next we will consider the object of its growth, which, so far as the tree or plant is concerned, is to produce seed. Everything in the life of the plant tends to this end, and then its activity ceases. If you let a cucumber go to seed, that particular vine produces no more fruit of the same quality which it would have done had the maturing cucumber been pulled; and you, boys and girls, who have pretty flowers in bloom, can keep up their blossoming by using the perfect flowers in bouquets whenever you want to. Such a course will bring its reward in more perfect blooms in the future.

The above will do, for this week, and now if you will turn to Luke 19:4, you will find the name of a tree that very much resembles the mulberry tree common with us. It is evergreen and produces a fruit like the fig and is too sweet to be much eaten. What prophet was engaged in gathering its fruit?

Obedience to our Parents.

BY S. E. ROOP

There is no duty on earth devolving more upon us than obedience to our parents. We should always strive to do that which we think would be pleasing in their sight, and contribute most to their happiness. Let us pause one moment and consider what anxiety we have caused our parents; how many sleepless nights they have spent for us. They have watched over us during sickness and health, by day and by night, so interested were they in our welfare; and now can we be so ungrateful as to disobey their command? We don't think we could ever fully compensate them for the kindness they have bestowed upon us.

But do we avail ourselves of every opportunity to manifest our gratefulness to them? Why, we have seen some persons who, we almost had to think, delighted in being disobedient. They would attend dances, and other places of amusement, repugnant to their parent's wishes, and when reproved for it they would calmly remark, "My parents have nothing to do with me, I am my own boss." We have even heard young men, who were apparently well educated, speaking of their father in such an irreverent manner as "the old man" or "the old boss." How ungrateful of any one to thus treat his parents, who cared so much for him while he was unable to care for himself. Truly, we agree with the poet who says;

"Be kind to thy father; for when thou wert young,

Who loved thee so fondly as he?

He caught the first accents that fell from thy tongue,

And joined in thy innocent glee.

"Be kind to thy father; for now he is old,

His locks intermingled with gray,
His footsteps now feeble, once fearless and bold;
Thy father is passing away.

"Be kind to thy mother; for lo! on her brow

May traces of sorrow be seen;
O, well may'st thou cherish and comfort her now;
For loving and kind she hath been.

"Remember thy mother; for thee will she pray
As long as God giveth her breath;

With accents of kindness then cheer her lone way,
E'en to the dark valley of death."

Then let us resolve that what we know to be our duty shall be faithfully pursued.

Union Bridge, Md.

To Our Young Woman.

Young woman of to-day! the solemn duty, the glorious privilege, rests with you to redeem the young men of our country in your companionship from dreadful danger, and save yourselves from the heaviest part. You hold the heart-strings of our young manhood. You can wield a power greater, perhaps, than fathers' teachings or mothers' tears. Oh! use it for God; use it for purity and temperance. Demand reform—of the guilty, already sinning, immediate repentance and abstinence; and warn those in danger, so that they may know that you are watching to see if they love sin more than they do you. Do not trust your heart's affections with a man who is at any moment likely to yield to the lowest temptation and surrender his manhood. Do not trust your tender love with a man who cannot even control his grosser appetites and passions, but will risk his own health and your happiness for the idle gratification of a vicious propensity. Do not associate with a young man who drinks. These are the negatives. The positives are: Go to work actively to save; dissuade young men from doubtful courses which may lead to sin; kindly and tenderly reach forth and save the falling. Perhaps they are even now waiting for the token of loving anxiety or the word of tender rebuke that tells them that some one cares for their souls. Perhaps they are even now ashamed of their evil ways, and only need the power of some beloved voice to win them back to purity and peace. There is greater power, if wisely used, in the soft entreaty of faithful love to turn the scale of resolution, than in the taunts and sneers of profligate companions. It is a power delicate but mighty, like the sunshine; use it for God and temperance; chide and rebuke in love, as well as entreat and persuade. Induce your female friends to do likewise, and help them, and you can soon form a social sentiment and power against intemperance which will crush the demon in a year. Make the social atmosphere of your homes so pure that drunkenness will be ashamed to enter there. Oh! this is service which will make life glorious, and will save men from destruction, dignify womanhood, and glorify God.

Dare you do it?

Ask God's blessing and guidance, and begin to-day, and in his mighty power go forth conquering and to conquer.—

THE EARLY CHRISTIAN FATHERS AND INFANT BAPTISM.

Brother John Hershey, of Missouri, requests us to notice in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, the testimonies for infant baptism found in the writings of "the Fathers," and to ascertain the weight of that testimony. There is a work on baptism written by Dr. Baker, and published by the Presbyterian Board of Publication of Philadelphia, which contains what is regarded as the testimonies of the ancient fathers upon this subject, and these are what we are requested by brother Hershey to notice.

Dr. Baker says, page 31, "That the testimony of 'the Fathers' in favor of infant baptism is full, clear, positive, and express. Justin Martyr, who lived immediately after the apostolic times, says in so many words, that in the earliest days of the Christian church baptism was practiced in the place of circumcision.—Irenæus, who flourished not long after, states expressly that the church learned from the Apostles to baptize children."—Dr. Baker in the above passage of his book, refers to Justin Martyr and Irenæus as, among "the Fathers" who give "full, clear, pointed, and express" testimony to infant baptism. Why he did not quote the language of Justin Martyr and Irenæus, we cannot understand, for he quotes the words of other Fathers whom he mentions as witnesses in favor of infant baptism. As Dr. Baker does not give the quotations from Justin Martyr and Irenæus quoted by pedobaptists to prove infant baptism, we shall give what is commonly quoted as their testimonies, and our readers can judge whether they are "full, clear, positive, and express." There are two passages usually quoted from Justin to prove infant baptism.

One passage reads as follows: "And we who have approached God through him, have received not carnal, but spiritual circumcision, which Enoch and those like him observed. And we have received it through baptism, since we were sinners, by God's mercy; all men may equally obtain it."—Justin Martyr's Works, p. 140. (We make our quotations from "the Fathers," as we have their writings given us in the Ante-nicene Christian Library.) The point aimed at by pedobaptists in quoting this passage from Justin, is to prove that baptism is in the Christian system what circumcision was in the Jewish. And as infants were circumcised, so they are to be baptized. But Justin does not say that Christian baptism has come in the place of Jewish circumcision. We shall give his explanation of Christian circumcision, and from that it will be readily seen that it cannot be made to apply to infants. He thus explains it:—"Blessed therefore are we who have been circumcised the second time with knives of stone. For your first circumcision was and is performed by iron instruments, for you remain hard-hearted; but our circumcision, which is the second, having been instituted after yours, circumcises us from idolatry and from absolutely every kind of wickedness by sharp stones, i. e., by the words [preached] by the apostles of the corner-stone cut out without hands. And our hearts are thus circumcised from evil, so that we are happy to die for the name of the good Rock, which causes living water to burst forth for the hearts of those who by him have loved the Father of all, and which gives those who are willing to drink of the water of life."—Justin Martyr's works, p. 242. It is very evident that this language can be applied only to believers, and therefore Justin's view of Christian circumcision proves nothing for infant baptism.

The other passage from Justin claimed by pedobaptists to prove infant baptism, is the following: "And many, both men and women, who have been Christ's disciples from childhood, remain pure at the age of sixty or seventy; and I boast that I could produce such from every race of men. For what shall I say, too, of the countless multitude of those who have reformed intemperate habits, and learned these things."—Justin Martyr's Works, p. 18.

When Justin used the above words, he was discoursing upon the purity of Christ's doctrine, and the purity of life which it produces in his disciples. And he refers to the fact that some of Christ's disciples had been preserved in their pure and virgin state to the age of sixty or seventy years. The term here used to describe the age at which these persons became the disciples of Christ, it will be noticed, is childhood, and this is not by any means limited to infancy, but is often applied to youth, that age at which they can be taught. Hence the Apostle Paul in speaking to Timothy, says, "From a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures." 2 Tim. iii. 14. So the passage can mean no more than that the persons referred to became disciples in their youth by voluntarily surrendering themselves to Christ. Dr. Doddridge, a pedobaptist writer, in referring to the passage in Justin, under consideration, observes, "But this may only refer to their having been early instructed in the Christian religion."—Hinton's History of Baptism, p. 227. There are many disciples of Christ now who became such in their childhood, by an exercise of faith in connection with their baptism. And are these testimonies from Justin, quoted by pedobaptists in favor of infant baptism, "full, clear, positive, and express"?—They surely are not. There is nothing in them in favor of infant baptism.

We shall now show that Justin's testimony is plainly against infant baptism. In his explanation of the way in which Christians commenced the new life, he says: "I will also relate the manner in which we dedicated ourselves to God when we had been made new through Christ; lest, if we omit this, we seem to be unfair in the explanation we are making. As many as are persuaded and believe that what we teach and say is true, and undertake to live accordingly, are instructed to pray and to treat God with fasting, for the remission of their sins that are past, we praying and fasting with them. Then they are brought by us where there is water, and are regenerated in the same manner in which we were ourselves regenerated. For, in the name of God, the Father and Lord of the universe, and of our Savior Jesus Christ, and of the Holy Spirit, they then receive the washing with water. For Christ also said, 'Except ye be born again, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven.'—John iii. 5. . . . . And for this [rite] we have learned from the apostles thus reason. Since at our birth we were born without our knowledge or choice, by our parents coming together, and we were brought up in bad habits and wicked training; in order that we may not remain the children of necessity and of ignorance, but may become the children of choice and knowledge, and may obtain in the water remission of sins formerly committed, there is pronounced over him who chooses to be born again, and has repented of his sins, the name of God the Father and Lord of the universe," &c.—Justin's Works, pp. 59, 60.

Does not this account of the manner in which Christians dedicated themselves to God, show plainly that infants were excluded? 1. The reader will notice that Justin says, "We dedicated ourselves to God." There is no intimation that they dedicated their children to God in baptism. 2. He says, "As many as are persuaded and believe that what we teach and say is true, and undertake to live accordingly, are instructed to pray," &c. By this we see they were not infants. 3. Those that were dedicated and baptized, desired to become thereby the "children of choice and knowledge." But infants neither choose baptism nor receive knowledge, and therefore infants are excluded from those baptized in Justin's time.—But perhaps our pedobaptist friends may say, Justin was only describing the dedication and baptism of adults or believers, and because infants are excluded from those whose dedication he describes, it does not follow that there were no infants baptized. Let it be particularly noticed that Justin promised to relate the manner in which they dedicated themselves to God. Now if some dedicated themselves to God, while others were dedicated by their parents; if some chose a Christian life and voluntarily engaged in its duties, while others were made Christians by the will of their parents, and of necessity, then were there evidently two ways of being dedicated to God, and Justin should have described both to fulfill his promise. But it is very evident in the simple manner in which he describes their dedication, and connects it with baptism, that there were no infants baptized by the body of Christians with which he was connected, and which he represented.

We proceed to the testimony of Irenæus. Dr. Baker does not give it, but we shall. The testimony of this Christian Father, which is claimed by pedobaptists to prove infant baptism, is the following: "Being a Master, therefore, he also possessed the age of a Master, not despoised or evading any condition of humanity, nor setting aside in himself that law which he had appointed for the human race, but sanctifying every age, by that period corresponding to it which belonged to himself. For he came to save all through means of himself—all, I say, who through him are born again to God—infants, and children, and boys, and youths, and old men. He therefore passed through every age, becoming an infant for infants, thus sanctifying infants; a child for children, thus sanctifying those of this age; being at the same time made to them an example of piety, righteousness, and submission; a youth for youths, becoming an example to youths, and thus sanctifying them for the Lord. So likewise he was an old man for old men, that he might be a perfect Master for all, not as respects the setting forth of the truth, but also as regards age, sanctifying at the same time the aged also, and becoming an example to them likewise."—Irenæus' Works, vol. i. p. 199.

This passage in Irenæus can only be made to favor infant baptism on the supposition that the words "born again" mean baptize, and it is not at all probable that this is their meaning. The phrase, baptized through Christ unto God, seems to convey no intelligent or Scriptural idea. Many eminent pedobaptist scholars have declared their belief that this passage in Irenæus has no reference to infant baptism. Dr. Doddridge, an eminent dissenting minister, and author of The Family Expositor of the New Testament, says on this passage, "We have only a Latin translation of this work; and some critics have supposed this passage spurious; or, allowing it to be genuine, it will not be granted that to be regenerated always in his writings signifies to be baptized."—Hinton's History of Baptism, pp. 227, 228. Dr. Knapp, of the Lutheran Church, in his Christian Theology, a popular work, says, in referring to infant baptism, "Some have endeavored to find evidence for this practice even in the writings of Justin the Martyr and Irenæus; but they are not sufficiently decisive on this point."—Knapp's Theology, p. 495.

We have now given the passages from the writings of Justin Martyr and Irenæus, the two ancient Fathers first named by Dr. Baker, which are claimed by pedobaptists as testimony in favor of infant baptism. And these passages, instead of containing testimony "full, clear, positive, and express," as Dr. Baker would have his readers believe they do, when looked at in connection with the general teaching of their authors, and in connection with the fact that some eminent pedobaptists regard them as unsatisfactory testimony, must be regarded by candid and unprejudiced men as containing no proof in favor of infant baptism.

The declaration that Dr. Baker makes in saying that "Irenæus, states expressly that the church learned from the apostles to baptize children," since he gives no reference to the place where it may be found, and since we find it quoted by no other pedobaptist author, neither find it in the writings of Irenæus though we have searched for it, does not seem to be warranted by facts or testimony.

After Justin Martyr and Irenæus Dr. Baker introduces Tertullian. This ancient Father lived in the latter part of the second century, and he is commonly regarded as an opponent of infant baptism. And if he opposed it, it must have existed in his day, say the advocates of infant baptism. In his work on baptism he says: "According to the circumstances and disposition, and even age, of each individual, the delay of baptism is preferable; principally, however, in the case of little children. . . . . The Lord does indeed say, 'Forbid them not to come unto me.' Let them 'come,' then while they are growing up; let them 'come' while they are learning, while they are being taught whither to come; let them become Christians when they have become able to know Christ. Why does the innocent period of life hasten to the remission of sins?" Tertullian's Works, Vol. 1. p. 253. Different views of Tertullian's meaning obtain among men. There are baptists and pedobaptists who do not think that Tertullian has reference to babes in the foregoing passage, but to little children. Such do not regard his language as conclusive proof that infant baptism had then been introduced. As we however find infant baptism in the third century in the time of Cyprian, it may have had its commencement in the time of Tertullian. But whether infant baptism existed in the time of Tertullian or not and whether or not he was alluding to infants when he spoke of "little children," it is evident that he did not believe infant baptism to be in accordance with the principles of the gospel. He speaks of faith being "tied to the necessity of baptism."—Tertullian's Works, p. 248. By this language we presume he means, that faith and baptism are connected, or, that the former is necessary to the latter. And this doctrine is against infant baptism. And so it is highly probable that Tertullian's opposition to infant baptism was not simply on the ground that infants were too young, but on the ground that they lacked the Scriptural qualifications of proper subjects for baptism.

Dr. Baker next introduces Origen, as a witness for infant baptism, and gives the following as passages occurring in his writings: Infants also by usage of the church are baptized." "Infants are baptized for the remission of sins." "For this also it was that the church had from the apostles a tradition or order to give baptism to infants." Work on Baptism, p. 35. It is said that the writings of Origen have been much altered. But admitting the foregoing quotations to express his sentiments, it will be noticed that there is no reference in them to Scriptural authority for infant baptism. He refers to it as a tradition from the apostles, and as a usage of the church.—Now as Origen was apparently giving the authority for infant baptism, it is to be presumed that if he would have claimed Scriptural authority for it, he would have given that authority. And as he did not give it, he could not, we think, have claimed it. And had there been connected with infant baptism the importance that Origen and others who regarded it as designed for the remission of sins thought there was, it would not have been omitted in the Christian Scriptures, and left to depend upon tradition. Again: Origen's testimony is not earlier than the third century; and by this time infant baptism had been introduced into the church, not by apostolic authority, but as an innovation on apostolic order. And its existence in the third century under the circumstances under which we find it, is evidence against its apostolic origin, rather than in favor of it, as we shall show in our remarks upon the testimony of Cyprian, which will be next examined.

Dr. Baker next mentions Cyprian. He lived in the third century. It is very certain that infant baptism existed in the age in which this Father lived. But that it had existed in the church from the time of the apostles to the time of Cyprian is by no means certain. Indeed, we think it is certain that it had not. He has been called by some antipedobaptists the father of infant baptism. But whether he was the father of it or not, it is very evident that infant baptism was very young in the age of Cyprian. We call the special attention of our readers who would ascertain the real force of the argument from the Fathers for infant baptism, to what was said by Cyprian and his colleagues in council concerning it. If this is duly considered, it will show, we think, to the candid inquirer, that infant baptism is an innovation or an unwarranted change introduced into the church after the apostolic age, and not long before the age of Cyprian.

Fidus, a bishop of the time of Cyprian, was perplexed about several subjects, and among them that concerning the age at which an infant was to be baptized. He stated his difficulties to a council of sixty-six bishops, in a letter. Cyprian was in the council. The difficulties of Fidus were considered, and we have in the works of Cyprian the reply of the council at length. We can give but a small part of it. In reply to Fidus the council says: "But in respect to the case of infants, which you say ought not to be baptized within the second or third day after their birth, and that the law of ancient circumcision should be regarded, so that you think that one who is just born should not be baptized or sanctified within the eighth day, we all thought very differently in our council. For in this course which you thought was to be taken no one agreed; but we all rather judge that the mercy and grace of God is not to be refused to any one born of man. . . . For, with respect to what you say, that the aspect of an infant in the first days after its birth is not pure, so that any one of us would still shudder at kissing it, we do not think that this ought to be alleged as any impediment to heavenly grace.—For it is written, 'To the pure all things are pure.' Nor ought any of us to shudder at that which God hath condescended to make. For although the infant is still fresh from its birth, yet it is not such that any one should shudder at kissing it in giving grace and in making peace; since in the kiss of an infant every one of us ought, for his very religion's sake, to consider the still recent hands of God themselves, which in some sort we are kissing, in the man lately formed and freshly born, when we embrace that which God has made."—The Works of Cyprian, vol. i. pp. 196, 197.

The difficulty of baptizing very young infants was not what was the principal trouble with Fidus, but as it was the practice of the church to give the Christian form of salutation, the holy kiss, to those baptized. Fidus thought that as it was repulsive to the feelings of some to kiss an infant within the second or third day after its birth, that infants at that age should not be baptized. This was the difficulty, and to meet it, the answer of Cyprian and his colleagues was framed. And how did the college of bishops answer Fidus? They justified the baptism of very young infants. And by what arguments did they justify it? They neither directly referred to any Scriptural authority for the practice, nor to any precedent in the history of the church. They used far-fetched arguments, and vague inferences. They refer to the passage, "Unto the pure all things are pure," Titus i. 15, and to the case of Elisha, laying himself upon the infant son of the widow to bring him to life, arguing from the last case the spiritual equality between infants and adults. They used the arguments they did in the absence of anything better. It is evident there was no precedent or example known to them in the previous history of the church of baptizing infants so young, or they would have referred to it. But had infant baptism existed in the church from the beginning, cases would have frequently occurred, owing to sickness and other circumstances, requiring baptism "within the second or third day after the birth of the child," as the one referred to by Fidus. But no case is cited by the college of bishops.—Dr. Baker quotes both Irenæus and Origen as saying the church learned infant baptism from the apostles. If so, the church had practiced infant baptism for about two hundred and twenty years, for it was about that length of time from the time the apostles first preached the doctrines of Christianity, until the decision of the council of Carthage, which assembled A. D., 256. Now is it not remarkably strange that infant baptism should have existed two hundred and twenty years in the church and yet Fidus knew not whether an infant two or three days old should be baptized, and the sixty-six bishops in council knew of no case as a precedent to refer to, when answering the doubts and difficulties of Fidus? This bishop thought that infants should not be baptized until they were eight days old; while Cyprian and his colleagues in council believed they might be baptized at any age. This conflicting opinion upon a matter of the kind under consideration, and the manner in which the bishops reasoned upon the case, two hundred and twenty years after the Christian church was established, shows most conclusively that infant baptism in the time of Cyprian was a new thing, and that there was nothing settled in regard to the age at which infants were to be baptized. For if infant baptism had been as long in existence at the time of Cyprian as pedobaptists contend it had been; and had it prevailed as universally as they think it had, how are we to account for the ignorance of Fidus upon the subject, and for the manner in which the bishops treated the subject, in removing his doubts about the propriety of administering it to infants before they were eight days old? We cannot satisfactorily account for them on pedobaptist ground; they can only be accounted for satisfactorily on the ground that infant baptism had not long been practiced, and that it had not extensively prevailed.

The idea that we advanced in the close of the last paragraph that infant baptism though practiced in the third century, was neither apostolical in its origin, nor universally practiced in the church in that century, is greatly confirmed by the testimonies to infant baptism that we find in the fourth century. We find there was the same want of any settled or universal rule in regard to the age at which infants were baptized in the fourth century that we found existed in the third. Gregory Nazianzen, bishop of Constantinople and a Greek Father lived in the fourth century. He was an eminent and influential bishop in his day. In one of his orations, as they are called, when warning against delaying baptism, he gives a question as if addressed to him, and answers it. The question and answer are as follows: "What say you to those who are as yet infants, and are not in capacity to be sensible either of the grace or the miss of it? Shall we baptize them too? Yes, by all means, if any danger makes it requisite. For it is better that they be sanctified without their sense of it, than that they should die unsealed and uninitiated. . . . As for others I give my opinion that they should stay three years or thereabouts, when they are capable to hear and answer some of the holy words." Wall's History of Infant Baptism, Vol. 1, p. 179. Here we have the opinion of the great Gregory, that except in cases where "danger makes it requisite," the baptism of children should be deferred until they are three years old, "when they are capable to hear and answer some of the holy words." Is not this proof conclusive that the baptism of children was something for which there was no established law either human or divine? There was nothing yet in the fourth century explicit, definite or uniform in regard to it. There was as much want of any knowledge of a definite age at which to practice it, among the Greek Fathers in the fourth century, as there had been with Cyprian and the Latin Fathers in the third century. And this want of knowledge in regard to it, shows that it did not originate with the apostles, but with men long after the apostles.

We have now noticed the testimonies of the Fathers which are commonly adduced to prove infant baptism. These testimonies are quoted by Dr. Baker, and he pronounces them, "full, clear, positive, and express." But those testimonies, instead of containing proof of the divine authority for infant baptism, when looked at in the light of the circumstances under which they occur, and of the facts with which they are connected, rather contain proof "full, clear, positive, and express," against its divine authority, and in favor of its human origin, as our examination of the subject shows.

Gleanings and Gittings.

"BROTHER, I will tell you that Jonathan is getting the same paper you are sending to me. If you please, stop my paper." Kind sister, we would be pleased to grant the request, but we must first know the name of your post-office. Will you send us a postal card bearing your name and address. B.

THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, from No. 19 to the end of the current volume, will be sent for 90 cents; or from No. 24, the time of the A. M. for 1876, for 75 cents.

As the following notice of the death of our beloved brother, Jacob Spanogle, came a little too late to find room in the proper department for such notices, and as it was accompanied by a request for early insertion, we give it space here.

In Memory of Bro. Jacob Spanogle.

BY J. P. BERTIC.

Bro. Spanogle's sudden departure from earth to the spirit world, has not only caused a deep feeling of sadness to rest on his bereaved family, but also on the church and on the business circle with which he was so prominently identified. He was born in Germany Valley, Huntingdon Co., Pa., on the 13th of Nov., 1814, and died of "Heart disease," in Philadelphia, Pa., on the 19th of April, 1876, at twenty minutes past one o'clock A. M., aged 61 yrs. 6 mo., and 6 days. He was away on business for nearly two weeks, and on his return had arrived in the city. While walking to the street cars, he was taken ill, and fell to the pavement insensible. He was picked up and taken to the Philadelphia hospital till his family was informed, who removed him to his home, where he spent the few remaining hours of his life in intense suffering; but death soon came to his relief, removing him to a land free from pain and death. He never once murmured during his sufferings.

His father's family has always stood favorably identified with the church. His father, Andrew Spanogle, whose zeal and energy will be remembered by many at the mere mention of the name, is now superannuated.

Brother Spanogle, following in the footsteps of his father, at the age of 25 chose the Lord as his portion, and took the cup of salvation. As his life advanced he manifested more zeal for the cause of Christ, ever anxious and ardent in the service of the Master.

He served honorably and efficiently as a minister for 30 years. Nineteen years of his ministry were fulfilled in Huntingdon, Perry, and the adjoining counties of middle Pa. Often have we conversed relative to the hardships of a minister's life in those mountainous districts. In the spring of 1865 he moved to Phila., Pa., where he served during the remaining years of his life, eleven years, in the ministry, loved and respected by all who had a true desire to see Zion prosper. His house was oft a home for the homeless. His door was one from which the poor and needy were not turned empty away. Many of the brethren who read this will bear testimony of the hospitality of his house. Illustrative of the esteem in which he was held, we will say that during the forenoon of the day of the funeral, five hundred persons were in to view the body. When the Sunday School children were in to see his face for the last time, one little boy, though not related, was heard to exclaim, "He was the dearest grand pa ever I had." He was very fond of children, uniformly kind to them, and the Sunday School will miss him as well as the church. Were it not that we know that the Judge of all the earth will do right, this dispensation of God's providence would fall with more crushing weight; but feeling that God knows best, and will only do good and not evil, we try to say, "Thy will be done."

The funeral services, in Philadelphia, were conducted by Eld. Isaac Price, assisted by Bro. J. T. Myers and the writer, from 2 Cor. 5: 1; and in Germantown, by the same parties from selections from the 15th chapter of 1 Corinthians.

After these services his body was laid to rest among the father's of the church in America, there to await the call of the resurrection morning. During the two years in which we labored together in the cause of Christ, I always found him on the side of pure Christianity, ever faithful and ever bold to assert his convictions of right, and always ready to battle against error and corruption. Those who knew him best loved him most. May God's comforting grace rest on the bereaved family and church is our prayer.
Phila., Pa., May 9th, 1876.

Bro. H. P. Brinkworth, Jewell Centre, Kansas, says: "If you get any of the Brethren's tracts or papers on hand, and can send them to me, please do so, as they are much needed here, there being but little reading matter here, and I would much like some in our little Sunday-school which I am laboring hard to build up for the advancement of Christ's kingdom here on earth. Brother S. C. Stump, from Falls City, is with us now in the west, preaching. He baptized five last week, making 10 since Bro. Bailly's report, and two are now candidates. Oh! let us thank God. At our council while Bro. Stump was here, there was a choice held for two speakers, the lots falling on Bro. Hiram E. Faidly, formerly from the Elk Lick congregation, Somerset county, Pa., and your unworthy correspondent. We feel that we need the prayers of the church to God in our behalf, for we are weak.—Oh, pray for us; pray without ceasing.

Fraternally,
H. P. BRINKWORTH.

E. W. FLORY, Willow Springs, Kansas, May 1st, 1876, says: "The weather is rather wet. We had a mild winter, but a rather cold and wet spring; but it is warm now. The people are planting corn. There is not very much planted yet, on account of the wet weather. Trees are putting on their summer dress.—Wheat and rye look very well—better than for several years; oats look well; peaches are partly killed; apples and cherries promise a full crop, if nothing happens then yet; wild fruits promise a good crop. Health is generally good.

A SUBSCRIBER, LaPlace, Ills., May 1st, 1876, says: "We have had a very wet spring so far, yet many of the farmers are plowing for corn. A few are planting.—Health seems to be pretty good in this part of the country. Brother J. W. Stein, on his way homeward, stopped with us a few days. We had the satisfaction of hearing him preach one sermon at LaPlace meeting house, where he told us many things pertaining to the salvation of souls. May the good seed sown take deep root in every heart, spring up, and bring forth much fruit."

Bro. J. D. Veach has changed his address from Mt. Etna, Iowa, to Adell, Dallas county, Iowa.

Genesis and Exodus.

In No. 17, page 270, in brother Mishler's "Epistolary," it is stated that the "River Brethren," "originated from the Old Brethren." Such does not seem to be the fact. My ancestors "had perfect understanding of all things from the very first" pertaining to this sect, and according to their version the founders were never united with the Brethren. They had no secessions from the Brotherhood until after they had asserted themselves as an independent sect, and had made public declaration of their tenets; and then only of such who were stimulated by a love of notoriety and a desire to preach. "The lump" seems to be better than the "first-fruit." Rom. xi. 16.

It is further stated that one of the factions which seceded from the "River Brethren," is called the "Princers." This rupture was the offshoot of desire for pre-eminence, and not of disparity of doctrinal views. It is the old, old story—better first in a lower kingdom than second in a higher. What they call themselves I do not know, but they are popularly known as "Brenserites," because Matthias Brenser was the ruling spirit of their revolt, and in the head and heart and front of their organization. He looks like an old prophet—some fiery Tishbite—triumphant of Scripture, and terribly eloquent, especially when he stands on Mount Ebal. I have known him from childhood.

They have few secessions in this community, owing no doubt to conflicting elements in their fraternity, namely—their caustic criticisms and caricatures of other denominations, and their eclectic theology. The one element awakens dislike, and the other inclines people to cork new wine into old bottles. They have powerful ministers, mostly of the Sinaitic stamp, who denounce what they oppose with an energy that might make the "ribs of nature break."

In their views of justification by faith they are decidedly Latheran. They regard the Old Brethren as no better than a catacomb of religious mummies, and seem in their glory when at dagger's point with them. I speak of them as a body, and am happy to say there are not a few noble exceptions. They dispense with the Lord's Supper, as do also the River Brethren. They dress like the Brethren, but are much less strict in relation to legal principles. In nothing do they so tax the patience of the Brethren as in their persistent misrepresentation of our views of the remission of sin. Because we place baptism antecedent to remission, they insist that we also make the character which qualifies for Heaven dependent upon the same condition; whereas it is not possible for them or any other sect, to insist on a completeness of holiness as to its quality, as the fruit of repentance and faith, which we do not regard as essential to a right reception of baptism. But remission of sin, while related to holiness, is not of it. It changes not his person, but his relation. It is a Divine act manward, and not a constitutional element in the new creature. If it were subjective and constitutional, it would necessarily precede baptism. The child has no organic accretion after it becomes a member of the family. Remission is wholly a matter of faith, and not of emotion. No one can know whether he is forgiven till the fact is communicated. We can have no sense of the act of forgiveness, only of the fact of being forgiven. All the feeling possible is "the joy of faith," in relation to the fact objectively transacted. Holiness first, then baptism, then remission.

Sabbath School Organization.

The members of the Plumcreek district met on the 20th of March for the purpose of organizing a Sabbath school. The following brethren were elected for officers and teachers: Superintendent, R. T. Pollard; Asst. Supt., Lewis Kimmel; Secretary, A. E. Gockley; Librarian, C. B. Kimmel; Treasurer, Peter Shaffer; Teacher of Infant Class, sister Hannah Kimmel; Second Testament Class, Jobn Miller; First Testament Class, Jacob Kelso; Bible Class, Lewis Kimmel.

There was also a committee appointed to get books for the library, and papers to be distributed among the scholars every other Lord's day. This committee consisted of Lewis Kimmel, Jacob Kelso and Geo. Clark.

There seems to be quite an interest manifested in this community in favor of Sunday-schools. We have collected $12 to purchase a library; and trusting that much good will result from our labor, we will try to diligently instruct the youth in the true ways of God.

Huntingdon Normal School.

LOCATION.

This school was opened Apr. 17th, 1876, in the Pilgrim Building, Huntingdon, Pa. Huntingdon, the county-seat of Huntingdon county, is a town of about 5000 inhabitants, pleasantly located on the Juniata river. It is on the main line of the Pennsylvania Central R. R. about 97 miles west of Harrisburg and 150 east of Pittsburgh. It is also the northern terminus of the Huntingdon and Broad Top R. R. 52 miles from Bedford and 89 from Cumberland, Md. The rail-road facilities are all that could be desired. The health and morals of the place are as good as can be found anywhere and much better than in most towns of the same size.

CALENDAR.

The school year embraces 46 weeks and is divided into 4 terms of ten weeks each and one term of 6 weeks. The terms will begin on the following days:

Aug. 1st, 1876, Institute Session, 6 weeks.
Sept. 12, " Fall Term, 10 weeks.
Nov. 21, " Winter Term, 10 weeks.
Feb. 6, 1877, Spring Term, 10 weeks.
Apr. 17, " Summer Term, 10 weeks.

There will be a vacation of one week at the Christmas Holidays. With this exception the school will be in continuous session from Aug. 1st, until the latter part of June following. Students can enter at anytime, but it is advisable to enter at the beginning of a term.

EXPENSES.

Tuition, per week, $0.70. Boarding in private family, per week, $3.00. Tuition due one term in advance. A liberal discount will be allowed when payment is made for more than one term in advance.

The above rates are considerably lower than at most schools of the same grade. Students who prefer to board themselves or board in clubs can rent rooms suited to their purpose.

INSTITUTE SESSION.

The Institute Session of 6 weeks, beginning Aug. 1st, will accommodate teachers of Huntingdon and other counties, who may wish to review preparatory to annual examination. The school will not, however, be restricted to students of this class but will be opened for all who may desire to enter. Teachers who have more than the 6 weeks to spare can remain during part of the Fall term.

COURSE OF STUDY.

The course of study will embrace the branches taught at our best State Normal Schools and will be adapted, as far as possible, to the wants of those in actual attendance at any given time. Sound and thorough instruction will be given in all the branches taught, and it will be our aim to extend the course of study until it shall include all the requirements of a liberal education.

REFERENCE LIBRARY.

Students will find in the reference library Webster's New Unabridged Dictionary and also two complete Cyclopaedias of universal information.—Appleton in 16 large Vols. and Chambers in 10 Vols. Works like these cover the whole range of human knowledge and are indispensable to the student. The above, with several other works yet to be purchased or donated by generous friends, will give us a reference library that will compare favorably with those found at some of our State Normal Schools. If any of our liberal minded educational friends feel like aiding the cause they can do it in this particular, by donating books or that which may be turned into books. In that event their liberality will be acknowledged and recorded and will be a source of pleasure and profit to the youth who may come here for instruction.

READING ROOM.

We have also the facilities for fitting up a first class reading room, which will enable students, without expense, to keep themselves posted on the current events of the day, whether in the fields of science, literature, art, politics or religion. The publications now at hand, or accessible, are three or four dailies, such as the New York Tribune, The Witness, the Graphic, a number of excellent weeklies, both secular and religious, pictorial, and otherwise, and several of the leading magazines, including Harper, Lippincott, Scribner and the Popular Science Monthly. Others can be procured.

RELIGIOUS ADVANTAGES.

There is a comfortable church room in the Pilgrim Building which will answer for a chapel and in which religious services are held twice per week, at present,—preaching every Lord's Day and prayer-meeting one evening during the week. Sunday school and Bible classes will be organized. It is expected that students from abroad, especially members of the Brethren or German Baptist church, or the children of members, will frequent these services, and it is believed that such will find the meetings both pleasant and profitable, an uplifting power and a needed means of grace. Although no attempt will be made to teach or enforce sectarian dogmas or doctrines in the classroom, yet we have no sympathy with that pernicious system of education which confines itself to the training of the intellect and endeavors not to awaken and call forth the higher and holier impulses of the soul. Hence we shall employ every proper means to lead our pupils to realize in the deepest possible sense that the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom.

REMARKS.

Students on reaching Huntingdon should inquire for the Pilgrim Building, corner of 14th, and Washington St. Better take the omnibus, which will be found in readiness at the depot. Students should let us know when they expect to arrive and what accommodations they would like to secure on their arrival. Correspondents upon all matters pertaining to the school or the cause of education is solicited, especially from those who have children to educate or who are interested in our work—a work which will, we trust, meet the approbation of all good men and women and receive the coveted blessing of him whose righteous will we desire to make our sovereign Law. Dear Brother Quinter:

Your kind offer to send the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN for the current year gratis I accept under the present circumstances with thanks. But your request for me to write for your periodical surprises me, as the English is not my native tongue, and in other knowledge indispensably necessary to authorship, I am wholly untutored. Yet in the face of all these obstacles, I will transmit a few thoughts, which, if approved of, may appear in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. It is to illustrate the faith in God's providence and goodness with which Christians should be filled as with their own life-blood.

When a youth in my own native country (Switzerland), I read and studied the lives of the church fathers, of which I will try and translate from the original the following:

The Bread of Iodokus.

Iodokus, a servant of the Lord, lived in the 2nd century, in Syria. A great famine ravaged the country. To test his servant's purity, the Lord sent his poor to Iodokus to implore his charity.

"A poor man is at the door, steward; he is hungry and asks for bread, was Iodokus' summons to the housekeeper.

"Master, but one loaf remains of all our store."

"Give always, says the Abbee; the Lord will provide—he who feeds the raven. Divide the loaf into four. Feed the poor man, and there remains a piece for you and one for me and one for our faithful dog."

And the steward gave it. Soon another beggar came, hungry, naked and bare.

"Give him my morsel, good steward; the Lord will provide, who feeds the ravens."

And the steward gave it. And again God sent the poor, forlorn and given to extremities.

"Give always, good steward, give him your piece; the Lord is good, he will provide."

And the steward gave his piece.

And the fourth time, starving, sick and cold, the beggar made his appearance.

"Good steward, give him the dog's piece. Give always, and put your trust in God; he will never forsake us."

And the steward gave the last piece of bread.

Iodokus spent the night wakeful with his God alone. With the light of morning he saw two boats laden with bread and fruit and oil and wine lying in the river, on whose banks his cabin stood.—On the beach stood planted a white flag, inscribed in gilt letters with these words: "Four times thou hast fed me on thy last loaf." Trust in him who feeds the raven." E. RORSCHACH, Sr.

Editor Primitive Christian:

As I see calls from all parts of the west for preachers, I thought I would send in a request from this part of the country. Although I am not a member of the church, I claim to be a Christian, and am ever ready to hear the word of God from any one, and will endeavor to weigh, prove, and ponder with an unselfish heart.

In behalf of my wife, and several others of her brethren and sisters, I would make the request, that, any preacher passing through here shall stop off for a even and preach for us. Also, if any preacher wishes to locate in the west, he could not do better than to come here and stop with his brethren and sisters, and look at this country. It is a beautiful country. The soil is of the best, and there is no better locality in Nebraska, that I have seen or heard of. The church membership is small, but a splendid field of labor. The harvest is ripe for the reapers. "Come over and help us." Anyone wishing to correspond, can do so by addressing any one of these members or myself. J. Boyer or A. Suthin, Elmwood, or Moses Keefer, Greenwood, all in Cass county, Neb.

There are twelve members of the church in the county, that I know of; there may be more. The brethren have been calling on preachers at Falls City, (Stump, Foreney and others,) all winter, but they have had so many calls that they could not come.

On the Death of Alice Belle Younce.

In the lower Twin district of the church in the town of Camden, Preble county, Ohio, Alice Belle Younce, daughter of Wm. and Susannah Younce, departed this life on the 7th of January, 1876, aged 13 years, 6 months and 26 days.

For nearly four weeks she suffered extremely with typhoid pneumonia; but she bore her sufferings with remarkable fortitude and resignation for one so young. Her great concern was that she might recover to be a help to her dear mother, often expressing a desire to assist her when her enfeebled hands were trembling with disease.

Alice was a lovely child being endowed by God with beauty of mind as well as of person. Kind and obliging, quick and ever ready to assist those who might need her assistance, she gained and kept a great many friends, especially among her little school-mates. During her illness she often named each one of her many young friends that she had attended school with in Dayton, Ohio, and expressed a strong desire to see them, for she remembered and loved them all. About ten days before her death, while all around her couch were bathed in tears, thinking her end was at hand, the writer of this sketch said, "Allie, if you die, do you think you will go to heaven?" "Oh, yes; but I think I will get well." "But if you should not, Allie, you know Jesus will take you?" She looked up quickly and confidently replied, "Yes, but I think I will get well;"—so strong was her desire to live for her mother's sake. At one time her mother pressed her lips to hers, when she said, "I want to kiss Ma again—you are so good to me." A few days before she died, she clasped her hands, and her lips moved as if in prayer. Her weeping mother listened and caught the sounds gently whispered, "Our Father who art in heaven." A few moments before her spirit was released her breathing became hard and labored, when she closed her eyes, then gently opened them, when her breath came easy and calm; then she folded her little pale hands across her breast, and one of the sweetest, most heavenly smiles swept swiftly across her face, lighting it up with the look of an angel, leaving its impress there even after she had ceased to breathe, while her freed and exultant spirit winged its flight on angel pinions to the paradise of God. "Thus he giveth his beloved sleep."

Her funeral discourse was preached by brethren David Flory and Joseph Eikenberry, from 1 Thess. iv. 13, 14, "But I would not have you ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope.

"For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus, will God bring with him."

MARY E. THOMAS.

OTT, Coos Co., Oregon.

Dear Brother Quinter:

Please say to your readers that a very sad accident occurred among us on the 27th of March, 1876. Our young friend Jeremiah Barklow, aged about twenty-three years, while engaged at brother Hooyer's saw mill on the Coquelle River, and in assisting to get a log out of the boom, was killed by one of the irons that fastened in the end of the log, jerking out at the tightening of the rope, and striking him on the head. By this painful occurrence a young sister in the Lord has been bereft of a kind husband, who only two weeks and six days prior to this had been joined together in holy marriage bonds, and many relatives and friends were made to weep at the sudden and unexpected departure of one who, only a few moments before was in the enjoyment of good health, with perhaps as fair prospects for staying on earth many years as any of us. But how often and how soon our fondest anticipations of earthly happiness are gone. "God's ways are not our ways." Hence the silver cord is often severed when we least expect it.—Funeral services by the Brethren, to many sympathetic relatives and friends who, we trust, will profit by the solemn occasion, and especially do we feel to say to our departed friend's relatives who are yet waiting for the "more convenient season," that you are living in jeopardy every hour; for we, like many that have been called to eternity, neither know the day nor the hour, much less the manner of our death. "Repent and believe the gospel," is your reasonable duty.

J. H. ROBERTS.

TIME, Pike Co., Ill. }
March 14th, 1876. }

In No. 15 is an article in answer to the question, "How is this?" which I think is a word spoken in the right place and time. I think, with brother Ebersole, that, if there was a will, all calls could be filled. The way to spread the truth is, to go to the east, west, north, and south, and preach Jesus and him crucified. As the gospel door is still open and no man is able to shut it, let all work while it is day. As I read of so many different calls for preaching, and as many of them are responded to, I thought it would not be amiss to ask the Brethren to remember us, as we live about 20 or 25 miles from any organized church. There are 5 members of us; but in order to hear any preaching we have to go from 20 to 40 miles. I pen these lines, hoping and praying that the brethren will remember us in our isolated condition. Oh, remember us; and come and preach for us. We have a great many things to contend against, and many to contend for. The world the flesh and the devil create a perfect babel concerning spiritual things. I am asked a great many questions concerning the faith and practice of the Brethren. I always try, by the assisting grace of God, to give the best light I can in my weakness. I distribute my papers among my neighbors, knowing that even a very small light in a very dark place will shine.

SARAH SCOTT.

REMARKS.—We sympathize with sister Scott. We imagine we can see her, and the members with her, in their isolated condition. Seventeen years ago we spent a lonesome year at Milton, a few miles east of Time. During that year we were principally among the people who call themselves Disciples. They were very kind; and in many respects their teaching was so much like that of the Brethren, that we, to some extent felt at home among them. But there was still something—yes, several things—lacking. We did not find that self-denying spirit among them that is characteristic of the true children of God. Neither did we find them faithful in observing the ordinances of the Lord's house, according to their teaching. There was no correct baptism nor Lord's Supper, no feet-washing, no salutation with the holy kiss, no anointing of the sick oil in the name of the Lord. We remember how we wondered how a people could preach so much truth and practice so much error; and how we wished that some of the brethren could be induced to come there to preach the whole truth, and practice accordingly. But all was hopeless, as we did not then have the means of becoming acquainted with the whereabouts of the Brethren that we now have through our periodicals; and, although we liked the place, we left in pursuit of the true people of God. We imagine that the condition of sister Scott, and the members with her, is much the same. But it strikes us that Brother Wolfe and his colleagues in Adams Co., and the brethren in Macoupin county, could arrange to have regular meetings now in the neighborhood of Time.

Nine years ago we preached a few times at Milton, in the Disciple house, and we were much pleased with the interest that was manifested, and with the hearty invitations to return or to make arrangements with the brethren to have meetings there. This was about the time we left Illinois, but we wrote to Bro. Wolfe, of Liberty, and Bro. Gibson, in Macoupin county, in reference to the matter. It seems, however, that there was nothing more done in the way of preaching the gospel to these people. Why this is so we cannot tell; but we would advise the members at Time to open up correspondence with the ministers in the surrounding congregations, and to continue to invite and urge them to come, and we believe that their importunities will be regarded and their petitions considered and answered. What say you, Bro. Wolfe? How is it, Brother Vaniman? B.

Railroad Privileges.

I have made arrangements with the Grand Rapids Ft. Wayne and Richmond Railroad Company for half fare, for all that travel on said road for Annual Meeting. This is the agreement: "German Baptist Annual Conference Meeting to be held at DeGraff, Ohio. Limits return certificate, June 10th. 500 certificates needed. Cost of same to be paid by Conference. Return certificates to be signed by secretary of the meeting. This arrangement to benefit those paying full fare to Winchester." Now brethren, I promised the Company to call on all to use their road for your benefit and the Company's. This arrangement is certain between Grand Rapids and Richmond, from any station. Ask no question. When you go, pay full fare, but on your return have your certificate signed as mentioned. I will furnish the return certificates at the meeting. Winchester is on the Bellefontaine Railroad.

A Correction.

Brother Quinter:

I hereby inform you that there is a mistake in the announcement of our lovefeast, which is to be on the 3rd and 4th of June.

You have it in this week's paper the 23rd and 24th, which is wrong. Please correct it in next week's paper. The 3rd and 4th of June, 1876, is the correct time.

JOHN P. EBERSOLE.

Announcements.

We intend to hold a communion meeting at Plumcreek, Armstrong Co., Pa., June 30th, 1876, commencing at 5 o'clock P. M. By order of the council.

LEWIS KIMMEL.

The brethren have appointed a communion meeting in Turkey Creek church, Ekhart county, Ind., on the 15th of June, commencing at 10 o'clock, a. m. Meeting to be at Bro. Robert Wyson's house, 1 2 mile from the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. Those coming from the east will stop off at Gravelton. Those coming from the west will stop off at Nanpance.

J. MILLER.

Milford, Ind.

The brethren in the Maquoketa church, Clinton county, Iowa, expect to hold their communion meeting in their meeting-house, half mile east of Lost Nation, on the Sabula, Ackla and Dacotah railroad, June 22nd and 23rd, commencing at one o'clock.

By order of the church.

ISAAC BARTO.

Lost Nation, Iowa.

The brethren of the Lewistown congregation, Mifflin county, Pa., intend, the Lord willing, to celebrate the ordinances of the Lord's house, commencing on the 31st of May, at 1 1 2 o'clock, p. m. Will continue next day. Please notice this, brethren, and make arrangements to be with us. By order of the church.

JOHN M. MOHLER.

Lewistown, Pa.

A communion meeting will be held on the 3rd of June next in the Maple Grove district, Ashland county, Ohio, at the Maple Grove meeting-house, four miles north of Ashland station (situated on the Atlantic and Great Western railroad).—Meeting to commence at 10 a. m. and continue over Sabbath. Brethren coming from the east through Pittsburgh, Pa., to attend Annual Meeting, and wishing to stop with us over Sabbath, will, at Pittsburgh, take the Cleveland and Pittsburgh road to Ravenna, thence the Atlantic and Great Western to Ashland, at which place there will be conveyances to meet all trains on Friday; also Saturday morning, and at any other time, if notified.

MACOUPIN, CREEK CHURCH, }
Montgomery Co., Ill. }

Brother Quinter:

The Macoupin Creek church was formed out of the eastern part of Otter Creek church. Our church comprises one minister, four deacons, and fifty-four lay-members. We had our first quarterly meeting, April 29th. The church was well represented, and also had quite a number present from other churches.—The church business was all disposed of in good order. This church agreed to hold a lovefeast at Bro. C. T. Brown's, ten miles south-east of Girard, on the 16th and 17th of June, to commence at 5 o'clock, p. m.

We hereby extend an invitation for brethren to be present with us during our lovefeast. If any brethren coming by rail will inform the undersigned when they are coming, arrangements will be made to meet them at the station. By order of the church.

Address, Girard, Macoupin county, Ill., Box 72. J. E. STUDEBAER.

MARRIAGES.

By the undersigned, at his residence in Hughesville, Pa., May 2nd, 1876, Bro. RICHARD T. FOLLAR and Sister HANNAH KIMMEL, both of Armstrong county, Pa. J. B. WANPLER.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstance in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

Near May Hill, Adams county, Ohio, and in the Brush Creek church, on Saturday, April 1, 1876, Sister SUSAN KINZER, aged 61 years, 6 months and 10 days. She was the oldest daughter of Jonathan and Margaret Parker, and was born Sept. 15, 1814, was baptized by Elder Robert Calvert when about 25 years of age, and was married to Adam Kinzer by the same, on the 25th of December, 1845. For several years before her death, her life was one of intense suffering. She was afflicted with cancer in the breast, for more than three years, and for 14 months was in a manner helpless, only able to walk a portion of the time. Since August, 1875, she required the assistance of two strong men at all times, and fortunately for her, she was blessed with the attention of a kind husband, a daughter, and four sons, all strong young men able and willing, two of whom stayed by her couch all the time for eight months. She died very peacefully, April 1, 1876, at 7:15 p. m. Her funeral was preached at the house, April 3rd, by Bro. Mills Calvert, from 1 Peter, i. 24, 25, and the body was laid in the Brethren's burial ground in Highland county, that afternoon. LANDON WEST.

In the Montgomery congregation, Montgomery county, Virginia, our dear old sister, NANCY BREWER, after an illness of extreme severity for nearly four months. She breathed her last on Saturday morning, April 15th, 1876, being 69 years and 8 days old. Truly it can be said of her that she lived the life of a Christian, having her conversation in heaven, whence we look for the appearing of the great God and our Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ. So we sorrow not as those who have no hope; believing that she has fallen asleep in Jesus, therefore God will bring her with him. We tried to improve the occasion by reading Rev. xx, and the six last verses of Thess. iv, to quite a large congregation of bereaved relatives and friends. A. CRUMPACKER.

On the morning of the 20th inst., our dear old brother, JOHN MAURY, after a short but violent illness, fell asleep in Jesus, in the eighty-second year of his age; and while it is not our practice to compliment our deceased friends, I think I am justified in saying that few persons leave behind them a fairer escutcheon than our departed brother. During an acquaintance of nearly 40 years I have never, as I now remember, heard a word of reflection against the good name of Bro. Maury. In his social relations he was kind, and in his commercial intercourse he was prompt and strictly correct, and in church associations, faithful. Occasion improved by J. C. MOOMAW and others. B. F. MOOMAW.

On the 28th day of April, at the residence of J. S. Flory, Greeley, Colo., of a complication of diseases, HENRY WILES, of Stockdale, Indiana, aged 26 years. This estimable young man came to Colorado last fall and improved rapidly in health until about New Year, when he contracted a severe cold which terminated in his death. He was a man of good moral habits, a firm believer in the faith of the church and was to have been baptized the 7th of May, the Lord willing. The deiformant to that time was with his consent. He was perfectly resigned and willing to die, which he did without a struggle. Only one thing he regretted and that was, that he had put off baptism until it was too late to attend to it, but he trusted the Lord would forgive all. Oh! what another warning to those who continue to put off the necessary preparation for death until it is at the door. His many friends may be assured that though he died in a distant land, he was surrounded with hands who did all that was possible to alleviate his sufferings or administer to his needs. In his last moments, he, in a most affectionate manner remembered his mother, dying with that endearing name fresh on his lips. Enclosed in a metallic burial case his body was shipped by express to his friends. Peace to his ashes, and may God comfort the bereaved friends. J. S. FLORY.

Near Schellsburg, Iowa, Feb. 13th, 1876, of lung fever, FREDNY, infant son of Bro. William and Sister Elizabeth Pruett, aged 4 months and 4 days. Funeral services April 23rd, 1876, by the writer, from the words, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," Gen. ii. 17, and "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." 1 Cor. xv. 19. E. TROXEL.

In the Falls City church, Richardson county, Neb., March 28th, 1876, of consumption, Bro. HARMON LUTZ, aged 26 years, 10 months and 29 days. He leaves a widow with two small children and many friends and relatives to mourn their loss; but their loss is his eternal gain. Funeral services by the writer. C. FORNEY.

In the Jonathan's Creek arm of the church, April 13th, 1876, WM. HELSER, aged 68 years, 6 months and 16 days. He was the eldest and the first to die in a family of eleven children, and the only one that was not a member of the church, though one of the number having loved this present world, like Demas of old, joined the Grangers for the sake of gain, and walks not with God at this time; but may God bless and arouse him to a deep sense of his duty and cause him to return again to his allegiance to him. Funeral services by the writer.

Also, March 24th, 1876, in the Bush Creek church, our much esteemed old brother, ABRAHAM BEERY, aged 88 years, 9 months and 14 days. He was a zealous and faithful member of the church over 50 years and died in the triumphs of a living faith. Peace be to his ashes. Funeral services by the writer. W. ARNOLD.

Catarrh is a common disease, — so common that snuffing, spitting, and blowing of the nose, meet us at every turn on the street. Your foot slips in these nasty discharges on the sidewalk and in the public conveyance; and its disagreeable odor, contaminating the breath of the afflicted, renders them offensive to their associates. There is the highest medical authority for stating that with fully one-half, if not two-thirds, of those afflicted with Consumption of the Lungs, the disease commences as Catarrh in the nose or head, the next step being to the throat and bronchial tubes—lastly to the lungs. How important then to give early and prompt attention to a Catarrh! To cure this loathsome disease correct the system by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which tones it up, cleanses the blood, and heals the diseased glands by a specific influence upon them; and to assist, use Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche. This is the only way to reach the upper and back cavities where the discharge comes from. No danger from this treatment, and it is pleasant to use. The two medicines with instrument are sold by dealers in medicines.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE Brethren A WORK OF 400 Pages DEFENDED

Lately published, is a defense of the faith and practice of the Brethren on the following points: The Divinity of Christ and the Holy Spirit, Immersion vs. Affusion, Trine Immersion, Feetwashing, the Holy Kiss, Non-conformity, or Plainness of Dress, and Anti-secretism. The work is complete, and is so arranged that the arguments on each subject may be easily found and understood. It should have a wide circulation both among members and the world.

The work is printed in large, plain type, is neatly bound in cloth, and sells at the low price of $1 60 per copy by mail. When ordered by the dozen, a reduction of 10 per cent. and the express charges will be made.

The work may be had at this office or from the author,

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

WHAT IS LIFE INSURANCE?

APPOXY, &c.—Many people insure their lives to benefit their families by death; how paradoxical is this. To prolong life by preserving the health would be a far more rational manner of assuring it. Apoplexy is swift and insidious in its attacks, striking its victim without a moment's warning; happily a preventative has been discovered—

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS,

—the only safe and certain antidote for this disease; they cool the blood and equalize its circulation through the system. To preserve the stomach in a sound condition and the blood pure is

THE TRUE SECRET OF HEALTH,

Holloway's Pills will do this most effectually, and thousands owe their actual existence to them, at the present day. 183

* * * Sold at the Manufactory of Professor HOLLOWAY & Co., New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents, and $1 each.

CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the signature of J. HOLLOWAY, as agent for the United States, surrounds each box of Pills and Ointment. PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN is published every Tuesday at $1.60 a year, postage included.

This Christian journal is devoted to the defense and promotion of Primitive Christianity, as held and practiced by the Church of the Brethren, or German Baptists.
 They accept the New Testament as the only proper rule of faith and practice, and hold to the observance of all its commandments and doctrines; among which are Faith, Repentance, Baptism by Trine Immersion, Prayer, the Washing of the Saints' Feet, the Lord's Supper, the Communion, Non-Resistance, Non-Conformity to the world, and the Perfecting of Holiness in the fear of the Lord.

As space will permit, some attention will be given to such secular matters as may be judged instructive to our readers.

ENTRANCE.

BY CAROLINE D. SWAN.

At the world's great castle-gate

A beggar cries.

"To wealth and state we open wide,
To the worldly-wise, in purple pride,"

A voice replied.

"Alack!" said she, "for the loving heart
And naught beside."

Expectant at a mightier gate

The worldly-wise

Stand waiting by its golden bars,
Till wonder-pears and gleaming stars

Swing open wide

For her who brings the loving heart
And naught beside.

A Fragment.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

That which is used is the thing of power. What we defend as a matter of opinion, although it be the most essential truth of the Bible, and deny as a matter of life, "becomes as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal." Pulpit gongs may rally devils but they disperse angels. Pulpit tinklers may make a lively jingle, but it is the jingle of empty, brassy self. There is a hollow ring in the utterance of truths we do not exemplify. That which we feel, realize, of the inbeing of God, will be spoken with the authority of a Divine message. There are multitudes of great speakers who utter eloquently what they have never experienced; but they cannot wholly hide the real behind the seeming. The true spontaneity will testify against them. They cannot proceed far before the assumed is lost in the real, in word, or look, or gesture. Often the very effort to be affecting and melting, brings out most sharply the clinking of the cymbal. The strain they put upon tone and feature, is like the dry, empty rattle of a withered kernel in a nut, and the distortions of a gutta-percha doll. There are many whose fluency and apt illustrations and glowing imaginations, have power to entrance vast multitudes. They are objects of admiration, and subjects of eulogium, and the recipients of adulation, until they become magisterial and insupportably egotistical. To contradict them is to stir into a nest of vipers.

The prime-ministership in the realm of Ahasnerus does not yield them so much pleasure as the withholding of Mordecai's reverence galls them. Their heart holds a gallows for all who decline to give themselves, as parts of the pavement for their triumphal march. Idolized by themselves and others, as the Apollos of the Church, they are intolerant to the intimation that they may be only living sepulchers in which dead, corrupt hearts be entombed. But, alas! the sequel proves that the blackest devil can strut in unstained linen. The putting on and the putting in, and the robing from within, is what constitutes the Israel of God. It would be an achievement indeed to wash a devil white, but it is easy for the blackest heart to "steal the livery of Heaven to serve the devil in." All things and natures are under gravitation, and are in constant transition toward some centre. These pulpit Goliaths are not mighty enough to resist the silent power of "the law of sin and death." They steadily move toward the precipice even when they imagine they are rowing in the opposite direction. The noiseless sweep of the downward current is mightier than their feeble tug at the oars. The strongest pull of self cannot arrest our descent. The weight of our bodies defies the utmost energy of will to raise them into the air. The concentrated powers of body, soul, and spirit, cannot support us ten seconds in an aerial position. We can by jumping elevate ourselves a few seconds, but it is only a jump, and we are again on terra firma. An intellectual preacher has no wings. Having only feet, his supreme law is terrestrial gravitation, whose centre is—Hell. The regenerate ambassador has both feet and wings. Is. xl. 31. Being a pedestrian only, the self-inspired, self-worshipping minister, while ravishing thousands of hearts with glowing delineations of Heaven, is traveling downward, downward, ever downward, the chasm between message and character opening wider and wider, till he slips over the edge, and disappears in the boiling caldron of wrath below.

Oh the danger of lofty intellectual endowments! and how many things contribute to consummate the ruin of gifted ministers! Not a few have fallen into the foulest cesspool of carnality, and others exhibit the levity which is the precursor of the most revolting scandals. There is no apostasy without its premonitions. When idle talk, silly stories, the ripping open of old fables, boasting, laughing, undue familiarity between the opposite sides of human nature below the point where they become one in Christ, a general unchristianity in word and look and act—when such manifestations fill up the intervals between sermons, we may be sure Satan is stewing a mess for the enemies of the Gospel. Within the past year I saw two noted evangelists, spending weeks at a time in conducting Divine services among the Brethren, one with eyes red and dim with weeping over sin and sinners, while the other became repulsive to many of the saints, and even to the more thoughtful portion of the unregenerate, by his self-laudations, his unchristian witticisms, his nauseous sneaking, and unsavory deportment in general. Those who speak well should live well. To show off one's gold-and-silver-tipped plumes, is an evidence that in heart we still lie among the pots. Psalm lxxviii. 13. "The hill of God is as the hill of Bashan," and those that reach its summit are "white as the snow in Salmon." When the cedar falls, well may the fir-tree howl. When Lebanon takes fire, and the forest of the vintage is felled, well may the oaks of Bashan howl. Zech. xi. 1, 2. When the Samsons lose their locks, they are not far from losing their eyes, and from the wearisome grinding of the prison-house. When Jonah takes ship at Joppa, and steers for Tarsish, then look out for the whale. Thank God if the behemoth of the deep vomits out his captives this side of Hell. "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall. Let him that *inclinet*h to fall, take warning lest he fall to rise no more. Let him that has been dandled to sleep on the lap of Delilah, and has become the slave of sin and the sport of devils, take courage from the consideration that the Nazarene's locks may grow again. The grinding for sin may be the grinding of sin, and then woe to the philistines, deliverance to the captive, and glory to God. "He that hath ears to bear, let him." "GOD IS NOT MOCKED."

The Prize.

BY CHARLOTTE T. BOND.

There was a custom in ancient times among the people to meet on certain days to run races and exercise their physical power. The fastest runner was awarded a prize. In most of our institutions of learning in this day a prize also is given to stimulate to industry and energy. And the most proficient in their studies are presented some article as a prize. But the prize most to be desired, and the one we should labor for, is the one spoken of by the apostle when he says, "I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." It is evident from the language of the Scriptures, that there should be an urgency and pressing forward in the matter; a determination to win in the race. In another place the apostle says, "So run that ye may obtain." And we are told that we may obtain an "incorruptable crown as a prize. Should not this stimulate us to every good work? Let us not be slothful servants, but let us be doing and doing to the purpose. Those that have been blessed with plenty of this world's goods, have they not the poor always with them? and they can help them whensoever they will. We are told that "he that giveth to the poor, lendeth to the Lord." What a glorious privilege it is to be allowed to lend to the Lord. And another thought; in giving, there is a blessing for the giver as well as for those that receive, for it is said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." It may be there are some that would like to give, but they have no money or goods to give. Let such know that kind and encouraging words will contribute greatly toward strengthening and building up souls in the most holy faith, and aiding them in running the race, that may obtain the crown. Let us in every way improve the talents given us, no matter in what way the Divine master has bestowed them, for we will be called upon to give an account of our stewardship. And where much is given much will be required." "God loveth the cheerful giver," therefore it is incumbent upon us to give cheerfully and freely in a spirit of love and kindness, and in a way that the objects of our charity will feel no indebtedness to us. For we are commanded to give, expecting nothing in return. And thus should we journey on, constantly employed in every work which Jesus has commanded, for he says, "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee the crown of life." Let us keep our lamps trimmed and burning, that we may prove to the world that nothing can move us, or cause us to swerve from the path of duty, and that we are pressing forward for the prize. Let us inspire faith in others by the strength and constancy of our own straightforward course in duty. For this will have a strong tendency to arouse others and draw them into the race for the prize. And if God in his mercy should give us the blessed privilege of aiding in bringing some into the fold, and they should press onward and upward and wear the incorruptible crown, it seems if anything could add to our joys in that bright world to which we are hastening, it would be the thought that there were some with us that will be blessed through all eternity, whom we had cheered and encouraged through their pilgrimage in this life, and that they with us had finished the race and obtained the crown.

Different Classes of Ministry.

BY MATTIE A. WORKMAN.

Is the soul such an excellent thing? and is the loss thereof so unspeakably great? Then this should teach the people to be careful to whom they commit the teaching and guidance of their souls. This is a business of the greatest concern. Men will be careful to whom they commit their children, whom they make the executors of their wills, in whose hand they trust the writing and evidences of their lands, but how much more careful should we be unto whom we commit the teaching and guidance of our souls. And yet most men are in these matters least of all careful.

There are idol shepherds; Zech. 11: 7.

There are foolish shepherds; Zech. 11: 15.

There are shepherds that feed themselves, and not their flock; Ezek. 34: 4.

There are hard hearted and pitiless shepherds; Zech. 11: 3.

There are shepherds that, instead of healing, smite and wound the diseased; Ezek. 34: 4—21.

There are shepherds that cause their sheep go astray; Jer. 50: 6.

Now is the Lord to blame for those foolish shepherds? I say, No, no; we as a church are to blame. The Lord gave his rule and word how to choose a shepherd to rule over his church (1 Timothy, 3: 1—5.)

Now if the minister lives up to those words, we know we have chosen a true shepherd, one that the Lord will own and bless. These are the shepherds that feed their flocks; these are the shepherds to whom thou shouldst commit thy soul for teaching and for guidance. But if we have chosen a minister and he does not live up to the rule and word of our heavenly Master, has he any promise of the Lord that his labors will be blessed? The word says that he must rule his own house, for if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God? The house that is not ruled by the word, abounds in iniquity. A man may be used as a servant in the church of God, and may receive many gifts, and much knowledge of the things of heaven, and yet at last himself be no more than a very bubble. Alas! all their religion lieth in their tongues and heads, and is "as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal." A man's house, and his conduct there, do more bespeak the nature and temper of his mind than all his public professions. If I were to judge of a man, I would not judge of him by his open profession, but by his domestic behavior. Open profession is like a man's best cloak, which is worn by him when he walks abroad, and with many is made but little use of at home. Know what a man is at home, and that he is in deed and in truth. These are the good shepherds and God loves them, and they love to make religion, the power of Godliness, the chief desire at home before those whom God, by his special hand, has placed there. This is pleasing to God and is that which obtaineth a good report of him. Gen. 18: 16—19; 1 Tim. 3: 7.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Time.

BY J. F. KAHLER.

Time is a measured portion of duration; a period; a state of existence; a time to live. All the time which we may claim is the time allotted unto us by the divine providence of the Almighty. When death meets us, time with us is no longer. How true the language of the poet:

"Time is winging us away
To our eternal home,
Life is but a winter's day,
A journey to the tomb."

Time is hurrying us to that long home where time is not computed by days, months, and years, but is one shoreless and endless stream of duration. We may lose some earthly treasure, but we hope to find it again, or to get something in the place of it; but not so with time. Time lost can never be found. Oh, how important is our time here! Compared with eternity it is but a breath—a particle—a speck of the endless years of infinite duration. The wheels of time are ever rolling, and will continue to roll, until the mighty angel, with one foot on the sea and the other on the earth, shall swear by him that liveth forever, that time shall be no longer. How happy the thought of the Christian! in the language of the poet:

“When we've been there ten thousand years,
Bright shining as the sun,
We've no less days to sing God's praise,
Than when we first began.”

But, on the other hand, how sad the thought of the doomed, who are reserved unto everlasting punishment, where hope is a stranger, and mercy can never be obtained. Oh, what horror clings to the thought that the time of suffering there will be eternal!

Dear reader, if you are not yet prepared to meet your God in peace; if you have not yet taken up the cross to follow your Savior in his footsteps in that narrow way that leads to life eternal and joys on high, consider how short your time is. To-day you live and to-morrow you may die; and oh, how sad it will be when you, perhaps, must take a last farewell of an affectionate father and mother, a sister or brother, to take your abode with the devil and his angels, where there will be wailing and gnashing of teeth! Inasmuch, then, as our time is so short compared with eternity, let us use it to the glory and honor of God, and our soul's eternal salvation, that it may be well with us both in time and eternity.

On the Brink.

Dear reader, did it ever occur to you how near you may be, at this moment, upon the brink of another world? You are now in what you suppose to be in tolerably good health. You take good rations regularly, perform your daily task, and attend to your daily avocation; you have the usual anxieties, the wear and tear of life; the worriment common to all; the warring of the flesh with the Spirit. Your passions spur you, and you are, in all respects, very much like the ten thousand of whom you read, or hear tell of, or whom you meet on the journey through life. Accidents happen and men are cut off in a moment, when least expecting it. Persons are struck by lightning, swallowed up by floods, crushed by railway trains, thrown down precipices, kicked by horses, mangled by machinery, or suffocated in coal mines. One trips and falls upon the ice, or on a slippery pavement, and breaks a leg, an arm, or his head. In our various hospitals, to-day, there are thousands of such unfortunates awaiting the hour of their departure, or, possibly, the day when they may be released through recovery. Thousands are swallowing poison every day in the form of alcoholic stimulants; thousands are narcotizing their systems by tobacco or opium, or by some other drug. Many are pumping the blood into their brain unduly by excessive night-work, and, like Miller, preparing the way to insanity or suicide. One may be a preacher, and by protracted mental effort, break down his nervous system, and become a fit subject for the asylum, the mad-house, or the hospital; or, in his worn-out state he is retired, or shelved among old lumber, as being no longer fit for use.

This may occur, not only in old age, but even in middle age. How many, to-day, stand on the brink, where the slightest circumstance will overthrow them? Some are liable to apoplexy and heart disease, and such may die in a minute's notice, and with no other warning than an undue palpitation of the heart.

Here is a man “who lives too high,” becomes plethoric, takes too little exercise, or dissipates. If remonstrated with, he assures you he is not a great eater, but what he eats seems to go to fat, and he is thus drowned in adipose. He is on the brink.

Add to the above enumerated causes of death those still more numerous, and which are embraced among the common diseases; and then consider the epidemics—cholera, yellow fever, small-pox, scarlet fever, &c.—and it will be apparent to the reader that we all stand on the brink. Still most of us live on carelessly of the future, indulging in the forbidden circles of the world, whether their effects incline us upward in the scale of humanity or downward in the scale of animality. Our bodies are formed of what we subsist upon. Good food makes good blood; poor food, poor blood. Good soil produces a healthy, vigorous plant; poor, sterile soil, a poor, stunted plant. Pure blood, good tissue, good bone, muscle, nerve, and a fair mind are hygienic products, while the blood made from coarse substances makes gross bodies, gross brains, and gross minds. We are constantly changing, growing better or worse, depending on how we live and on what we subsist. Those who think, those who have a regard for themselves and their posterity, will so live as to transmit healthful conditions, by which their names may be perpetuated; while those who violate the laws of life and health, will be cut off. The good Scriptures say that “the wicked shall not live out half their day.” Let us be mindful, watchful, guarded, prudent; and although we may be standing on the brink, with one foot a step only from the grave, we may, by proper living, and by the providence of God, continue our existence here; or, by the same providence, if we violate the laws of our being, we shall be cut off in a twinkling. Let us look to our habits, and let us not violate the laws of our being.

The Sinner's Plea.

It is this name—the name of him who is full of grace and truth—that is the beginning as well as the ending of the sinner's confidence and joy. To go to God with this one name as my plea, is all I need to secure a large and loving answer.

Why, then, am I hesitating? Whence so many doubts? How is there so little confidence in this heart of mine, when I bow the knee before the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ? It is because I falter in pronouncing the name he loves so well, and delights to honor so much. If I doubt or distrust, it must be because I have not fully understood the infinite value of the name, and God's willingness to give effect in that name in the case of every sinner who will but consent to employ it as a substitute for his own. So that as soon as I learn the value of this name, and consent to exchange it for my own, I became “accepted in the Beloved,” and cannot but rejoice in that name. My joy comes from what I have found in that name. I have found in it a substitute for my own. I have found in it a well of holy love. And because of these things “I rejoice all the day.” When I begin to exchange that name for my own again, immediately doubting and disquietude ensue. But so long as I set aside my own, and employ that name alone, my joy abounds, and my feet stand immovably on the rock which no storm can shake.

It is best to endure what you cannot mend, and without murmuring to attend upon God, by whose ordering all things come to pass. He is a bad soldier who follows his captain complaining.—Seneca.

THE MORNING LAND.

I have heard of a far-off country—

It lieth beyond the dark tide,
Yet far o'er the loud-surfing billows,
Shine gleams from the glory-lit side;
And a bridge of bright thoughts thrown over,
Doth span the rough chasm so wide.

I have heard of a land of Summer,
Whose beauty the frost never chills;
Its fragrance is wafted forever

On breezes that play o'er the hills;
And the glad summer-song of the harvest
The air with its melody fills.

I have heard of a land of Morning—

I have heard when the night brooded o'er,
And in darkness I yearned for the dawning
To break from the Orient shore,
When the cold clouds in silence retreating,
Should hover at evening no more.

I have heard of a land of Pleasure—

Strange world to this desolate clime!
It speaks to the ear of the mourner,
To the sad and the softening of time,
And it tells of a region where sorrow
Shall burst into rapture sublime.

I have heard of a land Eternal—

And the loved who have left me to sigh,
I shall meet o'er there in the mornings,
When the dark clouds have drifted by;
And long shall we stay in that country,
For like angels we never shall die.

Samson's Power and Fall.

BY J. S. FLORY.

"And he said, The Philistines be upon thee, Samson. And he awoke out of his sleep, and said, I will go out as at other times before, and shake myself. And he wist not that the Lord was departed from him." Judges 16:20.

The burden of our subject that we wish to present on this occasion is couched in the latter clause of the verse quoted.

1. We shall endeavor to show what kind of a man Samson was while the Lord was with him.

2. Why it was that the Lord departed from him.

3. The consequent result of being forsaken of God.

Under the first head we remark that Samson was a man raised up of the Lord that he might be instrumental in delivering the children of Israel out of the hands of the Philistines. It was ordained that he should be a "Nazarite unto God from the womb." Consequently he was at an early day blessed by the Lord. "The Spirit of the Lord began to move him at times in the camp of Dan." And when the Spirit of the Lord was upon him he was endued with wonderful strength and power, so much so, that a lion was no more to him than a kid,—strong cords as burnt flax, and the jaw bone of an ass in his hand became as a mighty sword by which he mowed down a thousand of the Philistines as a mighty army would do it. When the Spirit of the Lord was upon him he feared neither beasts or legions of men, though they came in the solid phalanx of battle array. While the Lord was with him, he was a man mighty indeed, in strength, and a terror to his enemies—the enemies of the Living God. We invite special notice to the wonderful power Samson had while the Spirit of the Lord was upon him. What he did, he did not in his own strength, but through the power given him by the Lord. The Spirit of the Lord finally forsook him, and an investigation of the cause will bring us to our second heading.

2. Samson being of "like passions" with the human family, and surrounded with a people of lax morals, was enticed to join hands with harlots. One at Gaza and also one in the valley of Sorek, whose name was Delilah. Even while engaged in his adulterous course, he for a time continued to exercise his delegated powers; but eventually the Lord departed from him and left him to the mercy of his enemies. Having lain down to sleep upon the lap of Delilah who with loving words lulled him to a calm repose, little did he suspect that within that bosom lurked the demon of deception and treachery; that in consequence of the offers of money she would dare to betray him and send him forth to be led captive by his enemies. Or if he did suspect anything of the kind, he was so presumptuous as to trust in the powers he had, so when he awoke he said, "I will go out as at other times before, and shake myself." As a lion that cometh forth from his lair to kill and devour, so Samson expected to go forth and slay his enemies. But alas! for the mighty man had lingered too long in the courts of iniquity—had gone too far in tempting the Lord—had slept once too often in the lap of his chosen spouse. The strong man was shorn of his locks—the outward sign by which he was known as a Nazarite to God was taken away, and with it went his strength—that strength that cometh from the Lord. But "he wist not that the Lord was departed from him." He knew it not then, but soon to his great sorrow he found it out. This will now bring us to consider the sad results.

3. The result was that having been forsaken by the Lord, he fell into the hands of the Philistines. Like a weak child he was at their mercy. They put out his eyes, carried him away captive, bound him with "fetters of brass" and put him to "grind in the prison house." He thus became a servant of the Philis-tinies, instead of a servant of God. Great indeed was his fall; truly "the way of the transgressor is hard." A warning to all to keep far from her "whose feet go down to death; her steps take hold on hell."

Finally, Samson came to a violent death in company with the enemies of the Lord. He died with the very people it was designed he should deliver the children of Israel from. Having been enticed to share their sins with them, his reward has a share in their judgments. Having now presented our readers with an account of the rise and fall of Samson, and these things being written for "ensamples for us" we will make an application of the general subject in a manner appropriate to our day and time. Hoping we may all learn a lesson therefrom.

Under the gospel dispensation, men do not receive through the instrumentality of God's Spirit bodily strength in the sense Samson did, but now as we are to worship God in spirit and in truth, we become strong spiritually, when the Spirit of God comes upon us. That is, when we become in possession of the Holy Spirit, Samson-like we may rend the "lion" who goeth about seeking whom to devour; we may burst the cords of sin, or wield the "sword" with such power as to lay our enemies at our feet. This power comes from the Lord when we are "ordained to eternal life"—are raised up to fight for the Israel of God. We become a "Nazarite to God from the womb," that is, from the day we are "born of the water and of the Spirit." Christ being a Nazarene and the Son of God, and we being of the same Father when "born of God," become like him. Samson was raised up to be an instrument in the hands of God to deliver Israel from oppression; so are the servants of God now to be a light to the world—a salt to the earth; but now like Samson we are too easily enticed to partake of the world's sins. Take a church community for instance, and there is often a falling away from the simplicity of the gospel, a spiritual fornication with the great harlot—the world. Delilah putteth the church to sleep with her syren song, calleth the enemies of the church—the worldly minded, to rob her of her "seven locks" wherein is the power of the Lord. She may awake, or be aroused to a sense of activity, and go forth in a presumptuous spirit, and say we will "go out as at other times and shake ourselves." But alas! she "wist not that the Lord was departed from her." She is not aware that her only strength is that of carnal men; and the result is, the church is led captive by the Philistines—the world—blinded and bound with “fetters of brass”—and put to grind in the prison house of the world. Yes, taken by the spirit of popular religion, she does not know that the Lord has departed from her. And at last, like Samson, all will go down together in one common ruin.

As applicable to individuals, it is often the same. The sweet smiles of “Delilah” win many a one to her embraces. She, the fascinating spirit of the world would fain lull any “Samson” to sleep upon her knee, divest him of his identity—his strength and power. Samson wore the outward sign of a Nazarene. This was taken from him and his power also departed. If the outward fruits of humility and obedience be shorn off by the world, how natural for the power to do good, also to depart. And yet such “wist not that the Lord hath departed.” Their identity as being obedient to the church is lost, and yet they claim to go out as before and in the strength of holiness, when in fact they have no power other than their own strength. Sad, sad indeed is the state of such that know not that the Lord has departed, and blindly go on to their work to the benefit, glory and honor of the world, rather than to God. And such will be the ultimate end of every soul that is enticed from the humble walks of Christianity to the courts of vanity and folly. When I say Christianity, I mean the Christianity that embraces all that is in the gospel.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Implore God to Give us the Victory.

BY C. F. DETWEILER.

I would recommend the day previous to the beginning of the labors of the Annual Meeting as a special day of fasting and prayer. This is a subject that has much occupied my thoughts, and it is from a deeply felt motive within that I am moved to write a few words on the subject, assuming in the start, that the church has always been a prayerful people. Prayer is as absolutely necessary to the spiritual life of the church as breath is to physical life; and the existence of the church in its present state, is evidence that the vital part of the church has been fervently exercised in this divine calling.

All the grace or virtue that a church can possess, is not an attainment of its own; but it is the unmerited gift of God, else grace would not be grace. If the propagation of Christian holiness had nothing stronger to hang upon than the arduous labors, the wise counsels, and the firm decisions of the mortal beings that compose the visible church, it would long before now have been among the things of the past. Grace is not the fruit of these labors but these labors are the fruits of grace.

We have no reason to suppose that a single member engages in the labors of the Annual Meeting without prayer; but it is far from improbable that fervent prayer, implicit faith in God, and unreserved resignation to his divine will, are in some degree, wanting, while human foresight may be too much depended upon. The future of the church does not as much depend upon the apparently clear sky above, as it does upon the grace of him that is beyond our sight. His favor can be obtained by implicit faith and fervent prayer.

More than two centuries ago, a class of people noted for strict piety, in view of existing differences, and in assumed foresight of a future need of something to bind in a brotherly union on the basis of the word of God, met in council from time to time, to labor for the much desired end. After a number of years they succeeded in uniting upon a number of “Articles of Faith,” in a synod at Dort, in Holland. These articles were to constitute a basis of church government and religious unity in the future. The people who claim allegiance to these articles, at least, those with whom I am intimately acquainted, spend a portion of time with the applicants for membership each Sabbath day, for several months, to instill into them the principles of their faith, and the teachings of these articles, before they are received into the church. These people are at the present time divided into divisions and factions the number of which it is doubtful whether any human being knows. This is the efficiency of human foresight. The length of time in the future that the church of the Brethren will be spared from such a state, depends upon the continued unmerited favors of him who alone can heal our infirmities.

When Moses on Mount Sinai stood between God and his people, they had fallen into a greater dilemma than mortal opposition. Yea, the whole church was a mass of stiffnecked disobedience itself, and had fallen into the displeasure of a just God. The words had already gone forth: “Let me alone that my wrath may wax hot against them, and that I may consume them.” Moses had no personal interest in their salvation, for he was in favor with God, and had the promise of a nation greater than they; but he poured forth his soul in prayer, and the people were spared. When the armies of Syria compassed about the city Dothan, to apprehend the prophet of God; when his servant was risen and cast his eyes upon the Syrian host, he exclaimed, “Alas! my master, how shall we do?” But his master said, “Fear not; for they that be with us are more than they that be with them.” By faith he captured the Syrian host, and by love he conquered them. This is the efficiency of perfect faith. Such faith and love as that of Moses, Elisha and many others of old, would indeed be a power in the church that the gates of Hell could not prevail against.

O! what a volume there is in the command of three words, “Watch and pray.” Let us watch that we be not among those who ask and receive not, because they ask amiss; and pray that we be not among those who receive not, because they ask not.

Obedience.

BY H. P. BRINKWORTH.

That obedience is a Christian duty, I suppose none will deny; but those who have professed Christ before a gainsaying world, differ in their views of the way in which this obedience is required at their hands. Some will claim that certain positive commands laid down in Holy Writ are non essential; others, again, will say that such ordinances are laid down to teach humility, which they have already taught, and therefore it has done those persons good, for they have obeyed the Divine injunction, whilst at the same time they will persistently refuse to practice that humble act, which will doubtless humble them to the degree that it is designed it should. They offer only a feeble plea against the command, but will often say, “We are not taught that by our teachers (ministers); it is not required at our hands in the church organization to which we belong.” Ah! reader, that is an excuse that I fear will not stand the test at the last day. When the Book that the Revelator tells us of shall be opened, and the Word of God shall stand to judge us, and the plain commands, “If ye love me, keep my commandments”—“If ye know these things happy are ye if ye do them”—“Search the Scriptures, for they testify of me,” shall stand forth, and we are called upon to answer as to whether we have obeyed these Scriptures, I greatly fear that we should be able to read condemnation in the countenance of many. And think you that it will be a good time then to make excuse. Think for one moment of the man who was at the wedding feast without the wedding garment on. The Master saith, “How earnest thou in hither, not having on a wedding garment.” We find him speechless. Will not thou also be speechless when asked the above questions? “Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." 1 Samuel 15:22. This is the language of Samuel to Saul, who had disobeyed God. He had saved Agag the king, and all the best of the flock, when told to utterly destroy, and spare not anything. Saul would fain throw the blame of his disobedience on the people. He was their king, and having broken God's command in sparing king Agag, the people felt justified in saving some of the spoils, to sacrifice unto the Lord their God. It is just so at the present day. The ministers are our leaders. We disobey the commands of God in not being a separate people from the world; for we tell our pastor that in order to pay off this church debt, to pay up the salary of our leader, and various other things, we must have a festival, or picnic, or some other worldly amusement; invite the world to join in with us to pay this debt; our recreation, our lotteries, &c., are for a religious purpose, they are sacrifices to our blessed Saviour and therefore are all right. The leader consents, although at the same time he knows it is against God's word, like Saul; and as soon as his consent is given, it is no longer looked upon as sin. Whom did God condemn, Saul or the prophet? Certainly it was Saul. He acknowledged he had sinned, because he feared the people, and so obeyed their voice. Oh, ye that are set as watchmen upon the walls of Zion, are you afraid lest you offend the people? "To obey is better than sacrifice." "But whose looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed James 1: 25. So we see again that we must not only know the law, but we must, in order to clear ourselves from its condemning power, obey it to the full extent, in every part, for he that offendeth in one point is guilty of all. Should we not, then, be very particular, and examine ourselves, lest we also through disobedience come short of the glory of God, and hear our judge say, "I never knew you?" What an amount of sin and misery this, as it is considered, small act of disobedience has caused. Through disobedience Adam and Eve were turned out of the garden of Eden; Moses entered not into the earthly Canaan, but seeing it afar off he sank to rest on Mount Nebo; and many others came short of the promises, but space will not admit of them now. It remains with you now, my dear reader, to know whether you are obeying what you know to be the positive commands of God. If not you most assuredly know the result awaiting those who reject God's Holy law, who trample under foot the precious promises, the Divine precepts. I warn you to return. There is danger ahead. God desires the undivided heart in obeying him. He wants no part reserved for any contaminating power. What concord hath Christ with Belial? or what communion hath light with darkness? Ye cannot serve God and Mammon. "Come out from among them, and be a separate people; touch not the unclean thing," then your God will receive you, and not till then. Shall we obey man rather than God? God forbid! Oh, for that desire to serve our Maker in all his appointed ways! May God enable us to do so, is my sincere and heartfelt desire.

Teach All Nations.

BY D. A. BAILY.

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations," are words which fell from the lips of him unto whom all power was given in heaven and in earth, who is the head of all principalities and powers. If we love him, we will keep his sayings. But how often it is said that all nations have been taught, in order to shun one of the divine precepts, or to shift the responsibility of this duty. Such I ask, in candor, has not baptism been practiced in all nations as well as the teaching? and if the one is to be discontinued why not the other? They are inseparable. God has joined them together, and who dare put them asunder? "How shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?" (Rom. 10:14.) It is the duty of the church to send forth the teachers into all the world, to preach Christ and him crucified; for the command is there yet, unchanged, and it cannot be changed nor erased, only by him who gave it. If this command is non-essential, then why not call all non-essential, and strike hands of fellowship with other so-called Christians of the present day. But not so, brethren, "Go preach my gospel" is as binding on us today as it was when the Brethren who had possessions, over 1800 years ago, sold them and brought the proceeds and laid them at the feet of the apostles, that the word might be preached, without financial hindrance, unto all the world. Is not this a good example and worthy of imitation? This should we be willing to spend and be spent for the cause of Christ, counting all things but dung so that we may win Christ. Love not the world, brethren, neither the things of the world, but love the millions of precious souls that are passing from time to eternity unprepared, and a part of them only because the church is not obeying the word of God. Oh brethren, you that have means, think of this, and in thinking act; for when we appear before the Judge of the quick and dead, and this Book is opened which shall stand when heaven and earth shall have passed away, and the Judge shall read therefrom "Go preach my gospel to all nations," what can you say? or how shall we escape? Will we then say, "Your gospel was preached unto all the world, and we thought that that was enough?" Oh, how we will then wish we had observed all things whatsoever he had commanded us! Will not some one press this all-important duty on the minds of the brethren, until they begin to act? A brother wrote to me not long since that "God has not put freedom into America for nothing, and if we do not act as believing, lively saints, God will not be pleased with us." Just so, brethren, your barns are full, your houses are warm, and your purses are strained to cover the mighty dollars (the love of which is the root of all evil,) and poor souls, precious souls, are passing into eternity unprepared, for the want of a little money. Are we not yet ready to forsake all and follow him? Let us lay aside every weight and the sin that doeth so easily beset us, and run with patience the race that is set before us, obeying God in all of his appointments. Let every one lay by him in store, upon the first day of the week, as the Lord has prospered him; and when this money is called for by the elder of the church, give it to him, that he may give it unto those who are chosen or sent to preach the gospel to all nations. What I have written is a matter which has been on my mind for a long time, and being pressed by the spirit to write, I have written.

Christ and the Constable.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To a Bishop of a Western Church.

Constables and police-officers at a Lovefeast, exercising their function by order of the Brethren, is a gross violation of the laws of Christ's Kingdom. "He that saveth his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it." Matth.

16:25. This is the law. "I say unto you, that ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." Matth. 5:39. This is the law. "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." Matth. 5:44. This is the law. Is there room here for a constable? "He was led as a sheep to the slaughter; and like a lamb dumb before his shearer, so opened He not His mouth." Acts 8:32. This is the law. There was no constable on hand to interpose between the Son of God and personal violence. "In His humiliation His judgment was taken away." What! "His judgment taken away?" Had they no constables? Death was the great purpose of His life, both as an expiation and an example; and a resort to civil officers at the time we celebrate His death, is a shocking incongruity. With the protection of the centurion there could have been no Atonement; and with the protection of a constable there can be no true Lovefeast. Christ and the constable are never seen in company, save in antagonism.

Why not share the privation and glory of those "of whom the world was not worthy?" Heb. 11:36-39. Suppose we must "wander about in sheepskins and goatskins;" live "in deserts and in mountains;" endure "trials of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea moreover of bonds and imprisonment;" be "stoned, sawn asunder, tempted, slain with the sword." What then? Will that justify us to cry to the constable, HELP, HELP. Where then is our "good report THROUGH FAITH?" Heb. 11:36. "Being reviled, we bless; being persecuted, we suffer it; being defamed, we ENTREAT; we are made as the filth of the world, and are the offscouring of all things unto this day." 1 Cor. 4:12, 13. Is there room here for a constable? "Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example that we should follow His steps; who when He was reviled, reviled not again; when He suffered, He threatened not; BUT COMMITTED Himself to HIM THAT JUDGETH RIGHTEOUSLY." 1 Peter 2:21, 23. Any room here for commitment to a constable? "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus" Phil. 2:5. Does His life furnish any precedent for the employment of civil officer to preside at our Feasts of Charity? "Charity suffereth long, and is kind; beareth all things, endureth all things." 1 Cor. 13:4, 7. "Rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when His glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." 1 Peter 4:13. Does it look like rejoicing in the participation of "Christ's sufferings" if we call in a constable "lest we should suffer persecution for the cross of Christ?" Does it not much more manifest a "desire to make a fair show in the flesh?" Gal. 6:12. "If ye be reproached for the name of Christ"—What then? Send for a constable? Appeal to the civil power?—No; "If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye." Why? Because we are stoical, or cynical, or despisers of "the powers that be?" No; but because "the Spirit of Glory and of God resteth upon you." 1 Peter 4:14. This is better than a constable's benediction. The Cross is the glory of Christianity. "O fools, and slow of heart to believe, all that the prophets have spoken: OUGHT NOT Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into His glory?" Luke 24:25, 26. "Arm yourselves likewise with the same mind," and not with a constable's weapons. 1 Peter 4:1. Gal. 6:14. Christ means a cross; the constable means a pistol and dirk. The cross means a crown; the pistol means defeat and loss and shame.

An Enemy to be Dreaded.

Below we give a brief record of the Papacy as compiled by the Christian. It is necessarily imperfect. Indeed we question whether the enormities and crime of that power could be placed on paper. But it is sufficient to indicate its animus, and it is as awful as it is true. Every sentence given below would make a text for a volume. With such a record as that the Roman Catholic Church can well afford to attack our cherished free school system and our precious Bible. They cannot make their record worse than it is, nor do they care to make it any better. The fearful charges that history brings against the Papacy are proved by the very spirit of the bloody institution in our own day. Rome never changes, and she glories in it. Catholics, look at your history! Protestants, show your children the record of the Papacy! Beware of the sharp talons of this ferocious ecclesiastical vulture! It comes down upon the nations to harass and to destroy. It is the most content when it goads on its victims to destruction:

It has insulted heaven.
It has oppressed earth.
It has perverted the truth.
It has trampled on kings.
It has opposed liberty.
It has inaugurated war.
It has incited murder.

It has sold "indulgences."
It has taken away the Bible.
It has opposed education.
It has gloried in the Inquisition.
It has gloated over its auto-da-fe (condemnation of heretics.)
It has blasphemed the name of the most high God.
It has declared itself infallible.
It has spoken great words against the Most High.
It has worn out the saints of the Most High.
It has sought to change times and laws.
It has grasped political power.
It has sought to overthrow republican governments.
It has employed the dungeon, the halter, the rack, and the stake in its war against the truth.

It has used lying, assassination, and wholesale massacres in propagating its power and crushing its enemies.
It has crushed men while living and tried to damn them when dead.
Pope Julius put to death 200,000 Christian Protestants in seven years.
The French Catholics massacred 100,000 Christians in three months.
Roman Catholics killed full 1,000,000 Waldenses.

The Jesuits destroyed 900,000 persons in thirty years.
Under the Catholic duke of Alva 26,000 Protestants were executed by the hangman.

Irish Catholics massacred 150,000 men, women, and children.
It has placed upon record the awful day of St. Bartholomew.

The whole number of persons massacred by the papacy is estimated at fifteen millions, and the estimate is a low one.

This is the power that is fixing its fangs on our body politic; that is cursing our public schools and relaxing no effort to wipe them out of existence; that is the sworn enemy of an open Bible and of civil and religious liberty. This is the power that is creating cardinals in our midst; that is pouring out its money to bind our nation hand and foot. Do Protestants realize their danger? Are Americans on the watch? There is danger impending—are we prepared to meet it?—Sel.

A CHARITABLE divine, for the benefit of the country where he resided, caused a causeway to be begun; and as he was one day overlooking the workmen a certain nobleman, passing by, said to him, "Well, doctor, for all your pains and charity, I don't take this to be the highway to Heaven." "Very true," replied the doctor, for if it had, I should have wondered to have seen your lordship here."

Botany.—Chess, or Cheat.

A gentleman writing from Illinois asks me to give my views at length in our paper concerning cheat. Now if this were a question of merely local interest, a postal card answer would do; but the writer says the farmers are very much interested, and the intermittent newspaper war is uppermost again, as to wheats turning into cheat.

The scientific name of wheat is Triticum Vulgare; of chess, or cheat, Bromus Secalinus. They are often found growing together, but they never interchange. If cheat seed gets into the ground, and the conditions are favorable, cheat is the crop; if wheat is sown, and everything favors, we get wheat. When the conditions necessary for a good wheat crop are present, cheat is under a clod; but if the proper surroundings and conditions favoring a good crop of wheat are absent, then cheat comes to the front. The demands of the two seem to be diametrically opposed. If stool get into growing wheat and crop it, trampling the ground, the dormant cheat seed is in its glory. Good cultivation and fair agricultural chances go against cheat. Wheat never changes into cheat; cheat, being a worthless grass is never dignified into wheat. A man plants fifty bushels of wheat in new ground and harvests forty-eight bushels of cheat and two bushels of wheat; another plants clean seed, where cheat was unknown, almost, and gets a splendid crop of the worthless grass seed. Both are sure that the grain by some unknown means has disgraced itself and "gone to grass," literally and figuratively. This is not the place to explain how the seed gets there, but that they interchange is never true. Last year I observed this closely; dug both up by the roots; analyzed them botanically; subjected them to microscopic examination, and employed all scientifically legitimate means to get at the bottom fact, with the result stated, that is, that they are different in everything but general appearance, and the texts on botany were correct in assigning them separate places.

In fifty bushels of cheat, or in a field containing that amount growing where wheat was planted, if the wheat changed into cheat, then, in that large amount there should be instances, however solitary, of wheat and cheat growing on the same head or stalk. This is never true. When you find the two growing thus, please send me the specimen. Read Genesis 1: 11, 12.

When the woods get afire and burn off all the buckleberry bushes, a bright green grass follows. When the prairies in Southern Minnesota have stopped burning, willow, oak and aspen trees spring up like magic. In the track of Sherman's march to the sea a new grass has made its appearance. In the path you have beaten through the meadow grows a weed totally unlike the grass around it. Now the conditions favorable to the production of the new-comers were present, and they came. There is no magical interchange, and with a few exceptions, no variation on plants, from the far off time when the morning stars sang together down to the present hour.

Now boys and girls, in the next we will go on with our own talks, and I am pleased to see that so many are interested in the subject we are dealing with. Ask what you wish, and unless it is a question of very wide spread and general interest, expect only a postal card answer. Some one in the west sent me some lily seeds: no question, no name, nothing but the hard bullet-like seeds; therefore only one word—thanks.

Spring-time and Its Lesson.

BY D. B. MENTZER.

The cold breath of winter has changed to the mild and refreshing breeze, it has lost its power to chill us, and now we feel a balmy air that delights us. Spring has come, and how glad we are! Pleasing sounds are wafted on the wholesome air, and, with upturned ear, and wandering look, we inquire, "What is that I hear?"

Behold, "The time of the singing of birds has come," and they invite us, as faithful little ministers of God, to join the hearty praise-offering to "God from whom all blessings flow." The tender grass is shooting upward to spread earth's carpet of green; the buds are bursting forth to cover each living, leafless tree with its wonted, verdant robe; the flowers are expanding their fragrant and beautiful petals to cheer the passer-by, and tell the glad story of their birth, in Heaven's own language: "The Hand that made us is Divine." All nature triumphs in its resurrection, and should not we make some expression of congratulation? When we think of the beauty, and the music, and the many benefits of spring-time, we are moved to exclaim: "Our Father, who art in Heaven, hallowed be thy Name."

My dear young people, let us see what a beautiful and impressive lesson the Spring-time teaches us.

You are in the Springtime of life. Your life-time is like a year that has just commenced. Perhaps some of you can read well, but do not know how many things are wrong in this world. You are in your innocent days, probably, and after a while you will be men and women who must "look out" for yourselves in life, and then you will find out to your astonishment how much wrong and sin there is in the world—how many ways the "Wicked One" has to Lead the soul away,

From the path of virtue,
Or to sin to stray."

This is why some of us are so much concerned about what lies in your future pathway of life. We care not big about the past only to learn lessons that will teach us to be better boys and girls—better men and women. It would indeed be a sad thing to die and have the thought that we never tried to be good, and to do good. Did you ever watch the snow flakes falling in the winter-time? Surely, you did, for there is scarcely a sight more pleasing and interesting in Winter. Well, did you ever watch a single snow-flake and see it fall on the softly-flowing stream, or on any body of water? How long did it stay on the water? Ah! you know: not a moment. It had barely appeared upon the water until it disappeared, and you saw it no more. Just so is human life. Our life is very short when we think of heaven where there is no night, and day will never end. Ten thousand times ten thousand years will only be a small part of the heavenly time, and it is therefore called eternity.

Should we not, then, in our youthful days give ourselves to the service of God? Please get your Bibles—the best of all books—and read the eleventh chapter of Ecclesiastes. (You will find it right after the Proverbs.) What do you think of the Word of the Lord? Do you not think it a good thing to love the Lord? Then why not now, "in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not"? that is, before the cares, and temptations, and troubles, of manhood and womanhood come. Now—to-day. As soon as you know that you belong to the world, and that you are not at peace with God, and that you are not obeying the Lord's commandments, so soon can you be a seaker to seek the Lord and His ways, and so soon you should seek Him, and serve Him all your life. How very beautiful is the life of a young Christian, living humbly, modestly, consistently, earnestly, and faithfully in "all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless." Come, young friends, think of it. Hear the faithful preacher as he labors for your welfare, and search the Scriptures for the Truth. Don't spend your early spring-time of life in scattering seeds of folly, fashion, fame, or the neglect of the callings of Jesus, but take His yoke upon you and learn of Him.

RULES FOR AGENTS.

1. At the head of every letter give the name of your own post-office, county and State; and the date on which it is written.
2. Write the name and give the full address of every subscriber you send, as legibly as you can.
3. Write "New" before the names of all new subscribers.
4. In ordering a change of address, give the post-office, county, and State, to which the paper is sent, as well as the post-office, county, and State to which it is to be sent.
5. Do not mix up different items of business; but take up and finish one item before you take up another.
6. Write items intended for publication on a separate slip.
7. Make every lawful effort to obtain subscribers, and to do good in whatever way you can.
8. Send money by drafts, post-office money orders, or registered letters.
9. Observe the above rules, and you will expedite business, save us from much trouble, and yourselves and our subscribers from disappointments and vexation.

AN OVERLOOKED PRIVILEGE.

"For unto you it is given in behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake."—PRIM. I. 30.

Our privileges as Christians, and as they are enumerated in the gospel, are numerous and various; and it requires a looking "into the perfect law of liberty" with close attention, and eyes anointed with the eye salve or anointing of the Holy Spirit, Rev. iii. 18, to see some of them. Their value can only be fully understood when they are looked at in the light of the cross of Christ. The light that is shed from that cross has a very peculiar effect. It shows beauties, excellencies, and attractions in things which, if seen in any other light, possess neither beauty nor value. The light of the sun paints the rainbow beauties on the dark cloud. The light of the cross of Jesus, paints beauties and glories on the dark clouds of adversity, seen and enjoyed by the good, and especially if those clouds are caused by storms brought about by the persecution of the good for righteousness' sake. "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you."—Matth. v. 10—12. This doubtless to many will seem a strange way to happiness and heaven. And were they not the words of Jesus himself, it would be difficult to credit them as true. But however contrary such sentiments are to the belief and experience of the world, they are in perfect harmony with the experience of the faithful. And this being the case, well might the Apostle say to Christians, "Unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake."

It is given unto us to suffer as well as to believe. We can understand the gift of believing, and readily understand that it is a great privilege to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and enjoy the blessings of that belief. But to believe that it is also a privilege to suffer for his sake may require a little more faith in the perfect rectitude or rightness of the divine government, and a deeper insight into, and a clearer appreciation of, the benevolent purposes of that government, than many Christians possess. And the fear and dread that many have of suffering not only the loss of life, but the loss of a little reputation in the estimation of some proud and ignorant worldlings, or the endurance of some words of contempt and mockery, or some little personal injury, or pecuniary loss.

"For unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake." Have all our readers, and all who bear the Christian name perceived the deep, spiritual, and consoling truth contained in this text of Scripture? An exhaustive application of the truth contained in it, will embrace the idea that it is a privilege to suffer for Christ. "It is given unto us." Heaven gives us the privilege of becoming identified and connected with the number of devoted and sainted spirits which have followed the Leader of the Lord's host through evil as well as through good report, and have gone up through much tribulation and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. When we have an opportunity of suffering for the sake of Jesus, we have an excellent opportunity of manifesting our love to him. And who does not esteem it a privilege to have an opportunity of showing his love for the person he dearly and devotedly loves?—Such seems to be the meaning of the apostle's language. And this being his meaning, how differently does suffering for the sake of Christ appear when looked at in the light of the Christian Scriptures, to what it does when looked at from a worldly stand-point. When looked at from the latter, it appears as an evil to be avoided, and our frail nature shudders at it. But when it is looked at in the light of the gospel, it appears among the privileges which heaven has conferred upon Christians.

In the early ages of Christianity this precious truth and feature in Christian experience, seems to have been better understood than in modern times. And well was it both for the salvation of souls and the establishment of the church that it was so. For had there been at that time the same reluctance to suffer, and the same attachment to carnal ease and enjoyment that characterize the present age, there would have been but few saved, to be numbered among the witnesses for Christ, and among the citizens of the kingdom of heaven, since suffering then was a common consequence of espousing the Christian faith. It was an abuse of the truth that it is a privilege to suffer for Christ, that produced the passion for martyrism that prevailed in the ancient church. The Lord had blessed his servants in many cases when called upon to suffer, with great peace and supernatural strength to endure the conflict, as in the case of Stephen, and had also given the promise of a great reward in heaven, and this being known, it not only emboldened others to meet the same suffering joyfully when necessitated to do so, but believing the martyrs were blessed with the special favor of heaven when dying, and that their crowns in heaven would possess superior brightness, it also led them to prefer suffering to ease, and the death of the martyr to any ordinary death, that the superior enjoyments of those who suffer for the sake of Christ might be theirs. And while we admire their faith and endurance, we cannot approve of their enthusiasm. They went to an extreme that was not advisable. We should not seek suffering and death. It is not in accordance with Christian prudence to do so. But when we meet them in the path of duty, they should not deter us from persevering, and that they should not, we are given to understand that our suffering for Christ will be made a blessing to us, and we therefore should feel that it is a privilege to endure such suffering. We are generally too fearful of suffering in the cause of Christ. Some of the ancient brethren may have been too anxious to suffer persecution and martyrdom. We are too fearful.

There are two prominent considerations that should reconcile us to our suffering for Christ when called upon to suffer for his sake. 1. The Lord will make our suffering a blessing to us, and make it conducive to our present enjoyment and improvement. And, 2, there can be no better way for us to honor our Redeemer, and to show our love to him, than by suffering for him when duty requires it. Then as unto us "it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake," let us be ready to suffer for him, when duty requires it, and feel that it is a privilege to do so.

"Deem not that they are blessed alone
Whose days a peaceful tenor keep:
The God who loves our race has shown
A blessing for the eyes that weep.

"The light of smiles shall fill again
The lids that overflow with tears,
And weary hours of we and pain
Are earnest of serenest years."

OUR APPROACHING A. M.—SOME SUGGESTIONS TO THE BRETHREN.

The time is now not far off when the annual gathering of our brethren from different parts of the brotherhood will take place, forming what we call our Annual Meeting. The meeting proper will commence on Tuesday following Whitsuntide, which will be the 6th of June. It will be held with the brethren in Logan county, Ohio. The attention of the brethren by this time to a considerable degree is, no doubt, directed to the occasion. The district meetings generally have now been held, and have arranged business where it was necessary, for the general Council. Many are also making preparations to attend the meeting, anticipating the enjoyment they have in meeting with the brethren on such occasions.

For the last few years our Annual Meeting has awakened considerable interest in the brotherhood, both from the large number of attendants present, and from the business that has come before it. The meeting for the present year is probably looked to with more than ordinary interest. This being the case, we trust the brethren throughout the brotherhood will be prayerfully engaged with the Lord, invoking his blessing upon the meeting. And as we find the apostles, when they had important work to do, connected fasting with prayer, (see Acts xiii. 2, 3; xiv. 23,) we think it would be well for the brethren to do likewise. Our brethren in Annual Council have advised this, and said in regard to fasting, "that in important cases, it should be enjoined upon the members as a means of sanctification and qualification for important duties."—Minutes of 1867, Query 23. "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain."—Psa. cxvii. 1. This language plainly conveys the idea that the blessing of God must accompany all our works to make them successful. Then we should most earnestly and sincerely implore the divine grace and blessing, if we would have the spiritual house of God built up, and have the holy city protected from the invasion of her foes. While no work can be prosecuted successfully without God's blessing, with that blessing no work can fail."

Some of our brethren have entertained fears that the peace of our brotherhood may be disturbed by the difference of opinion that obtains among us upon a few points. But as that difference does not pertain to any principle in Christian character, or to any truth or commandment in the system of Christian faith, we should not permit it to alienate our affection from one another, or to weaken the bonds of union among us. There is much union among us in regard to the propriety or necessity of carrying out every principle, and of observing every commandment of the gospel. And this being the case, we trust the difference being no greater than it is, will not to any considerable extent, affect our union, or interfere with our work that we as the church of Christ have to perform. We have confidence in God, and in the wisdom and fidelity of the brethren, and we hope that whatever emergency may arise affecting the church, God's grace will be sufficient to enable the brethren to meet it judiciously and successfully. There is a great responsibility resting on the church, and we hope that our brethren will appreciate this, and act with great discretion and caution in all they do, as an account must be rendered by them at the proper time for all their actions, and especially for what is done having such a great and far-reaching influence, as what is done in the name of the Lord, and done in connection with the great work of salvation.

But while we hope the brethren will not be unduly alarmed, and give themselves trouble from unnecessary fears, we think it would be well for us all over to keep in mind the fact that the church of Christ as well as its individual members, are in a world hostile to Christ and his cross. "Therefore let us not sleep as do others; but let us watch and be sober." 1 Thess. v. 6. We are surely in dangerous and trying times—"in the last days,"—in which "perilous times" are to come according to 2 Tim. iii. 1. And our Lord has said in regard to the same period, "Because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold," Matth. xxiv. 12. So we need not "think it strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try us, as though some strange thing happened unto us." 1 Peter iv. 12. The church will feel the shock of prevailing iniquity. But we will not fear. Our Redeemer has led "captivity captive." And he holds in his hand "the seven stars which are the angels of the seven churches."—We will hope in him, and trust that "His hand from ev'ry snare and foe Shall great deliv'rance bring."

THE MINUTES OF THE ANNUAL MEETING OF 1876.

We expect to publish the Minutes of the Annual Meeting of 1876, as we have done those of former years, in both the English and the German language. They will be sold at ten cents a single copy, or 75 cents by the dozen, including postage. We shall be pleased to receive orders either at our office, or at the Annual Meeting. There will be an agent there to attend to the business.

NOTICE.

We expect our assistant, Bro. J. W. Beer, will be at the Annual Meeting and he will attend to any business connected with our office that he can attend to. He will have our books containing our accounts with our subscribers, and with others who have obtained books from us. We shall be pleased to have all that can do so, to settle their accounts, as a suitable opportunity will be afforded them for doing so. He will receive subscriptions for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, and for the Minutes of A. M.

As the brethren in Logan Co., Ohio, where the Annual Meeting is to be held, have thought it best to have nothing sold within two miles of the meeting, we purpose to have our Hymn Books at the Gretna Station, the station at which the brethren attending A. M. will leave and take the train. This station is about two miles from the meeting. This arrangement that we propose, though not as convenient as it is desirable it should be, will, we trust, be sufficiently so to answer the purposes of all concerned. So our friends wanting Hymn Books, will have an opportunity, we hope, of obtaining them.

TWENTY-SEVEN NUMBERS FOR SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS.

We will furnish the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN from the time of the Annual Meeting, or beginning with the 24th number, to the close of the volume for seventy five cents. We should be pleased to add a handsome number of subscribers to our subscription list under the above offer. Will our agents and friends please make a little extra effort to accomplish this? The time we have named will be a suitable time for those who desire to have it and did not commence with the first number. We shall be pleased to receive subscriptions at the Annual Meeting for the remainder of the year. Persons not attending the meeting themselves can send by others, or they can write.

We can still supply back numbers to those desiring the entire volume. Our paper is cheap upon the terms we offer it, either for six months or a year.

WHILE we try to be careful in admitting advertisements, we, at the same time, are equally careful not to publish our personal commendations of articles that we know nothing of. It should not be expected that publishers should be able to tell all about everything advertised in their columns. We, however, can conscientiously invite respectful attention to be given to the advertisement of Dr. Swayne & Son, which appears in our columns this week. As to whether a medicine is deserving of praise or not, those who have given it a fair trial are best able to speak, and it is certain that Dr. Swayne's medicines have a good reputation
B.

Gleanings and Gittings.

THE following is from Brother Joseph Rittenhouse, formerly of Ohio, who has pitched his tent on the Eastern Shore, Talbot county, Md. His address is Easton, which is also the county-seat of Talbot county. We are glad to learn that they now have regular services there, and that, already, they have seen some good results. This letter was written on the 10th inst., and was addressed to the brethren and sisters at Black River, Medina Co., Ohio, but more particularly to Brother John Pittinger, to whom he says: "You requested an answer through the periodicals. Thank you, dear brother, for your kind word of encouragement and gentle rebuke; but we did not think best to be fast to make appointments. We have now got to work. We try to preach to the people every Lord's day, a short discourse; and after preaching we hear the children recite their lessons. We feel the presence of the Lord here as well as elsewhere. At our last meeting we were made to rejoice; we had the privilege to lead one precious soul into the river and baptize him in the name of the Lord, which was a scene new to the people here. They never saw baptism administered in that way. It seemed to affect the mind of the people, and there is much inquiry in regard to the ordinance. The river is a beautiful place to immerse. The water is somewhat salt; the bottom, gravel, and it descends gradually to any depth we want upon the occasion. Some of the people got into fish-boats and launched out into the river, so they had a fair chance to see and hear what was done.—We hope the Lord may bless the services of the occasion for good. Brethren, remember us in your prayers. Think of our lonely condition, as we have no help in the ministry, and not even a visiting brother to assist.

Wheat looks well; prospects good for harvest.

I commend you to God and the word of his grace, who is able to build you up, and give us an inheritance with all them that are sanctified. Dear brethren Samuel Garver and all the official members in the church at Black River, let us hear from you, how the work of the Lord is prospering.

JOSEPH RITTENHOUSE.

BRO. A. E. Troyer, Sarinda, Colorado, under date of April 30th, says:

"Weather is pleasant and growing. The spring crops are about all planted in this part of the country. We are still well pleased with the country, but would like it much better if there were more brethren and sisters here, and more meetings. We have had no preaching here since last fall. We are, however, still looking for better times in these respects and hoping that the time is not far distant when we shall have more members here, and then we shall feel more at home."

J. P. Moomaw, says: "Send my paper to Midland, Colfax Co., Neb., hereafter, instead of Purple Cane; Dodge county, Nebr., and publish the same so that correspondents will see the change. We have again settled in a new neighborhood, which opens a new field of labor. Now brethren come along, here is land at $4. per acre on ten years credit at 6 per cent interest, and a new railroad being built in 2 miles of us which will give us a good market. We want to build up a church. Come, for we have a fine country. For further particulars address me as above."

BRO. Elias K. Buechly, of Waterloo, Iowa, in a letter dated on the 7th., says:

"I am sorry that I have to relate the sad news to you, that our beloved brother, Eld. Tobias Musser, died last Sunday, April 30th. He was our delegate to A. M. last year. He was unwell all winter. We anointed "him with oil in the name of the Lord" the day before he died. He leaves a large family in limited circumstances."

BRO. Enoch Eby, Lena, Ill., Apr. 28th, 1876, writes as one who knows. Hear him:

"The general health is very good; and the weather is pleasant, but rather cool for vegetation. Farmers are busy in sowing their seed. Some are mixing oats and wheat in order to realize a larger yield, and it usually does well. Preachers are also busy in sowing their seed; and in order to reap a good crop of proselytes, they mix Christ and Baal, church and world, flesh and spirit. This, too, works like a charm, for generally many follow their pernicious ways; but when the great Jehovah with his fan in his hand, will winnow the chaff from the wheat, then, and then only, it will be made manifest who was sowing to the flesh and who to the spirit, for the former shall reap corruption, but the latter, life everlasting.

Dear brethren and sisters, let us sow a good spiritual seed, and not mix so much world with it that we cannot pay for our papers, till one or two years after due, thereby putting our dear brethren editors to the painful necessity of exposing to the world our neglect of duty (see

P. C., page 251) in order to obtain their just dues, and thereby give occasion to the world to charge us with worldly-mindedness (and, perhaps, justly, too). My brethren, these things ought not so to be. If you love the brethren and our cause, pay your subscription without delay. You may think your $1.60 makes but little difference; but suppose two hundred subscribers should think so which might easily be the case, it would affect the editors' calculations $320.00. Think about this from a Christian standpoint.

One thing yet to our brethren west of the Mississippi. Stop at Lena, Ill., on the Ill. C. R. at our feast, on the 30th and 31st of May."

Correspondence.

WASHINGTON, Ky, May 1st, 1876.

Brother Quinter:—

Your paper was received, and glad indeed was I to hear from the brethren again. It cheers me very much in my isolated condition. I have not heard a sermon or seen a brother or sister for nineteen months. The coming of your paper all last year was looked for with pleasure, as that was the only source through which I could hear from the Brethren; but this year poverty has deprived me of that. I have thought from month to month that I could save something to send for the paper, and it is now May and I still have nothing to send. Unless you can put my name in as one of the poor, I shall be compelled to do without. I am the only member in this part of Kentucky. Our church is not known here at all. Oh, for more of the missionary spirit in our church let us earnestly pray. Fashion and pride sit together on a high throne in the hearts of these people. May they yet be persuaded better things. But how can they know unless they are taught? And who are to teach them—these preachers here, who are running in the same channel? With these few words I close. Pray for us that the Lord may grant us grace to withstand all of these temptations. Yours in Christ.

Church News.

Dear Brother James:

We are in usual good health, and also all the members in our district as far as I know. We feel to thank God for all his goodness toward us.

Friday, 21st of April, we were blessed with a visit from our beloved brother, S. C. Stump, from Falls City, Neb., who gave us seven able and interesting sermons, and truly we can say we enjoyed a feast of fat things. There seemed to be some deep impressions made upon the minds of the people of Salem. The meetings lasted till Tuesday night, the 26th, and on Thursday, 27th, at nine o'clock five were added to our number by baptism. May God keep them in the narrow way that leads to a land of rest where there is no sorrowing, no parting, no pain, no sickness, no death—where all will be love, joy, peace, and happiness, with the blessed Savior. Brother Stump took his leave of us on Thursday evening for Riner's school-house to fill an appointment that night. He preached from St. John xiii, on the subject of feetwashing. Then to Burr Oak, where on Friday, 28th, a church council was held. We had a good council meeting. All went off in love and union. There we bade Brother Stump farewell, perhaps never to meet again on this earth. I hope that when our tongues shall be silent in the grave we shall meet above.

Brother Stump in company with brethren Switzer, Ives, and Faidley went to hold a series of meetings ten miles below Burr Oak. I haven't heard from them as yet, but I hope the Lord will be with them and bless them in their labors and give them souls for their hire. May the grace of God enable us all to meet in a better land.

Your weak brother in Christ,
JAMES M. BAILEY.

Acknowledgment of Favors.

Dear Brother Quinter:

I wish to acknowledge through the columns of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN the receipt of a bundle of tracts and pamphlets from Brother J. H. Moore. I feel thankful to that dear brother and sister for the interest they have taken in my friends and neighbors. Those pamphlets have been the means of winning some souls to Christ already, and I hope they will turn many more. I have distributed them where I think they will do the most good. Brethren, your pens can preach here in this western country, and your money can preach here by sending us those tracts and pamphlets. If there are any other brethren or sisters who feel like sending us more reading matter, we can put it to good use.

Yours in Christian love,
JAMES M. BAILEY.

Information for Everybody.

Editor Primitive Christian:

I wish to ask for a little space in your valuable paper for the purpose of answering the numerous letters of inquiry that are being received by myself and others in southern Kansas; and I add that we are willing to give our time in answering all such letters, but the money is required to get the material, and when the amount reaches from ten to fifteen dollars a year, it is quite an item, and probably more than many would be willing to give in one year for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, foreign mission, home mission, and other necessary purposes. We wish to help to sustain all these and do our part in laboring for the promotion of God's kingdom on earth; but these must necessarily be hindered to some extent if we must spend so much time and money in correspondence with those asking for full particulars, &c. Again: we feel a delicacy in asking our editors to publish such information free, for two reasons at least—1st. Our editors are probably not better prepared to do so at their own expense than we are (of this they must be the judges), or if they are more able to do so, still it could hardly be expected of them, for, 2nd. If such information is worth having it is worth paying the expense necessary to obtain it. Therefore we hope those interested will compensate the editor, if this communication is published.

1st. "How is the climate in southern Kansas?" It is all that could be wished for—delightful.

2d. "Have you much ague?" Some persons appear to be disposed to it, but the disease is not to be feared, as it is confined to the lowlands, and there it is not so prevalent as in some States east of us.

3d. "Have you plenty of timber?"—

Not so much as we would like; but some parts have great abundance while other localities are rather short.

4th. "Have you plenty of coal?" We have two or three veins from six to twelve inches thick only, but 60 or 70 miles east and south there is plenty of coal, the vein being 4 feet thick, and from the distance from there here we confidently expect it to be easily reached by shaft.

5th. "Any running streams?" All the streams of this country are alive and moving all the year, and consequently as nice water as can be found this side of the mountains.

6th. "How deep are your wells?"—From 10 to 30 feet.

7th. "How far from railroad?" 50 and 70 miles. The probability is that there will be two roads built through this section in a short time.

8th. "Does stock do well?" Yes; no better stock country to be found. Cattle, sheep and hogs do as well here as it is possible for them to do anywhere.

9th. "How about Government land?" It is mostly taken, but can be bought second hand very low, say from $2 to $20 per acre.

10th. "How is the land—flat or otherwise?" This county is quite rough, which is much in its favor for stock raising, as range will be plenty; but for all this there is plenty of land that yields from 20 to 50 bushels of wheat and from 40 to 75 bushels of corn per acre. In short, we can confidently recommend Southern Kansas to any and all who are seeking homes where they have made up their minds to be suited with a country as above described.

But I wish to add that many persons have come west as a kind of experiment, rather expecting to be disappointed than otherwise. Such persons have generally gone back East with dismal reports, &c. There is, however, another class of persons who are really seeking homes; such persons have to some extent counted the cost before starting, and the result is, they are opening up fine farms, under difficulties, of course, but they are all the more proud of their success, seeing they have proved themselves heroes equal to the emergency, overcoming many difficulties that the faint-hearted dare not encounter. Hoping this will be satisfactory to all concerned, I commit and commend it to the printers and let them dispose of it as is best.

E. STUCK.

To Brother C. H. Balsbaugh.

"For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." 2 Cor. iv. 17.

Beloved Brother in Christ:

I oftentimes think of you in your afflictions. My soul oftentimes yearns for you. Your affliction must be very great; but it seems that it has been the good pleasure of God to lay the afflicting hand upon you. Dear brother, no doubt it is working for you "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. The Lord afflicteth us for good and wise purposes. If our suffering is not too great, it enables us to draw our minds from the transitory things of this world to that bright world beyond this vale of cares, when we, if faithful to our trust here, will be able to drink out of salvation's well to the satisfying of our never dying souls. See how the great apos-

the Paul was afflicted and persecuted. See how it worked for him that eternal night of glory which enabled him to say, "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." 2 Tim. 4: 6-8. Behold, the comforting words our dear brother Paul has left us. Surely, if we love Christ we will love his appearing. And that Jesus who said, "It is finished," see how he was afflicted, how he suffered, all for fallen humanity! He left "the glory which he had with the Father before the world was" for our sakes. He went about doing good. He was concerned about his Father's business. But wicked men crucified him nailing him to the rugged wood, all for our sake. I can see, with an eye of faith, those five bleeding wounds, all for our sake. But his affliction, although it caused him to sweat great drops as it were of blood, worked for him "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." But now he is seated on the right hand of God, where angels, and authorities, and dominions are being made subject unto him. Dear brother, be faithful until death, and you will receive that crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give you in that day; where you will be enabled to walk the gold paved streets of the New Jerusalem, with a palm of victory in your hand, where there will be no more affliction and no more pain. There nothing will cause the scalding tear to flow, and the transitory sufferings of this life will be forgotten; where you will be dressed in that long white robe that has been made white in the blood of the Lamb. There will be no night there but one eternal day. May the grace of God ever be with you, which is sufficient for you, and at last save you in this everlasting kingdom, is my prayer.

Calls for Help in the Ministry.

While perusing the pages of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, I see many calls for help in the ministry, which is all right, and good, and acceptable in the sight of God our heavenly Father, who would have all men to come to the knowledge of the truth and be saved. While we are calling to our brethren to come and help us build up the church and hold forth the truth as it is in Jesus, we must not forget,—and I fear it is to be lamented that we too often do forget,—to fall down before God and ask him to assist us in calling laborers into the vineyard. Let us not lose sight of the promise of our blessed Savior, that he has left on record for us; for he has said, if we ask, we shall receive; if we seek, we shall find. Now, dear brethren and sisters, while calling to our brethren for help in the spreading of the gospel, let us fall down before God and pour out our wants before him to help us in the good cause, and to send his reapers into this western field of labor, where the harvest truly is great but the laborers are few; or ask him to prepare and qualify some of our brethren here in the west for the work.

He will surely hear our cries; we have the promise that where two or three are gathered together in the name of the Lord, he will be in their midst; and he farther says: "If two of you agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven." Now God is able to cheer up the minds of our brethren in the east and send them west as he sees best. He is also able to endow with wisdom and power from on high any brother that he may choose, that he may be able to proclaim the word of truth to both saint and sinner. We sometimes hear it said by brethren who live in organized churches, "If we had material for a preacher we might elect one." If we have no material where we have organized churches it is our own fault; because we are not earnestly engaged in prayer to God in behalf of the church, and his servants, that he may prepare the material and bestow upon his servants here the power to discharge the labors that become necessary to carry on the good work in this part of God's moral vineyard, where the harvest is great but the reapers are few. When we look back to the days of the apostles, we see that God chose unlearned and ignorant men, and bestowed upon them power to perform many miracles, and to declare the wonderful works of God. When God wants a minister or a prophet he will get him somewhere, whether he be a plowman, or a fisherman, or of low degree, God is able to qualify him for whatsoever he willeth. So, dear brethren in the West, let us not be discouraged; although we be few in number, we have the promise of the Savior that he will be with us even unto the end of the world. If God be for us, who can be against us. So let us put our shoulders to the wheel and try to keep the ark moving. We all have a work to do; whether ministers or laymembers we have our part of the work to perform. S. WEAVER.

A Letter to Mary J. Eastright, of Indiana, Pa.

Dear Sister:

Fain would I call you beloved sister in Christ, but, as it is, I cannot. I have, for some time, thought of penning a few lines to you on the subject of Religion; but have deferred, knowing, as I do, that your husband is somewhat skeptical on that all-important subject, and, I must confess, I think you, too, have become somewhat hardened in heart. Why, I do not know, as you were reared by pious parents, as well as we; especially our dear, kind, Christian mother, whom you recently saw leaving this unfriendly earth, and going home to Jesus. But I have digressed already. I will speak of neither at another time; and now to our subject.

Religion is a most happy and pleasant thing to practice; but a sad and melancholy thing to neglect or refuse. God's government in the soul will regulate but not enslave. The idea that religion is a kind of slavery, to which none can submit without sacrificing all the enjoyments of this life, ever has been the greatest hindrance to its advancement among mankind. But it is not so. "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." So says King Solomon. Much wiser and better should we be, if we could carry with us, from infancy to old age, a full conviction that happiness is found alone in the cultivation of Christian virtues, and that piety is the firmest basis of morality. This would secure, first, God's claims, and then our own. Without the belief and hope offered by divine revelation, the circumstances of man are forlorn indeed. We are placed here in a vast universe, where the beginnings and issues of things are very imperfectly known.—We cannot discover whence we came, or for what purpose we were brought into existence; but Religion is the soul of love; it is an instructive light, and is an evidence of that which will not deceive. It will lighten us through a dark and thorny path on earth, and, at last, lighten us to heaven. What does Religion profess?—Peace to all mankind. Its greatest ornament is charity; it enforces nothing but love and simplicity of affection. Religion! It is not an ideally living in the brain, and leaving the heart untouched. It is not a peculiar frame of mind, or the kindling of the fancy, or a heated imagination. It lives not merely in visible signs of devotion, or bowing the knee, lifting the hands, or long prayers, nor long-drawn sighs, and cadaverous, long faces. These may all exist without religion, and Religion may exist without them. I have seen all these. The true mark of Religion is benevolent actions flowing from holy motives. It is charity which, hoping all things and believing all things, is not contented with a "be ye warned, be ye clothed," but it performs the good which it desires; it loves its neighbors as itself; it seeks not its own preferment; its kingdom is not of this world. It is too high to envy the proudest, too meek to despise the humblest. It despiseth not its brother because he differeth in opinion. Its creed is, "Do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with thy God." Its seat is, "The pure in heart." It is the Spirit of God living in the human heart. It is always ready with its purse, to do good unto the poor, and keep unspotted from the world. God honors such a soul, and the devil troubles before him. The man who possesses such a religion is worth a score of long faced, whining hypocrites who say they would do so much, but are not quite willing to obey the dictates of humanity. There is more than one way of showing kindness to the unfortunate, of which we will speak in our next letter.

G. W. BURKHART.

From the Valley River Congregation.

Dear Brother Quinter:

I will embrace the opportunity, this beautiful Lord's day morning of giving the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN the news from this arm of the church, as I have not seen any report from this arm of the church. I believe that it is the duty of some one in each arm to give a yearly report of the condition and prosperity of the church; and as it appears no one else will take this duty upon himself I will try to give a few items.

I will just say that we commenced to build a church some time ago, and as the times have been hard, and the members are in limited circumstances as regards this world's goods, we have made tolerably slow progress; but we now have it very comfortable, so that we can hold meetings in it almost all kinds of weather. Brother Auvil and Brother Shaffer commenced a meeting here on the 18th of February. Seven sermons were delivered. On Sunday Brother Auvil preached the funeral of the infant son of Solomon C. Gainer. During the meeting there was, I believe, as good order and attendance as I ever saw. I for one must say that the brethren preached the word in its purity. There were two, as it were, made to cry out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" And I have reason to believe there were a great many others almost persuaded to be Christians. I believe, if the meeting had lasted a few days longer, several more would have joined the church. My prayer is that it may be as bread cast upon the waters, that it may be seen many days hence.

On the Full Beard.

As this is a subject that is occupying the mind of the church I will say a few things. When Paul was taken prisoner and more than forty men of the Jews determined to kill him, his sister's son, hearing the plan, told Paul and the Governor. So, now, many brethren have taken Brother D. P. Sayler and show that the law was done away. I hope they will not kill him. If the law did pass away, the beard did not. Jesus wore a full beard, for he was the true Nazarene; and as I have lately heard old elders say grievous things against the beard, I have been led to write a few thoughts on it. Some say, "It don't look decent, and is not decent in the sight of God." Oh, what an idea of God!—God himself made man in his own image, and Jesus his only begotten Son wore a full beard, and yet poor man will rise up against God and say, "It don't look decent." Jesus has declared, "Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, * * * of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed when he cometh in the glory of the Father with the holy angels."

Railroad Arrangements.

Editors Primitive Christian:

Please insert this notice at once. Notwithstanding A. M. ordered that no R. R. reduced rates to A. M. should be asked for; and if asked for, the arrangements made should be private, &c., in this, as in all other A. M. conclusions, the brethren do as they please and so continue to publish R. R. arrangements to A. M. hence I received the following:

"I received a letter from Bro. _____ of Virginia saying that the Virginia brethren expected us to make arrangements for going to A. M. as brother J. P. Ebersole has done I am not going. Will you attend to it for the benefit of those who may go? Yours in Christ."

I accordingly incurred the expense of a trip to Baltimore, yesterday; but in consequence of an agreement between some railroad companies, all that my old friend Cole could do, is to issue excursion tickets as far as Wheeling, W. Va., this being as far west as he can go under the agreement. He will furnish any ticket office on the line of their road with excursion tickets, if a guarantee of 20 passengers be given. This I could not give, so he will furnish only the office at Harrisonburg with tickets unless otherwise instructed. The price from there to Wheeling and return will be $15.80. Brethren in Va. living at a distance must send for their tickets, they will be there on or before the 35th inst.

It appears that the time has come that brethren and others, who go west to buy lands, or to visit friends, must pay for riding on the railroad. This is right. I have long since been disgusted with issuing return certificates to brethren and others, who, I knew, had touched at A. M. only to get a free ride home.

D. P. SAYLER.

ABURN, Ills, May 11th, 1876.

Brother Quinter:—

The I. B. and W. R. R. has granted the privilege to the brethren of traveling to and from the Annual Meeting at two cents per mile each way. Peoria, Pekin, Bloomington, Farmers City, Urbana, Danville, Crawfordville, Decatur, Havana, are the stations at which tickets will be placed in due time. Take up the tickets going to the meeting. It is expected that the I. B. and W. general ticket agent make arrangements from his road to the place of meeting at reduced rates. It will be known hereafter.

JOHN BEECHLY.

A Change.

Dear Brother Quinter:

Please give notice to brethren passing over the Baltimore and Ohio R. R. from the west, on their way to A. M. to change cars at Tiffin, Ohio, instead of Shelby. From Tiffin they will run south to Bellefontaine, on the Cincinnati, Sandusky and Cleveland, R. R. Brethren will not forget the place in Chicago—rear of Exposition Building, near foot of Lake street.

ZACHARIAH TROYER.

Announcements.

The Perry church will hold a communion meeting, the Lord willing, in the Farmer's Grove meeting house, on the 1st and 2nd of June, commencing at 2 p. m. Also meeting next day until noon. Ministering brethren coming from the East will stop off at Perryville station, seven miles from the place of meeting. Those who intend being with us will please notify brother C. Myers, and they will be taken to place of meeting and back next day. His address is Farmer's Grove, Juniata county, Pa. By order of the church.

PETER LONG.

The brethren in the South Waterloo church, Black Hawk county, Iowa, will have a lovefeast on Saturday and Sunday, 3rd and 4th days of June next, at their meeting-house, commencing at 10 a. m., four miles south of the city of Waterloo. A general invitation is hereby extended.

E. K. BUECHLY.

A communion meeting is appointed by the brethren in the Bear Creek church, six miles west of Dayton, Ohio, on the 30th of May, commencing at 10 o'clock, a. m.

JOHN R. DENLINGER.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

March 8th, 1876, in the South Keokuk branch, Keokuk county, Iowa, NETTA, daughter of friends J. J. and C. Terrel, aged 2 months and 18 days. The above was a granddaughter of brother David and sister Anna Bowersox. Funeral services by C. Wooderlich and the writer, from Mark x. 13—16, to an attentive congregation. JOHN FRITZ.

In the Willamette Valley church, Linn county, Oregon, Feb. 21st, 1876, Brother SOLOMON RITTER, of heart disease, aged 58 years; 2 months and 13 days. He was the last of a large family of brothers and sisters. He emigrated from Indiana to Oregon in 1853. Brother Solomon was a faithful member for nearly 30 years. He leaves a bereaved sister companion and 5 children to mourn the loss of a loving home and a kind father; but their grief is consoled with the hope that he now rests in Abraham's bosom, awaiting the first and great call of his divine Master. His life has been such that those outside of the church could say, that "he was a quiet, peaceable, honest kind-hearted man." A few months prior to his death he called for the Elders of the church, and was anointed. Funeral occasion improved by brethren Daniel Brower and Daniel Leedy from 2 Sam. xiv. 14; to an attentive congregation of hearers. A. H. BALTIMORE. (Pilgrim please copy.)

In Greenfield, Ind., April 5th, 1876, RAJUL ROthenBERGER, wife of Jacob Rothenberger, aged 49 years, one month and 23 days. Disease, measles.

DANIEL ROTHENBERGER.

In the Quemahoning congregation, Somerset county, Pa. April 30th, 1876, Sister ANELIA CHARLOTTE HAUGER, aged 48 years and five months. She leaves a husband and ten children to mourn her loss. Two preceded her to the spirit world. She was a member of the church of the Brethren for 30 years. Funeral services by Brother Jacob Speicher and the writer.

Also, in the same congregation, May 11th, 1876, ABRAHAM LINCOLN MILLET, aged seven years, eleven months and three days. Funeral services by the same.

VALENTINE BLOUGH.

In the Buffalo Valley church, Union Co., Pa., May 1st, 1876 Sister SALLIE J., daughter of Bro. G. W. and Mary Myers, aged 19 years, two months and 27 days. Funeral services conducted by the Brethren.

J. L. BEAVER.

In the Yellow Creek branch, Bedford Co., Pa., April 30th, 1876, Bro. ANDREW BAKER, aged 86 years, one month and five days. Occasion improved by the Brethren, from John xiv. 1—3, to a large and attentive congregation. He never was married,—a kind citizen, and always a strong advocate of the true doctrine, but joined the church only in his old age.

L. FUERT.

In the Milmine congregation, Platt Co., Ill., Bro DANIEL WAGNER, aged 62 years, four months and one day. He leaves a wife and three children to mourn their loss, which is deeply felt by them as well as the church and community at large. His funeral was largely attended. Funeral services by brethren J. Hendricks, D. Franz, and I. Wagoner, from John v. 24—29. B. BOWMAN.

In the Hickory Grove church, Carroll Co., Illinois, May 6th, 1876, Sister LIZZIE MUSSELMAN, wife of Brother Aaron M. Musselman, aged 39 years four months and seven days. She leaves a sorrowing husband and five children, of whom a pair of twins are but 18 days old. Although we know that death is in the land, yet that one so much beloved by all and so useful to her family, in the church, and in the neighborhood, should be taken away in the prime of life, we could hardly realize the solemn fact. She was buried at the Brethren's burying-ground at Hickory Grove, on Sunday afternoon, May 7th. Funeral service by Brother Geo. D. Zollars. Text—2 Cor. iv. 17, 18 and v. 1, 2. We part with her in good hopes of meeting in a better world. JESSE Y. HECKLER.

Aug. 24th, 1874.

Dr. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.:

Dear Sir:—Your medicines, Golden Medical Discovery and Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, have proved of the greatest service to me. Six months ago no one thought that I could possibly live long. I had a complication of diseases,—scrofula, manifesting itself in eruptions and great blotches on my head that made such sores that I could not have my hair combed without causing me much suffering; also causing swollen glands, tonsils enlarged, enlarged or "thick neck," and large and numerous boils. I also suffered from a terrible chronic Catarrh, and in fact I was so diseased that life was a burden to me. I had tried many doctors with no benefit. I finally procured one-half dozen bottles of your Golden Medical Discovery and one dozen Sage's Catarrh Remedy and commenced their use. At first I was badly discouraged, but after taking four bottles of the Discovery I began to improve, and when I had taken the remaining I was well. In addition to the use of Discovery I applied a solution of Iodine to the Goitre or thick neck, as you advise in pamphlet wrapping, and it entirely disappeared. Your Discovery is certainly the most wonderful blood medicine ever invented. I thank God and you, from the depths of my heart, for the great good it has done me.

Very gratefully,

Mrs. L. CHAFFEE.

Most medicines which are advertised as blood purifiers and liver medicines contain either mercury, in some form, or potassium and iodine variously combined. All of these agents have strong tendency to break down the blood corpuscles, and debilitate and otherwise permanently injure the human system, and should therefore be discarded. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, on the other hand, being composed of the fluid extracts of native plants, barks and roots, will in no case produce injury, its effects being strengthening and curative only. Sarsaparilla, which used to enjoy quite a reputation as a blood purifier, is a remedy of thirty years ago, and may well give place, as it is doing, to the more positive and valuable vegetable alteratives which later medical investigation and discovery has brought to light. In Scrofula or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammation, Mercurial Affection, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin and Sore Eyes as all other blood diseases Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has shown its great remedial powers, curing the most obstinate and intractable cases. Sold by all dealers in medicines.

DR. SWAYNE'S COMPOUND SYRUP OF WILD CHERRY IS A SOVEREIGN REMEDY.

Hemorrhage or Spitting of Blood, may proceed from the larynx, trachea, bronchia or lungs, and arises from various causes, as undue physical exertion, plethora or fullness of the vessels, weak lungs, overstraining of the voice, suppressed evacuation, obstruction of the spleen or liver, &c.

Dr. Swayne's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry

strikes at the root of disease by purifying the blood, restoring the liver and kidneys to a healthy action, invigorating the nervous system.

The only standard remedy for hemorrhage, bronchial and all pulmonary complaints. Consumptives and those predisposed to weak lungs should not fail to use this great vegetable remedy.

Its marvelous power, not only over consumption, but over every chronic disease when a gradual alternative action is needed. Under its use the cough is loosened, the night sweats diminished, the pain subsides, the pulse returns to its natural standard, the stomach is improved in its power to digest and assimilate food, and every organ has a purer and better quality of blood supplied to it out of which new recreative and plastic material is made. Price one dollar. Six bottles $5. If your druggist or storekeeper has not got it, we will forward half dozen to any address on receipt of price, freight pre-paid.

Should the bowels be costive, or head-ache accompany your disease, the patient should procure a box of

Positively cured by the use of SWAYNE'S OINTMENT.

HOME TESTIMONY.

I was sorely afflicted with one of the most distressing of all diseases, Perritis or Perritis, or more commonly known as Itching Piles. The itching at times was almost intolerable, increased by scratching, and not unfrequently becoming quite sore. I bought a box of Swayne's Ointment; its use gave quick relief, and in a short time made a perfect cure. I can now sleep undisturbed, and I would advise all who are suffering with this distressing complaint to procure Swayne's Ointment at once. I had tried prescriptions almost innumerable, without finding any permanent relief.

THE GOOD FIGHT.

BY EBENEZER BURK.

A war there is that's worth the waging,
Bloodless—but not less stern—the strife,
In which the warrior, once engaging,
Lays down his arms but with his life;
And glory, honor, and renown
Shall weave for him a fadeless crown!

In this great war, each one enlisting
Is pledged to fight with quenchless zeal,
The foe unceasingly resisting,
And urging ever Truth's appeal,
Wielding no weapon but the sword—
Furnished by God's own written Word

To strive with scorners, oft deriding
The principles we hold most dear,
Is worthy of the law abiding,
And renders truth's credentials clear;

So shall the strife but strengthen men
To stand the test when tried again.
'Gainst mean self-seeking and contention,
Against ambition's lawless strife,
True men, by friendly intervention,
Would nurse a nation's noblest life,
Till God shall better near and far,
The people that delight in war.

Against the power of love and sinning
A life-long warfare must be passed;
This is the battle's best beginning,
And this must close the strife at last,
Then, though that strife be fierce and long,
Loud shall resound the Conqueror's song.

Feeding Sheep and Lambs.

BY R. T. POLLARD.

In the vineyard of the Lord there is work for all to perform; but in this article we propose to notice, more particularly, the work of the minister, or, rather, the elder or bishop.

At the organization of the Christian church, the first important step was to choose those who would be fit subjects to receive this gospel which our Savior taught, and to preach it to the people. And we find that in the selection of one in the place of Judas, they were directed to choose one from among them who was filled with the Holy Ghost. In the call of Peter to this great work we discover that he first should be a fisher of men, and by this we understand that he should preach this doctrine; and when many had believed, he was then further commissioned to care for those who had believed. The thrice repeated question of Christ, which many understand to have referred to the three protestations and denials of Peter, was thrice met by answers full of love and faith. He then received his commission to feed Christ's sheep and lambs. Christ himself was called the good shepherd; but now Christ was soon to be no more personally present, and hence prior to his ascension he commissioned Peter to feed his sheep and lambs. By this we understand it to be the duty of those who have the charge of the fold of Christ, to act as the shepherds over Christ's flock.

It is very important that a person who has sheep, and wishes to employ an individual to take charge of them; know what feelings the hiring has toward his employer. It is unreasonable to suppose that any right-minded person would engage an individual to take charge of his property, if he knew him to be his enemy. So we would infer from the questions of Christ, that he wanted to try Peter's fidelity, love and faith, before he would intrust into his hands the care and keeping of his sheep and lambs. And as Peter answered his question in the affirmative, and the third time acknowledged the omniscience of Christ, and called him to witness that he loved him, hence he said, "Feed my sheep," "Feed my lambs."

By the terms lambs and sheep we understand him to mean the whole Church of Christ, young converts and old experienced Christians. "I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night." (Isaiah 42: 6.)

The church of God is like a besieged city; enemies, cunning and mighty, threaten her on every side. No matter what their clime, color, or station is, they have one common desire to see God's spiritual temple brought to desolation. Now to watch the movements of these enemies, and to sound the alarm; God has furnished the church with sentinels. In both dispensations of his gracious covenant, he has employed men as watchers and heralds. In ancient times "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." Venerable prophets were appointed to "cry aloud and spare not, to lift up their voice like a trumpet, showing the people their transgressions and the house of Jacob their sins. And since Christ came who "spake as never man spake," we find apostles and others appointed "for the perfecting of the body of Christ," to watch and warn, to preach the gospel to every creature.

But what does the term watchman suggest as being important in a minister? It reminds us that every important interest has been committed to his care. In the silent hours of the night the lives and property of the city are intrusted to the keeping of the watchmen. In times of war the sentinels have the safety of the army, and, in a measure of the whole nation, in their care. In like manner ministers are intrusted with the Bible and the proclamation of its truths; and under no circumstances are they to corrupt the word, or mingle with it the traditions of men. Also they have in charge those ordinances designed for the benefit of the saints. They have the charge of the whole flock of God, and are bound to be examples to it, to feed and watch over it. How truly may we then say, "Who then is sufficient for these things?"

The term watchman also suggests that he is to be no idler. With me it is a matter of serious doubts whether an indolent man can be possessed of pity. The first principle of grace is active, and wherever it resides there is constant progression. A man cannot have it and stand all the day idle in the midst of perishing souls.

But we must come back to where we started. As Christ has taught, as Christ had warned, as Christ had reproved, as Christ had been an example to his disciples, as Christ had manifested a spirit of humility, of love, of meekness, of gentleness, of patience, of long-suffering, of purity, of charity, of holiness, of virtue, of submission to the will of his heavenly Father, so must his servants be characterized with these Christian graces, that they may be able to discharge their duties, and care for and feed the flock aright.

And in every flock as we have just stated there are "lambs" (young converts) and "sheep" (experienced Christians) to feed, guide, regulate, and govern. To be properly qualified for this, his wisdom and holiness should always exceed those of his flock. "Who is sufficient for these things?" The man who lives in God and God in him.

CARE FOR AND FEEDING LAMBS AND SHEEP—The care of lambs is somewhat different from that of sheep. We read in Isaiah that the good shepherd carries the lambs in his bosom. So tender are young converts, young members, that they should have special care and instruction. If we could only realize the good or evil that is sometimes produced by negligence or diligence on the part of our preachers and elders. Sometimes, I believe, the disinterestedness of the officials has been the means of causing young converts to leave the church; and at other times, were it not for the company and encouragement of some zealous Christian, others would often leave. Just think of persons joining the church! They have, like Mary, decided to accept of the better part; and in doing so, it becomes necessary for them to leave their old associates and their sinful place of resort, and to form new associates and to find new places of resort. And what encouragement have they if the heads of the church do not make the church pleasant by manifesting a Christian spirit and a Fatherly care over those babes in Christ. As the old proverb has it, "If you want your child to be good, send him to school; if you want him to be true, send him home, have home pleasant and agreeable." So it is with regard to the church. If we want to keep the church together, we must let the Christian spirit shine forth with all its brightness. Brethren and sisters, be kind to each other, old and young, rich and poor, learned and unlearned; and let the preachers and elders show forth a spirit of regard for all, without respect to persons; as Christ was, so must ye be. Man is a social being; and if after deciding to join the church, a person can find no one to associate with, he is very apt to "return as a dog to his vomit, and as a sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire." And not only are lambs to be cared for, but fed, and that with such food as is suitable for them. "And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk and not with meat; for hitherto ye were not able to bear it; neither yet now are ye able." I Cor. 3: 1, 3. "As new born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word that ye may grow thereby." 1 Peter 2: 2.

So we see that Paul and Peter, as ministers understood what these new born babes needed. They had not become strong; they had not grown to manhood and womanhood in Christ; but were as yet babes; hence they were weak and could not bear strong food, which is hard to digest, or understand. Peter's advice was that they should desire the sincere milk of the word. Then such doctrine should be preached to the lambs of the fold as they can understand. "Feed my sheep," those who have long been in the church and are more thoroughly grounded in the faith, and, we hope, good works—are better able to stand, and need such doctrine that is more difficult to be understood. Then how important it is that we all discharge our every duty, with the conscientiousness that we, as Christians, ought to possess, that the blood of no one be on the skirts of our garments, or that their blood shall not cry unto God from the ground against us.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

"Beware of Dogs."—Paul.

BY B. B. BOLLINGER.

There is no doubt a very deep signification in the above language of inspiration. I do not think that refers to dumb brutes. The expression seems a little harsh, coming, as it does, from so eminent a man as Moses or Paul, but he had perhaps learned it from the Savior. "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs." Matth, 7: 6. "Moreover the dogs came and licked his sores." Luke 16: 21. Or of the Psalmist, "For dogs have compassed me," Ps. 22: 16. The Revelator says, "For without are dogs." Rev. 22: 15. The term is used frequently in scripture with reference to the canine species, but in all of the above quotations it refers to a class of human beings that are not in the Christian church. But the principal point here is who those characters are that are referred to by Paul. They are the enemies of Christians, and we should beware of them, watch their movements, and keep out of their reach, lest, like David, we be encompassed and perhaps devoured. Some give notice of their wrath by barking; others lurk behind fences and pounce upon their victim unawares; but their greatest feasts are taken when they get into a flock of sheep and lambs in the dark night. The wolf in the sheep's clothing is of the dog species, and is, if possible, more dangerous. The apostle also says, "beware." The "false brethren" belong to this class. The Savior called Herod a fox which is another breed of the same kind. Some of these dogs of our day I wish to point out to my young brethren and sisters and cry aloud Beware! BEWARE!

The first one is the slanderer, who tells lies about our brethren and sisters in order that he may destroy our love for them, weaken our faith, and divide the church. He is a most vicious one, and very dangerous.

The flatterer is no less dangerous. He makes us believe that we are better than other people, and that we should look down upon them with contempt.

The office seeker belongs to this class.

The jester, who turns every serious thought into a laugh; who can smile when he ought to weep; who cannot shut his mouth long enough, nor keep his face straight till religious services are over, is as much to be dreaded as any of his comrades.

There are others to which I wish to refer: such as the Jeweler, the Tobacconist, the hair vender, the novel writer, the showman, the picknic preachers. Many others might be named, but I will let the reader extend the list in his own mind. All the above are nasty curs, that are ever devouring our living, both temporal and spiritual, and are making slaves of mankind; for if people would labor for a living, and let these dogs take care of themselves, less than one fourth of the labor now performed would be amply sufficient to supply all of our real wants. Let us heed the warning, "Beware of Dogs."

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Ministerial Criticism.

BY P. R. WRIGHTSMAN.

Our best friends are those who tell us of our faults in a Christian spirit. And as our ministers are looked upon as examples of Christian piety and consistency, and justly, too, we who are called to the awful responsibility of preaching the gospel, should be the more careful as to what we say on certain occasion. I have often felt mortified, at our communion meetings, while the church out of love to God would be obeying the commands, many young folks, and some more advanced in years, would get noisy in the back part of the audience, and so disturb the meeting, that time and again our brethren would have to call them to order, and sometimes even then fail to restore good order. Now comes one point; at the close of some of these meetings, some of our ministers, and sometimes even an elder, would thank the congregation for their good behavior! We do not read of the apostles one single time, thanking the audience for their good behavior; neither should we praise them for doing their duty. Yes, it is their duty to behave themselves at church; and therefore do not have any claim to thanks, but they, the people, should thank God for the truth.

Again, when a good sermon, of ordinary length, has been delivered, let that suffice; close the meeting at once, and do not another minister get up and praise the first brother's sermon, and say there has been enough said, and yet continue exhorting for a half hour. If there has been enough said, do not say any more.

Sometimes brethren get up just merely to open the meeting, and tell us they will only make a beginning, and give way to the brethren, but do not do so. I once knew a brother to say he would just make a beginning; but he preached, or rather lectured, for an hour and a half. Now brethren the world takes notice of these things, and they use them against us for harm. "Let your yea be yea, and your nay be nay, more than this gendereth evil."

Further, when you make an appointment to preach, preach, and do not spend half an hour in exhorting before prayer, telling the people how to pray and what to pray for, as though they were not in the habit of praying, or it were a new thing and needed explanation. Five minutes properly spent, is enough to exhort before prayer.

The apostles never made apologies when they got up to preach, as we can read of; neither should we. If you preach in your great weakness, the people will soon find it out; if you have but little to say, they will find it out, too; if you have a bad cold, it will tell for itself; and if you say you will not occupy much time, remember it and stick to it; keep your promise. If you have nothing on your mind, be ashamed to tell it.

When it is time for services to commence, do not set and elbow one another, and each one say, "I wish the liberty." If you really wish the liberty, go on and use it. This is equivalent to saying, "Let me speak." Better say, "Brethren, use your liberty." We can use language properly, just as well as not; such plain sentences as this, at least.

Do not preach or exhort from the hymn book, or any of its verses, as some of those poets were not Christians; but let the book of God be your text book. In it you will find enough to give you a basis for a discourse.

When you are done preaching, do not say, "If I have spoken the truth, I hope you will receive it, * * * but if I have said anything that does not comport with the gospel, do not receive it;" as much as to say, "I do not now know what I have said, whether it be true or not." You should know whereof you speak; you should declare the whole counsel of God, and impress it upon your congregation to receive it without any of your ifs. Should you put an if to your preaching, you may expect others to do so too, and thereby weaken the testimony of Jesus.

Avoid drinking water while speaking, if possible.

Last, but not least, do not allow yourself in preaching, to ridicule other denominations, or even make mention of them, or refer to their usages. As Paul said, "Preach the word," so say I to you, my ministering brethren. "Preach the word," you have nothing to do with other denominations; God will manage their case much better than we can. "Preach the word" as if there was no other creed or denomination in the world. But do not preach the same sermon all the time, or use certain quotations and exhortations in every sermon, thereby making them your hobby. Endeavor, by all means, not to ride a hobby. If you do, it will eventually rob you of your power and influence, and soon your discourse, however true and good, will prove unavailing and uninteresting to your audience, while your hearers may justly feel that you are indifferent in the study of the Scriptures, and that you do not try to give them a proper variety of sermons.

Once a minister's wife said to him, "You are enough to starve out the Christian world." "Why," said he, "do I not preach the truth?" "Yes," said she, "and would you not be telling the truth if you were to declare all day that my name is Mary?" It is needless to say that that minister's sermons after that were varied and more interesting. "Man is not to live by bread alone," though it be good bread.

In conclusion, to be a successful minister requires first a holy life, heaven-born soul, created anew in Christ Jesus; then a thorough knowledge of God's word, with an ardent desire to preach and live out God's word, with love to God and his creatures.

Dear reader, allow me to impress upon you the entire necessity of preaching the word without linking on some of the isms or man-made creeds of the day. Live close to the immaculate, then, I am sure, when you get up to preach or talk for Jesus, you will have something to say; and it will be such good news that you will have neither time nor inclination to put in your excuses, apologies, and hymn sermons, but will look to the rock from which you are hewn, and with humble boldness and confidence stand up to speak for Jesus, and feel to say, "Lord increase our faith." God bless you, dear brother laborer, be faithful; "let no man take thy crown."

Doctrine and Practice.

It is a good thing to be well indoctrinated and firmly established on good fundamental principles. He who has no settled conviction in regard to the doctrines of the Bible, is not likely to have any religious stability, but is liable to be overthrown and destroyed. There must be great stones and timbers used in setting the foundation of a house; otherwise it will be at the mercy of the storms. It takes great, heavy material, well fitted, joined and fastened together, to start a ship that will not perish among the breakers. And it takes excellent workmanship to construct the foundation of a Christian character, so that amid the wrath, and strife, and tempests of life it will be safe and promote safety in society.

On the other hand it is impossible for men to spend all their time in settling the matters of doctrine, and giving none of it to the practical living out of that which they profess. They are well established in unexceptional faith, but have no reputation either for living soberly, righteously and godly, or for continually, or even at times, going about doing good. Of what use is the house, standing storm and tempest proof though it be, if its doors be always locked, and it offers no place of refuge and repose to some one wanting a home? Of what account is the best built ship, if it will not ride the sea and battle with the billows? A ship perpetually at anchor gives no help to the commerce of the world, and is worthless. If Christians will be real Christians, it is their duty to study well God's truth, and then live it out. If they are spiritual houses, let them open their doors and invite the homeless wanderers, cold and hungry, to a place of warmth and food. Made to sail the sea of life, let them start out in sunshine and storm, trusting in God for safety while they help this cause—Sel.

God may sometimes delay his promise, but he will not deny it. He may sometimes change it, but he will not break it.

CENTENNIAL HYMN.

BY JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

Our fathers' God, from out whose hand
The centuries fall like grains of sand,
We meet to-day united, free,
And loyal to our land and these,
To thank thee for the era done,
And trust thee for the opening one.

Here, where of old, by thy design,
The fathers spake that word of thine,
Whose echo is the glad refrain
Of roared bolt and falling chain.
To grace our festal time, from all
The zones of earth our friends we call.

Be with us while the New World greets
The Old World, thronging all its streets,
Unveiling all the triumphs won
By art or toil beneath the sun;
And unto common good ordain
This rivalry of hand and brain.

Thou who hast here in concert furled
The war flags of a gathered world,
Beneath our Western skies fulfill
The Orient's mission of good will,
And, freighted with Love's golden fleece,
Send back the Argonauts of peace.

For art and labor met in true,
For beauty made the bride of use,
We thank thee, while withal we crave
The austere virtues placed to save,
The honor proof to place or gold,
The manhood never bought or sold!

O! make thou us, through centuries long,
In peace secure, in justice strong;
Around our gifts of freedom draw
The safeguards of thy righteous law,
And, cast in some diviner mould,
Let the new cycle shame the old!

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Hortatory.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To William Gibson, Esq. of Md.

There is a "mystery of iniquity," as well as a "mystery of godliness," 2 Thess. 2: 7. 1 Tim 3: 16. "Depths of Satan," as well as "depths of Divine Wisdom and knowledge," Rev. 2: 24. Rom. 11: 35. A light that lures to destruction, as well as a Light that leads to eternal bliss. 2 Cor. 11: 14. John 1: 9. There is a growing wise unto blindness and damnation, as well as becoming a fool that we may be wise. Rom. 1: 21, 22. 1 Cor. 3: 18. We may be poor and yet rich, as well as rich and yet poor. 2 Cor. 6: 10. Rev. 3: 17. And there is a treachery and illusion which blinds us to all these distinctions. 2 Cor. 3: 4. Heb. 3: 13.

In nothing do people so easily and miserably deceive themselves as in religion. In matters pertaining to this life, most persons are wide awake, and know how to bargain so as to secure themselves against loss; but in the infinitely more momentous transaction of salvation, they give the devil all the advantage, and barter their priceless souls for a little frothy pleasure, or ease, or wealth, or honor. Satan is a great liar, a great chafferer, a great cheat, and a great fool. He is sure always to get the long end in his dealings with the sinner; but is equally sure to get the short end with God. Therefore I said he is a great fool, because the more souls he drags to hell, the hotter and fiercer will the flames be that envelop his great immortality through endless ages. And what pitiful, doltish fools are those wretched self-murderers who prefer the service of the devil, in however refined a form, to the service of God, and sell their immortality and all the joys and glories of which it is capable, for the deceitful, unsatisfying, evanescent pleasures of sin. O the reason-crazing, heart-corrupting, will-perverting, soul-maddening power of evil. O foolish Galatians not only, but foolish humanity, "who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth, crucified among you." Gal. 3: 1.

Eternity, Eternity! What a tremendous fact! Who can number the years of God? Who can stretch his imagination over the limitless future? Who can scale the unscalable, touch the bottom of the unfathomable, explore and comprehend the infinite? Take all the seconds since the first angel was created; all the thoughts of all finite beings in Heaven, earth, and hell that have ever been thought; all the grains of dust of which this globe is composed, and all the drops of water in its oceans, seas, rivers, streams and fountains; all the minutest points of space in which earth and sun and moon and stars have ever rolled; take all these and multiply them into one innumerable product, and this again by itself, and keep on so multiplying ad infinitum, and we have not yet reached a number that bears a relation to Eternity as the grain of dust that lies on the paper before me does to all the atoms of matter in all the orbs that have ever come within the sweep of the most powerful telescope. The thought is absolutely overwhelming. And this vast, measureless, shoreless, awful eternity will surely be ours. Such is the great, grand, dreadful fact of our immortality. An unending destiny awaits us. The forever and forever is as certain for us as to-day. The years allotted to our mortality will dwindle into months, our months into weeks and days, our days into hours and minutes, and these into seconds, then the last breath, and we stand before the Great White Throne to hear either the glad welcome, "Come ye blessed of my Father, and inherit the kingdom," or the soul-blasting, eternally withering malediction, "Depart ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." Matth 25: 34, 41. To one of these extremes of blessedness or woe we are inevitably hastening. High up on the Pisgahs and Nebos of the Everlasting Mountains, or deep down in the chains and darkness and damnation and death of the everlasting dungeons, we must spend our Eternity. The everlasting ages are ours. Whose are we? Eternity to be is our inalienable birthright, as Eternity that was is the sole and essential property of God. Rise, is the eternal law of attraction for the life of holiness. Sink, is the eternal law of gravitation for the life of sin. The saint mounts as naturally as the dew exhales. The sinner descends as necessarily as an apple falls to the ground. The shortest responsible life is long enough to prepare a character, in bud or fruit, for endless rapture, or endless woe.

Where, dear cousin, will we spend our Eternity? What will be the history of our immortality? In what direction, and with what experience, will "the ages to come" untwist the corrugations and fill out the capacities of our spiritual constitution? Is our "life hid with Christ in God," or immersed in things seen and temporal? Is the glory of God the undivided aim and effort of existence, or are our aspirations bounded by the horizon of mortality? Whither are we tending, what is the bent of our being, where is the preponderance of our affections? Are we ready, or getting ready, to be called into the court of Heaven to have our life tried by the holy, inflexible law of God, and be judged according to the unbending righteousness of Jehovah? What answer can we honestly give to these solemn interrogations? Impenitent in life an unregenerate in death, it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God," for He "is a consuming fire." Heb. 10: 31, and 12: 29. You "appear beautiful without," like a "garnished sepulchre," but within—God knows what. You live alive of faultless morality, measured by human standards; but "what is born of flesh is flesh," even if it simulates the "Bright and Morning Star." YOU MUST BE BORN AGAIN. O flee from the wrath to come. To lose the soul is a direful calamity. To lie down in "everlasting burnings" is a horrible fate. To have the devil and his angels and ruined souls for your everlasting companions, is dreadful beyond conception. To be under the curse of Almighty God, and suffer the stings of the undying worm, and be entombed in the grave of the universe, where all the corruption and anguish and despair and stench and disgusts of sin are imprisoned without the least mercy-valve to give a moment's relief—O who can bear the thought, and who will risk the dread reality? Flee to the Cross, comply with the conditions of Love, by the grace of God deliver your soul from sin and hell, and choose Christ for your everlasting portion. Nothing will avail at the bar of God but community of life and interest with Jesus Christ.

The word Baptize Proved by the Scriptures to Signify Immerse.

BY JACOB BAHR.

Men in speaking upon the subject of baptism with the design to establish or prove that the word baptize implies to immerse, generally refer us to foreign languages, to history, lexicographers, and the writings of literary men. They tell us that the word baptize is a Greek word; that it was not translated, but transferred from the original into our common English version, and that the word should have been rendered immerse. This, no doubt, is all very good. However, I can see no material difference in a word, because it is not in one word that the meaning of a sentence is expressed; but in a sentence the signification of a word may be comprehended. Therefore, whether it be baptize or immerse, plunge or dip, or even if a word not in use were employed in lieu of the word baptize, the words which compose the sentence would give it the same signification which is comprehended in the word immerse. My opinion is that there is sufficient light contained in the Scriptures to establish and prove the signification of the word in question; and that it does signify immerse.

I will now undertake to prove by the Scriptures that wherever the words baptize, baptized, baptism and baptizing occur in the Scriptures, an overwhelming, a covering up, a baptizing, or an immersion is expressed, or implied.

There are five different baptisms mentioned in the New Testament, to which I will refer in treating this subject:

1. The Mosaic or National baptism.
2. The baptism of suffering or affliction.
3. The baptism with the Holy Ghost.
4. The baptism with fire.
5. The baptism with water, or Christian baptism.

1. First, then, the Mosaic or National baptism, referred to by St. Paul in 1 Cor. 10: 1, 2: "Moreover brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea."

From the clause, "Brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant," we infer that there must have been something very important connected with this baptism. The question may arise, What may it have been? Answer: The Mosaic was a type of the Christian baptism. And the circumstances which attended the accomplishment of that baptism, doubtless, were of great importance for the primitive Christians, as well as for those who live at the present age, to know. We read in the 14th chapter of Exodus that after Pharaoh, king of Egypt, had permitted the children of Israel to go to worship their God, his heart was again hardened against them, and he collected his valiant men, his chariots, and horsemen, and pursued the children of Israel, whom they overtook when they were encamped near the Red Sea. When the children of Israel saw the Egyptians approaching, they were sore afraid and cried unto the Lord. Moses lifted up his rod and stretched out his hand over the sea, and the sea was divided. The waters became a wall on their right hand and on their left. God made them a grave and led them in and covered them with his cloud. As they advanced, the cloud which went before them to guide them on the way moved over them, and came between them and their enemies, to keep them from being captured. God brought them safely through that grave where Pharaoh and his host found their last sleep. Thus we see that even in the type of the Christian baptism there was an overwhelming, a covering and a burial, if not an immersion. They having been in the midst of the sea, and the cloud being over and among them, (for they were "in the cloud," 1 Cor. 10: 2), they were entirely covered. Thus they "were baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea."

2. The baptism with suffering and affliction. Luke 12: 50: "I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened till it be accomplished."

When this baptism was accomplished upon the dear Savior, he himself declared that his soul was exceeding sorrowful; and he fell down upon his knees and upon his face and prayed. And being in agony, he prayed more earnestly until "his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling to the ground." Next he was taken by his enemies, who stripped him of his raiment, placed a crown of thorns on his head, and a reed in his hand; they blindfolded him and smote him with the palms of their hands, and spat upon him; then they took the reed and smote him on the head. Oh, pitiful sight! could we now behold the dear Savior yield to that dire baptism; could we see the sacred blood trickle down his holy temples (as we may well suppose it did), we would, no doubt, conclude that he was immersed with suffering. But, alas! his baptism was not yet fully accomplished; he must yet bear his cross toward the place of execution, whereupon the loving Savior was fastened; nails were driven through his harmless hands and feet; he was raised upon the cross, where he continued to suffer till the whole creation seemed to mourn; the Father withdrew and left the suffering Savior to tread the "winepress" alone. The Savior, faint and overwhelmed with affliction, exclaimed, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" "The sun was veiled in darkness, the rocks were rent, the veil in the temple was rent likewise, and the graves were opened, and many of the bodies of the saints which slept arose and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many." Math. 27: 52, 53. Friendly reader, please answer to your honest conviction whether or not there was an immersion with suffering and affliction in the accomplishment of this baptism. If you would term all this sprinkling, please prescribe to us how it should have been accomplished to answer for immersion. "Surely he has borne our griefs and carried our sorrows." He was bowed down and covered with the sin of the world which was laid upon him, and which brought him into Joseph's new sepulchre. But God did not suffer him to remain there long, his Holy One did not see corruption. Like unto the children of Israel, God made him a grave; suffered him to be covered with stripes and wounds; yea, from the crown of his head to the sole of his feet. "But he was wounded for our transgression, he was bruised for our iniquity, the chastisement of our peace was laid upon him, and with his stripes we are healed." God brought him safely through; he raised him up out of the grave, and received him into glory. "He has given him a name which is above every name, and crowned him with honor and glory."

3. The baptism with the Holy Ghost. "John truly baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence." Acts 1: 5. When this promise was fulfilled upon the disciples, "they were all with one accord in one place; and suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost." (Acts 2: 1-4.) We observe that the disciples, at the reception of this baptism, were completely overwhelmed, covered, yea immersed; from the fact that the house where they were assembled was filled. Not only was the house filled, but the disciples were filled, likewise, with that holy "anointing." (1 John 2: 27.) I remark further, that by the administration of the divine "unction" (1 John 2: 20) an immersion was exhibited so plainly that it would seem impossible that any honest, reflecting inquirer could pass by without observing it. As before remarked, the disciples were totally immersed with "the Comforter"—"the Spirit of truth"—promised by the Savior to guide us into all truth, to console us in our tribulation and conduct us on our way to "the everlasting habitations." John 14.

4. The baptism with fire, Matth. 3: 11: "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire."

In treating this part of the subject, I deem it necessary to offer some introductory remarks and explanations; for I am aware that there are many who hold the idea that the baptism of the Holy Ghost and that of fire are synonymous. I will begin my remarks by referring the reader to the circumstances which drew forth the words of the text. We infer from what is recorded respecting John the Baptist, in Matth. 3: 1-6, that the doctrine which John taught, and the mode of his ministrations, soon became very popular, inasmuch that the people in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in all the regions round about Jordan came to him, "and were baptized of him in Jordan." This being the case, the Pharisees and Sadducees, who appear to have been very selfish and jealous hearted people, fearing they should lose their popularity, or be left to themselves, were prompted by sinister motives to come to his baptism likewise. But John appears to have known their motive; and when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism; he addressed them in the following language, "O generation of vipers! who has warned you to flee from the wrath to come?" From this he proceeded with an exhortation unto repentance, whereby he gave them to understand that those who bring forth fruit meet for repentance should not only receive baptism at his hand, but would also obtain the divine favor—the baptism with the Holy Ghost. But on the other hand, those who disregard the divine counsel, who do not truly repent, although they be baptized with water, yet should incur the disapprobation of the divine Master, and like trees bearing evil fruit should be "hewn down and cast into the fire." The former are compared with wheat to be gathered into the garner; the latter, like chaff, shall be burned "with unquenchable fire." Matth. 3: 10-12. The reader will please bear in mind that the text "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire," as well as all that is contained in Matth. 3: 7-12, was addressed to the Pharisees and Sadducees.

I remark further, that it is not at all likely that all who received baptism at the hand of John, nor even by the apostles, brought forth fruit meet for repentance, nor continued faithful in the Master's cause. For "the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea and gathered of every kind." Not the good only, but both good and bad. The good shall be preserved, the bad, or wicked, shall be cast into the furnace of fire." Matthew 13: 47-50.

We also observe that the Savior in speaking to his faithful disciples, never once intimated that he would baptize them with fire, but with the Holy Ghost; as in Acts 1: 5, "John truly baptized with water but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost, not many days hence."

We notice, too, that the disciples, when referring to the time when they received the Holy anointing, spake as having been baptized with the Holy Ghost only; as in Acts 11: 15, 16, and 10: 47. Peter, in making his defense, for having introduced the gospel among the Gentiles, says: "And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them, as on us at the beginning. Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost." Then, said he, "Can any man forbid water that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?" In all these texts there is not the least inference that the disciples were baptized with fire on the day of Pentecost. Still, the question may be with some: Were not, then, the disciples baptized with fire on the day of Pentecost? The answer is, they were not; neither was it predicted that they should be; nor is it reported anywhere, that they were. All that is said in reference to the presence of fire on that memorable day, is, "There appeared unto them cloven tongues like of as fire, and it sat upon each of them."

N. B. It is not even said that there was fire present at that day: but "Like as of fire." The term "cloven tongues" implies that the disciples were favored with "Diverse kinds (diversity of tongues)," (1 Cor. 12: 28,) whereby they were enabled to speak, so as to be distinctly understood in the different languages then extant, or present in Jerusalem. The phrase "as of fire" signifies that the disciples spoke with great earnestness, and boldness, and rapidity, that it may well be said, "As of fire;" or, "As though they were fire," according to the German translation. If it had been stated, bearing upon this point, as it was in reference to the baptism of the Holy Spirit, that all the house where they were assembled was filled with fire, we would have to conclude and say, the disciples were indeed baptized with fire on that day, as well as with the Spirit, but we observe that this is not the case. I will now presume that every reflecting and unprejudiced mind is willing to admit that the baptism of the Holy Ghost is one baptism, and that the baptism of fire is another; and will therefore now proceed to try to establish the point at issue.

Malachi, in reference to this awful event, says: "Behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Mal 4: 1. The Savior in allusion to the time and manner in which he shall inflict this punishment, says: "In the end of this world, the Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire." Matth. 13: 40-42. Now, gentle reader, pause for a moment, and reflect upon the scene that shall transpire at the accomplishment of this baptism. Picture to yourself that great day of the Lord, in which, as St. Peter predicts, "The heavens being on fire, shall pass away with a great noise; and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up" (2 Pet. 3: 10, 12; a day as Malachi describes it, "that shall burn as an oven;" when the atmosphere shall be a vast sheet, or flame of fire. Dear reader the scenes which we have described are what shall constitute the font or "furnace" into which the Great Prince shall command his angels to cast those who have done despite to the Spirit of grace. Thus shall be accomplished the baptism of fire.

If I thought it necessary, many more texts might be produced in support of the point in question; but I will dismiss this subject, by stating that we infer from what is recorded in Math. 13: 40-50, that there shall be vast numbers who shall have been enclosed in the gospel net (church) who were baptized with water, and like the wise virgin, took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom, but, alas! like the foolish, had no oil in their vessels—lacked the necessary "works of faith." They, together with those who caused offence, and by their ill conduct, brought shame and reproach upon the church of God, and have not repented, shall, like trees which bear evil fruit, like tares, stubble, and chaff, be burned up. "As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world. The Son of man shall send forth his angels; and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth."

5. The baptism with water, or the Christian baptism. I will introduce this part of the subject by asking a few questions. Why did John baptize in Jordan? and why in Ænon? St. John informs us that John baptized in Ænon, near to Salim, because there was much water there." John 3: 23. We infer from this declaration that it required much water to administer baptism in the manner in which John ministered. If John had administered by sprinkling, would there have been any necessity for resorting to places where there was much water? Is it reasonable to suppose that John, or any other person, would go down into the water, to sprinkle, or even to pour water upon those who demanded baptism? Why did he not, as we have often witnessed, have the water brought to him in a bowl or vessel? Friendly reader, the circumstances connected with baptism, and the manner in which John and the apostles proceeded in the administration of baptism, speak sufficiently plain to convince me that they administered this sacred rite by immersion. Let us take Jesus for our example. When he was baptized, he came up straightway out of the water. Is there anything more obvious than that he first went down into the water? As he arose out of the baptismal grave, he was as he afterward said to Nicodemus, "born of water." Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven." John 3: 5. Now unless a man can be received into and born of a few drops or a bucket of water, we must conclude that sprinkling and pouring are not baptism. It requires a body of water wherein a man may be covered or buried, and this is one reason why John resorted to places where there was much water."

St. Paul in speaking upon the subject of baptism, compares it with burying and planting. As in Romans 6: 4, 5, "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like Christ was raised from the dead, by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection. How do men bury? and how do they plant? No man could persuade you, intelligent reader, to believe that a few particles of dust sprinkled upon a corpse, or upon corn, would constitute either a burial or planting. No, a grave is prepared into which the body is laid, and not until the coffin or corpse is entirely covered will it be said of the departed that he is buried. Likewise the corn is buried in the earth; and not until the grain is entirely concealed from the eye, can it be said, with propriety, that the corn is planted. Why, then, can we not on the subject of baptism understand the language of the apostle in its simplicity? "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God" Col. 2: 12. The symbol of baptism is a burial and resurrection—a burial of the old man of sin, who is, in a figure, thrust into oblivion, never more to arise, or come into mind, if so be that we have died unto sin; and a resurrection of the New man, which, after God, is created in righteousness and true holiness." Ephesians 4: 24.

In conclusion, I will invite attention to the baptism of the Eunuch of Ethiopia, who had come to Jerusalem to worship, and who while returning, on the way from Jerusalem to Gaza, met in company with the evangelist Philip, whom he cordially solicited to take a seat in his chariot. Anon they were engaged in conversing upon the goodness of God, in the gift of his Son—Philip preached unto him Jesus. As they advanced, the Eunuch professed faith in the Son of God, and desired to be baptized. "They both went down into the water." Allow me to ask, Why did they go into the water? Is it not reasonable to suppose that a man of so great authority as said Eunuch, on a journey like that from Jerusalem to Ethiopia, was in possession of some vessel wherewith water might have been brought up to administer, after modern custom? If not, might not Philip have stood by the water side and procured with his hand as much water as is commonly employed by those who administer by sprinkling? But "THEY BOTH WENT DOWN INTO THE WATER." "Stop, stop!" say some, "if going down into the water is a sign that they administered baptism by immersion, they must both have been immersed." To this I will merely reply, please read the connection, and you will see that they did not baptize one another, but Philip baptized the Eunuch. And now I will ask, How could he have administered baptism without both going into the water, unless they would have constructed some fabric, or as some have done, selected a place where the administrator could have his in to be on the water? But, we observe, Philip was not as fearful of soiling gay clothing as many appear to be at the present day. We observe, too, that all that is recorded in the Bible upon this subject, tends to prove that the word baptize signifies to immerse. "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good."

Moulton, Iowa.

HERE is the spot, now is the time, for the most devoted service of God. No stains of heaven will wake him into prayer, if the common music of humanity stirs him not. The saintly company of spirits will throng around him in vain, if he finds no angels of duty and affection in his children, neighbors and friends. If no heavenly voices wander around him in the present, the future will be but the dumb change of the shadow on the dial. In short, higher stages of existence are not the refuge from this but the complement to it; and it is the proper wisdom of the affections not to escape the one in order to seek the other, but to flow forth in purifying experiences on both.

THE only motive which can move a will is either a will itself, or something into which will enters. It is not a thought, but only a sentiment, a deed, or a person, by which we become truly inspired. It is not the intellect, but the heart and will through which and by which we are controlled. It is not the precepts of life, but life itself by which alone we are led and lifted to life.

Botany—No. 5.

The flowers of plants will next call our attention. A great point is gained in getting correct ideas of anything in the start, and you must not be incredulous when I tell you that all the pretty flowers that bloom anywhere are nothing more than changed leaves.

Now to take an apple blossom, and hold it up before the class,—for I must still regard you as my class,—you notice the blossom part, that is, that part which is not green but colored. This part is composed of five colored leaves and altogether they make up the corolla, as it is called. Each of the flower-leaves, or, in other words, each of the five parts of the corolla, is a petal. If we pull off the petals, there remain the stamens and the pistil. The pistil is the little round stem that goes into one end of the apple, the end furthest from the stem it hangs by. The little thread-like arrangements around the pistil are the stamens.

If you get that straight in your minds, you have made a step in Botany that will enable you to understand a great deal of what goes on around you in the plant world. The way to do is to get a flower and as you read, examine it. In fact it is almost lost time to read of the parts of a flower without having one before you at the time to see and compare. If you cannot get an apple blossom, a plum, cherry, peach, hawthorn, pear, quince or wild rose blossom will do just as well, for they are all built on the one plan, and belong to the Rose Family, or Rosaceae as Botanists give it.

On the top of the stamens a fine dust, called pollen, is formed; and this pollen, going down the pistil is what forms the seed. Generally the pollen is yellow, and very light. It can be blown a great distance, and when it gets into any pistil it forms a seed just like the plant from which it came. This is why corn mixes. The yellow dust in the tassel, which is the pollen, is blown from one kind of corn, say yellow corn, and is taken up by the silk of pop-corn and there forms a yellow grain. If you went through a field of corn and cut the tops off just after they came out you would get no corn, because there were no tassels to form pollen. If you pulled the silk off as soon as it appeared, the result would be the same, because the stamens, or silk, would not be there to take up the pollen, and you would get nothing but a cob. Now you know why corn mixes. To plant a single grain in a field, by itself, would result in the same way, because the slightest breath of wind would blow the pollen away from the silk.

In another paper we will talk of the different methods whereby varieties of fruit are formed, by mixing the pollen &c.

Once I saw, in New York city, large, red apples, with names, such as Mary, Johnnie, etc., apparently printed on the red, but really the letters were grown there, and I propose telling how it was done. Before we close, permit me to say that this talk about stamens and pollen is a most important one, and you must try to understand it. By the way, before closing, let me say that the apples we all like so well do not grow in the holy land, and the apple of the scripture is the citron, a large, fragrant, yellow fruit, that grows on a noble tree in Palestine. To what does Solomon compare these apples of gold?

HOWARD MILLER

Little Miss Crusoe.

"I want to go out rowing without father or Ned, some day. All you have to do is just to hold the oars and pull this way," said little Helen Grey to her mother.

"Yes, and all there was to do, two years ago to see the well, was to take a seat in the bucket! but you came very near being drowned, my child," said the mother.

"I was small then; put I'm big now; and I want to have my own way, mama, sometimes," said Helen, pettishly.

When the girls of the neighborhood came from school that afternoon, Helen was not with them. The sun was almost down when her mother sent around to inquire for her. All she could find out was that she had asked to be dismissed at recess, and that she had then bought a bag of cakes and peanuts.

The little bay which made up into the town was divided by "Moose Island," on whose hundred acres a few sheep were pastured in summer.

Helen's father's land ran from the main street down to the bay, where it ended in a precipice. On the edge of this bank was a large oak with a seat in it.

Her father went there to look for her. He found, to his dismay, that Ned's dory had been loosed from its moorings and was gone! Her mother remembered the conversation of the morning, and was in great distress lest her child, in trying to "have her own way," might have been carried out to sea by the current.

The alarm soon spread through the town. The church bells were rung, and the boys, always ready for noise, set up the wildest shouts, making the sea and forest ring with "Helen, Helen, Helen-a-n!"

But there was no answering word. When the bells, the horns, and the boys were still a moment, all was as quiet as the grave.

When the night set in, dark and chilly, the kind neighbors divided into bands to search the woods and the water. Sail-boats and small sloops went out through the rough channel. All night they sought, but neither the little girl nor the boat were found!

Every family in the small town was in affliction. No one could think of sleep; lights were burning in ever house, and persons were coming and going in hope of hearing some news.

The day dawned and wore away, and another terrible night set in. Who can ever tell the anguish of those parents?

On the second morning a farmer's boy rowed over to "Moose Island" with salt for his sheep; and there, sitting on a rock, her face blistered with tears, and half-hidden in dirt, sat our young lady, looking more like a little Indian than like the neat little girl that wanted to have her own way.

Her story was that she had rowed thus far, and by some wonderful skill had run into the beach! She ran up the bank, gathered checkerberries, had a picnic from her paper bag, and played with the lambs. Seeing that the sun was low, she ran down towards the boat. But there was no boat there!

She called and screamed; but the surf which beat wildly against the shore drowned her cries. She called till weary, and then fell asleep. Next morning she wandered about, hoping to hail a passing boat. She tore her clothes among the brambles and called till she could no longer hear her own voice for hoarseness. She had nothing to eat all that day, and was sick with hunger, weariness, and fright. She said she heard the bells and the horns, but could not make her own voice heard.

The rough boy, who was very kind, seemed like an angel to her. He carried her down to the boat, and as he began rowing he gave a loud blast on one of the horns that had been left in the boat over night.

This brought the townfolks to the shore, and when they saw a little girl in the boat, they set up a loud cry of joy. Strong men wept, and mothers threw themselves on their knees on the beach, and thanked God for her deliverance.

Helen felt very much ashamed of her disobedience, but very thankful to God who had spared her life, and was a less willful girl ever after that.

Her playmates were all very happy to see her, but when their joy was over they could not resist the temptation to tease her a little, and called her "Miss Crusoe." When she passed along on her way to school, sometimes a roguish boy would call out, "Here comes 'the ancient mariner!'"

THE design of God's providential dispensations is seldom understood at first. We ought, therefore, to believe, though we understand not? and to give ourselves up to the Divine disposal. The great work of faith is, to embrace those things which we know not now, but shall know hereafter.

RULES FOR AGENTS.

1. At the head of every letter give the name of your own post-office, county and State; and the date on which it is written.
2. Write the name and give the full address of every subscriber you send, as legibly as you can.
3. Write "New" before the names of all new subscribers.
4. In ordering a change of address, give the post-office, county, and State, to which the paper is sent, as well as the post-office, county, and State to which it is to be sent.
5. Do not mix up different items of business; but take up and finish one item before you take up another.
6. Write items intended for publication on a separate slip.
7. Make every lawful effort to obtain subscribers, and to do good in whatever way you can.
8. Send money by drafts, post-office money orders, or registered letters.
9. Observe the above rules, and you will expedite business, save us from much trouble, and yourselves and our subscribers from disappointments and vexation.

THIRST FOR GOD.

"As the hart panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God: when shall I come and appear before God."—PSA. LXXII. 1, 2.

While there is some difference in the experience of the people of God, in the prominent features of their experience there is a remarkable sameness. The above language of David and that of Paul, in which he expressed himself as "having a desire to depart and to be with Christ," both express the desires of the new life, and of the spiritually minded, which are common to all saints. It is a manifestation of the divine life in believers rising to its own level in the fountain from which it flows.

"Rivers to the ocean run

Nor stay in all their course;

Fire ascending seeks the sun;

Both speed them to their source:

So a soul that's born of God
Pants to view his glorious face,
Upward tends to his abode,
To rest in his embrace."

Holy love to God, and supreme delight in him as our Chief Good, is the very life and essence of evangelical religion. And if our conversion and reformation do not produce some of this thirsting after God, it is to be feared we are not born of God. If we are made partakers of the divine nature, that nature will possess a divine thirst that nothing short of God the Fountain of living waters can satisfy.—Nothing more than God can the soul desire; and with nothing less can a regenerated soul be satisfied. When David used the language so expressive of intense longing after God, he seems to have been separated from the courts of the house of the Lord, and deprived of the privileges of divine ordinances. And he looked forward with joyful anticipations to the time when he could again "appear before God," and mingle with his brethren in the holy services of the sanctuary. But he looked beyond and above the ordinances and house or sanctuary of the Lord, to the Lord himself, and for him he thirsted. This was with the pious David as it ever should be with all who worship in the courts of the Lord, and through the instituted ordinances of divine service.—These must only be regarded as mediums through which we approach into the divine presence, or as channels through which the spiritual Father flows into the thirsty, humble, and waiting souls. We should value the house of God, and divine ordinances, but we should not rest in them alone, but regard them as means by the proper use of which we become prepared for the reception of the heavenly guests. "If a man love me," said Jesus, "he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." John xiv. 23. And "will God indeed dwell on the earth?" 1 Kings viii. 27. He will. And what is better still, he will dwell in us, for he hath said, "I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people." 2 Cor. vi. 16. Here is the ground on which saints believe and hope. They "hunger and thirst after righteousness," and they shall be "filled with all the fullness of God." Eph. iii. 19. "They shall be abundantly satisfied with the fatness of thy house; and thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures. For with thee is the fountain of life." Psa. xxxvi. 8, 9. These are sweet and encouraging words to those that thirst after God.

Those who have seen and felt the vanity of the world, and turned away from it with aching, anxious, and bleeding hearts, and have been drawn by Jesus, the magnet of divine love, to the Father, and have drunk of the water of life, and felt its refreshing, invigorating, and exhilarating influences, will "thirst for God." To such a world that lies in wickedness can impart but little real pleasure. They feel it to be an arid plain, and a desert land, destitute of the springs affording the living streams of which they have drunk, and which have produced in them desires, which can only be satisfied by the "water of life," and hence they "thirst for God."

Christian reader, have you so compared the pleasures of the world with those of a divine character, as to see the great superiority of the latter over the former; and do you with David "thirst for God," and with Paul, "count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ our Lord?" Remember where the fountain is to be found. It stands not among the "noisy multitude, or the fashionable throng, or in the wild speculators' mart, unless duty calls us to such places. If we frequent them, it should be from necessity, and not from choice. And when duty calls us to such places, we shall want to remain no longer than is necessary to attend to our business. It has been said, and properly said that a Christian in the world or worldly company should be like a person transacting business under a shower of rain. Business over, he quickly retires. How suggestive the petition in the Lord's prayer, "Lead us not into temptation."

And you, friendly reader, who have never thirsted for God, or tasted that he is gracious, and experimentally know of no higher good than this world affords, what will you do when earthly things fail, as fail they must? Take an honest and candid view of yourself and of all around you, and cultivate that spiritual nature that thirsts for God, and you will then have a never-failing source of all that is needful and desirable to rely on, and when your joys are full, you "shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more."

DISTRICT MEETING OF WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA.

Our District Meeting for Western Pennsylvania was held in the Jacob's Creek church, in Fayette county about eight miles below Connellsville. The meeting was a very pleasant and harmonious one. The attendance was not very large, though the congregations in the district were generally represented. We were happy to find the amount of business before the meeting was not extensive, and the queries sent to the Annual Meeting were but few. The pressure in regard to the manner of holding the A. M. has been felt in our district, and a query in regard to that matter was before the meeting, and it was sent up to the Annual Council.—

Our brethren want to see an improvement in our Annual Meeting, but without requesting any general change, they simply ask the meeting to be governed by the principles it adopted for its government in 1866, believing that if it does so, it will be more satisfactory than it has been for the last few years; enough so, perhaps, without making any general change in the manner of holding it.

The reporting question is one that our brethren feel considerable interest in, and there was a remarkable unanimity of feeling in requesting a full report. The missionary question has awakened some interest, and obtained some attention in our district. We mean the subject of home missionary work. And there was a general feeling manifested in the meeting to give more attention to it. And we hope it will be done.

The spirit that was manifested at our District Meeting was a commendable one, and one of union, peace, and love. We hope the same spirit has manifested itself in the district meetings throughout the brotherhood, and that it will extensively prevail at our Annual Meeting.—How desirable it is that such should be the case! And the copious effusions of the Holy Spirit will be productive of great peace. May such a gracious dispensation of the Lord be vouchsafed to the brethren, to enable them to labor and suffer for the promotion of his cause.

EXCURSION TICKETS TO A. M. OVER PITTS., FT. WAYNE & CHICAGO RAILROAD.

Round trip excursion tickets over the above named road will be sold under the following rule. To parties of 20 to 29 at rate of 5cts. per mile one way. 30 to 39 " " 4½cts. " " 40 or more " " 4cts. " "

No excursion tickets will be sold at a less rate than forty cents, i. e., for such distances that the ticket will not cost forty cents.

The going coupon will be limited to two trains, one on the 3rd and one on the 5th of June, both trains leaving Pittsburgh at 9:12 a. m.

At Pittsburgh the tickets will be furnished to all who apply at the proper time to take the 9:12 train on either the 3rd or 5th, as we have guaranteed the sale of twenty tickets on the two days; but at any of the other stations along the line no excursions will be sold to a less party than twenty. Brethren along the line will notice this fact, and see to it that they are properly grouped and are prepared to take the proper trains.

We expect to take the 9:12 a. m. train on the 3rd of June, and shall be pleased to meet a number of the delegates and others there at that time. It will be noticed that this is the shortest route from Pittsburgh, and it is the only line over which reduced rates are arranged for from Pittsburgh.

Call for tickets to CRESTLINE; at Crestline we take the Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati and Indianapolis railroad to Gretna.

At Gretna Station we expect to have our Business station, where we shall be happy to meet all who have business to transact with this office. We will have Hymn Books, and the "Jewish Passover and Lord's Supper," for those who may want them. We will also solicit subscriptions to the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, and receive orders for the Minutes of A. M. We will have the account books of this office there and shall cheerfully balance accounts with all who may ask for the favor—ask practically, of course.

OUR DEPARTURE FOR OHIO.

Various matters both of a business and a religious character making it desirable that we should spend a little time in Ohio, and as it will suit our circumstances best to do so before the Annual Meeting, we expect, if the Lord will, to leave home on Tuesday, the 23rd inst., for Ohio, to remain there till after the meeting, when we hope to return refreshed and invigorated, to resume our labors. We commit all our affairs into the care of the Lord during our absence, to protect and assist as the occasion may require.

We have a number of letters from correspondents, and of queries, on hand to be answered, and we must ask the indulgence of those who sent them, as we have not, for want of time. We will give them our attention as soon as we have time to do so.

[The above was written before the editor left home. He left on the morning of the 24th inst., and we hope he may have a pleasant and prosperous journey.—B.]

WHAT ARE WE DOING?

This question spontaneously arises in our minds when we read such items as the following:

"The English Baptists have recently purchased a site for another Baptist Church in connection with their mission in Rome. The area measures five hundred square yards, and is situated close to the ancient Basilica of Santa Pudenziana, of which Cardinal Wiseman was titular, and above part of the remains of the House of Pudens. In connection with the church will be a school house, minister's residence, an establishment for the sale of religious publications, &c. Rev. Paul Grissi, a Catholic convert, is to be the pastor."

While the English Baptists are invading Rome, we may well ask, what are we doing? Read on, and see what American Baptists are doing:

"Major George W. Ingalls has been appointed Superintendent of the Indian Missions by the American Baptist Home Mission Society. Major Ingalls has been an Indian Agent for four years, from which office he retired with an honorable record. He proposes to travel through the States delivering lectures upon the present condition of the Indians as a means of raising money for his new work. He will be accompanied on his tour by several Indians. The Baptists have among the Five Tribes 83 churches with 5,000 members."

While this is going on; while Baptists are preaching the gospel in Rome, and in the western wilds, what are we doing in this direction? Where are our churches on foreign soil? Where are they among Red men of the forest in America? Nay where are they in many other states of this our beloved land of freedom? Yes, where are they? Echo answers, "Where?" and a voice cries from every nation under heaven outside of our own, saying: "Your churches are not here." From many portions of our own land there comes up the cry, "Come over and help us!" while in many other portions we are not so much as known. Where are our Missionaries? You say, "In Denmark." Yes, in Denmark; one humble minister and his family. And what encouragement does he receive? What are we doing? Let us be careful that we do not starve him and then say, "The Mission was a failure." B.

Cleanings and Jottings.

At the E. Pa., Eldership of the Church of God, convened at Washington, Lancaster Co., Pa., on the 10th inst., several important questions were discussed, among which was that of the moral duty of making restitution. The Church Advocate says:

"There was unanimity of sentiment as to the duty of making restitution. Among the valuable lessons brought out was the extent of this duty. It was held that restitution pertains not alone to property unlawfully taken, but to fraud of any kind, debts, compromises by bankrupts, injuries by insinuations, false reports, calumnies, etc., etc. This doctrine long buried and forgotten received something of a resurrection."

Bro. P. R. Wrightsmen, of South Bend, Ind., writes:

"This may inform your readers, that our congregation, Portage Prairie, is in a healthy condition, morally; we are in love and union, and making a little progress in the Master's cause. I baptized a Baptist minister this spring, who is now rejoicing in the promises fully; and other Baptist members are counting the cost, and have signified that they would follow the Lord fully.

The general health is good. Enclosed you will find $1 00 for which send me the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. I have shut down on our city daily, and feel to turn it over to encourage our own church papers. I like the Pilgrim, but must have the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN too. I feel that two good, religious papers will encourage us so that we can get through the hard times better. Brethren and sisters, never, no never, curtail any of the means of grace, because of hard times, but curtail the luxuries of the body and stomach, and with our shoulders to the wheel of progression, help to surmount difficulties that now seem impassable, but with Paul, we can do all things through Christ's strengthening us."

Brother J. W. Wilt has changed his address from Rural Valley, Pa., to Oakland, Armstrong Co., Pa.,

GLEANINGS FROM EXCHANGES.

The potato bug has made its appearance in Northern New Jersey, and has created great apprehensions among the farmers of that section.

A Milford dispatch says that a recent rain extinguished the fires which have been raging in the mountains in the lower part of Pike Co., Pa. Thousands of acres of valuable timber land were burned over and the timber destroyed.

A severe thunder-storm visited Pittsburg, Pa., Saturday afternoon. Lightning struck the chimney of Kanaga's hotel. The falling brick crushed in the roof of a kitchen, slightly injuring eight girls.

Ten criminals, a majority of them white men, were flogged (more or less severely), at the New Castle (Del.) jail on Saturday, the number of lashes dealt out to each ranging from ten to thirty.

A "press-mill" in Dupont's powder works, near Wilmington, Delaware, exploded on Saturday morning, killing four men—all employed in the works.

Allen L. Clarke, who was tried in Somerset county, Maryland, last week for forging a check for $10,000 on Jenkins & Chandler, of Baltimore, has been acquitted on the ground of insanity.

The total supply of anthracite from all the regions up to May 22d is 929,563 tons ahead of that of last year to the same date. The supply of bituminous is so far 55,488 ahead of that of the same period of last year.

Several more illicit whisky distilleries in Henry, Carroll and Henderson counties, Tenn., have been broken up, and the parties connected therewith arrested.

The Methodist Episcopal General Conference, on the 18th, adopted resolutions earnestly protesting against the sale of intoxicating liquors within the limits of the Centennial grounds.

The boilers of the steamer Pat Cleburne exploded near Shawneetown, Illinois, Wednesday night, May 17, causing the death of several persons and injuring a number of others.

Henry C. Bowen was expelled from Plymouth Church, Tuesday night, May 18th. He submitted a four column protest, but the resolution of expulsion was adopted unanimously.

The total immigration to the United States last year was 191,231, of which two-thirds were males. In former years the proportion has always been in favor of females.

Advices from Bagdad state that from the 23d to the 29th of April, inclusive, the deaths from the plague numbered 399. At Hillah during the same period they were 140.

The north-bound train on the Maysville and Lexington railroad broke through the bridge near Millersburg, Kentucky, on the 19th, wrecking one passenger car and the baggage car. No person killed, but fourteen passengers were injured, some severely.

A gentleman arrived in San Francisco recently from the southern country, carrying with him the head of Chavez, the bandit, for which the Governor had offered a reward of $5,000.

The Centennial Commission, when it adjourned last Saturday, adjourned until July 1st. No action was taken on either the Sunday or the admission question. The latter was left for the decision of the Executive Committee and a Board of Finance, and will be settled during the recess, while the Sunday question is closed until the next meeting. Of course the buildings and grounds will remain closed on Sunday as heretofore.

In the Methodist Episcopal General Conference, on the 19th, resolutions were adopted looking to an early and complete union with the Church South.

The recent annual meeting of the American Bible Society, held in New York city, shows that "receipts from all sources for the year were $427,598. The expenditures for the same period were $539,281, including balance on hand, May, 1875, and there is still a balance left of $8,980. During the year 876,770 Bibles were manufactured, and 850,470 were distributed by the Society. The Society has circulated the Bible in twenty foreign countries during the year, and had it printed in nearly as many languages. The anniversary was held on the 16th of May, in Philadelphia.

A safe deposit vault just completed in London is deemed invulnerable. It is sunk forty-six feet in the ground, with walls of brick and concrete six feet thick. Inside this structure is the safe, three feet thick, made of fire-brick and undrillable iron. The metal doors weigh four tons each, and are swung by hydraulic power.

In the Methodist General Conference on Saturday, an election for editor of the Ladies' Repository resulted in the selection of Dr. Curry, formerly editor of the New York Christian Advocate.

NOTICE TO BRETHREN COMING TO THE ANNUAL MEETING.

Gretna is the station at which to stop. It is on the Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati and Indianapolis railroad, 4 1/4 miles east of DeGraff, and 4 1/4 miles west of Bellefontaine, Ohio. No trains stop at Gretna but local trains, until June 5th; then all trains will stop during the meeting. Gretna is 2 1/4 miles north of the place of the meeting.

Members of the standing committee who cannot get through in time to organize on Monday the 5th, should come on Saturday, the 3rd. Those coming on the 3rd, should stop off at DeGraff, where they will be met by the brethren.

No arrangements are made at the place of meeting to entertain any before Monday, the 5th of June; and there will be no preaching on the ground where the A. M. is to be held.

Come on to the A. M. Pay your fare on our road from any point at which you may strike it, asking no questions. At A. M. you will be told what the return rates will be, if any, by the corresponding Secretary of the meeting.

All letters and telegrams to those in attendance at the meeting, must be addressed to DeGraff, Logan Co., Ohio, in care of J. N. Kauffman, box 111.—Such only will be forwarded to the place of meeting.

POINTS AT WHICH OTHER RAILROADS CROSS THE C. C. C. AND I. ROAD.

1. West of Cleveland: Shelby, on the Baltimore and Ohio, coming from Chicago; Crestline, on the Pitts. Ft. Wayne and Chicago, from the east; Galion, on the Cleveland and Columbus division, and on the Atlantic and Great Western; Marion, on the same road; Bellefontaine, at the Cincinnati, Sandusky and Cleveland crossing.

2. West of DeGraff: Sidney, at the Dayton Michigan and C. crossing; Union City, Pittsburgh Cincinnati and St. Louis (Panhandle Route) crossing; Winchester, at the Grand Rapids Ft. Wayne and Richmond railroad crossing; next Muncy, next Anderson crossing, and next Indianapolis. We expect railroad arrangements through to St. Louis.

J. N. KAUFFMAN,
Cor. Sec. of the A. M.

LATER.

Brethren coming to A. M. on the Bee-Line or C. C. C. and I. railroad will get excursion tickets at all the principal ticket offices on the line of the railroad from Cleveland to Indianapolis, and from Columbus to Galion, at 2 cents per mile each way. Pay four cents per mile coming to A. M., and get a return ticket where you pay your fare. The same arrangements, I think, can be made from Indianapolis to St. Louis, which I will try to make. If I succeed, you will find those tickets for sale at all the principal stations between Indianapolis to St. Louis. Ask for those tickets at the point you strike the railroad, that is, the Indianapolis and St. Louis railroad. This notice will suffice for all.

Correspondence.

Letter from Our Danish Missionary.

We have finally succeeded in renting a house, which is now ready to receive our dear brethren elected by the Holy Ghost and the church for the missionary work. We are located in a beautiful part of Denmark, close to Germany, having direct communication with London in England in the summer. We are now working on the tracts to get them printed and ready for distribution, and then, according to instructions, we will start out spreading and preaching the gospel.—There is no danger to be apprehended from the government so far as I have learned, if we only avoid politics; and there is no danger, either, for those who are converted, as the magistrates do not look after them when they are not home (I mean those who are of age for military service). We expect our dear Hansen by the beginning of May to come here and join in with us in the good cause. This, at least, was our agreement when we left him two weeks ago. My wife and child are now much better. Hope soon to see them well again. We have found that our tracts will be much needed, as people have hundreds of questions to ask us in relation to our churches in America. It looks to us as if the most successful thing to be done is to go out and spread our tracts, converse with the people, and hold meetings when they can be held. I can not see that we can do any other way if the mission is to be successful.

The country is changed altogether since I was here. Then, everything was low, but now high prices prevail, so much so that machinery and all kinds of tools, furniture, and provisions are sent here from America. A good horse is sold here for $250 or $300, and a cow for from $50 to $80, a fat sheep for $5 or $9, and butter, 35 cents per lb., which will show that the cost of living is high. But people think it will change soon, and be less trade, lower prices, and then harder times for the poor. Work has commanded tolerably fair wages for some time, but it is hard to get, as the country has plenty of working hands.

We would desire some good, encouraging writing in our papers, as that is the only thing we can get from you to strengthen us. We find plenty of cause for discouragement here, and we don't wish to see it come from you. Dear brethren, help us to carry on the good work, for we shall all reap in due time if we faint not. Pray for us.

We remain yours in love,

CHRISTIAN HOPE.

Beloved Brother Quinter:

Yours of the 4th inst., making inquiry as to my age, personal circumstances, nature of my disease, &c., has just come to hand.

I was born April 16, 1831. My grandfather was for many years the Bishop of this church, and died at the age of 97.—My father was a deacon, and died four and a-half years ago, at the age of 78.—

My mother was the mirror of holiness, with an organization bordering on the angelic, a facet of the Infinite Reservoir of Love, flooding everything and everybody about her with the fullness of her Christly life. She died in this little chamber in which I trace these lines, on New Year's Eve, 1874. Her closing days were a translation, her death a triumph.

My parents began their wedded life poor. But my father was a man of prodigious physical endurance, and owned a farm when he died. Unremitting toil, exposure, and manifold violations of organic law, made him prematurely old, rendered the last seven years of his life helpless, and his death a living putrefaction. His sufferings were unutterable, but in all his afflictions he was strong in faith, giving glory to God.

I inherited my father's indomitable will, and my mother's ethereal qualities. From my childhood I was a mystery to myself and to others. I puzzled all whom I met with strange, out of the way questions. I read every paper, almanac, book, scrap, that came in my way. I used to sit before the stove at night when the rest were asleep, and rake the coals out of the ashes, one by one, and study by their dim light till my eyes felt like bursting. I taught school when very young—four terms. Then went to the Harrisburg Academy to gain a more thorough knowledge of the elementary branches. Then to Gettysburg to study mathematics. And then to Freeland Seminary to acquire a knowledge of Greek and Latin. I then read medicine one year, went to Philadelphia to attend lectures, and then to New York to attend two courses in Dr. R. T. Trall's Hygieo-Therapeutic College.

In my first term of teaching I had a poor school room and a poor stove, and inhaled much stone-coal gas, resulting in sore-throat and elongated uvula. This became so annoying that the best medical counsel advised an excision of the uvula. That was a great blunder. The hemorrhage was profuse, necessitating the application of the bare nitrate of silver to arrest it. This caused severe inflammation, calling for continued cauterization in solution. This course was pursued for a year, totally destroying my voice, and impregnating my system with a deadly poison. This was in 1853. I was confined to bed nearly a year, and speechless seven years. Regained my voice in 1860. Used it much for ten years. Broke down again and became voiceless in February, 1871. Have been speechless since. Have been incapacitated for self-support since 1853. During 1873-4 I was confined to bed. Since then I am able to be up most of the time. The last year of my confinement I spent all alone in the room where my mother died. My meals were brought to me from an adjacent house by a sister who carries the flaming seal of God in her forehead. Since May 13th, 1872, I have not passed an hour without suffering.—Human language is too meager to adequately express the agonies I have passed through.

I have a small annuity that enables me to live like a king, that is, compared with my desert. I subsist on a shilling's worth of each of the following articles per week: Meat, bread, rice, eggs, fruit, vegetables. Measuring my supplies with my desires, I know, with Paul, how to "suffer need." Measured by my desert, "I am full and abound." I never ask for anything, "being forbidden of the Holy Ghost." On the ground of poverty, I never accept any thing, though I see no valid reason why I may not accept expressions of regard from my friends, even in the consciousness of receiving them unworthily. I am nothing but a sinner, and the chief, at that, hoping only for salvation through the superabounding grace of Christ.

A retrospect of my past life, as viewed from myself, elicits the humiliating confession—O, the ingratitude, the fulfulness, the unworthiness! Viewed as from God, I must exclaim, in wonder and adoration, O, "the riches of His goodness, and forbearance, and long suffering." This I "count for my salvation."

C. H. BALSBAUGH.

The Parting of Loved Ones.

The parting of friends by death is almost an every day occurrence. We look for the last time on a friend, and pass along in our usual avocations only a few days, when we are called to weep by the grave of another. These partings nearly all have experienced, and they are sad.—Sometimes those are suddenly taken away whom we dearly love and the thought that they can never be with us here again is almost unendurable.

A parting scene of this kind I lately witnessed. A loved mother was suddenly taken from the midst of the family circle. Weeping friends came from far and near at the unexpected call. Strangers crowded around, all anxious to take a last look on her whom none knew hut to love. Never shall I forget the heart broken husband as he stood by the remains of the one who was so dear to him and exclaimed, "O my God! can this be?" and led his oldest child, a darling boy, by his side and told him never to forget the teachings of his mother. There was the little prattler of two years, laughingly pointing to Mamma, and the little babe of ten days in the cradle; also an aged grandmother bending over the form of her daughter weeping and exclaiming, "My poor Jane!"

Oh! what a cruel monster death seems sometimes to cut down so suddenly those whom we can scarcely part with. How hard to say, "Thy will be done." How important, then, to prepare for Heaven, where sad partings are never known.

EMMA A. MILLER.

Have We a Right?

Have we a right to forbid the sale of provisions at meetings when Jesus Christ did not forbid it? "One of his disciples, Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, saith unto him, There is a lad here which hath five barley loaves and two small fishes; but what are they among so many?"—John vi. 8, 9; and the following verse goes to show that Jesus approved of bringing the provision from the fact that he commanded his disciples to make the men sit down on the grass and feed them, as I believe, with the five loaves and two fishes that the lad had brought there for sale. And have we a right to make traditions not to feed a mixed multitude when Jesus positively commanded his disciples to feed them? But Jesus said unto them, They need not depart; give ye them to eat." Math. xiv. 16. "And when the day began to wear away, then came the twelve and said unto him, Send the multitude away that they go into the towns and country round about, and lodge and get victuals: for we are here in a desert place. But he said unto them, give them to eat." Even as the children of Israel traveled through the wilderness of Zin, so are we traveling in the wilderness of sin, or desert place, where the pilgrim needs both temporal and spiritual food, and the Savior has commanded his apostles to feed all nations with the same, in that he commanded them to "teach all nations whatsoever I have commanded you." Matth. xxviii. 20. The above passages of Scripture are of a weighty matter and well worth our consideration before going too far in making rules or orders about such matters, or asking the Lord for different light upon a subject as plain as the above, as there have been some intimations made through our periodicals for the brethren to pray the Lord to throw light on the subject of holding Conference with less expense. Is the brotherhood too poor to feed a mixed multitude, or unwilling to comply with the command given by the Savior to his apostles?

Yours fraternally,
A PILGRIM BROTHER.

Dear Brother Quinter:

In current volume, No. 12, page 188, over the signature of P. J. Brown will be found the request that I revise my article headed "Historical," published in No. 10, page 156. After reading it in print, I discovered the absence of a few names I should have recorded. The reason these were omitted is, I had a written record from 1856 to go by, and those omitted were not on the record I had.—Prior to 1856, I had few written notes to go by, and I gathered some of the events and dates from the recollection of our oldest brethren and sisters. Brother Brown, who lived in and preached for this church for some 13 years, is or was very familiar with the transactions of the church during that time, and is in possession of some papers, from the dates of which, and very distinctly remembering from other events transpiring in the same year, is quite sure I made a few slight mistakes in my dates as obtained from the recollections of those familiar with the transactions of the church at that time, and hence the dates I give. With Bro. B. I too feel interested in having this item of history as nearly correct as we can have it. And having a desire to do justice to all concerned, I feel under obligations to comply with said request, and hope, too, our editors will indulge us in the wish to have it republished for the satisfaction of all concerned, and for preservation for those who come after us.

Historical.

In the year 1811, there was, in the south-eastern part of Fayette county, Pa., in the neighborhood of Markleysburg, a small congregation of Mennonites, who had no regular minister to preach for them. About this time Brother George Hinebaugh, a minister of the Elk Lick church, Somerset county, would occasionally preach in the neighborhood of these Mennonites, and in this same year (1811) he baptized Magdalena Thomas, wife of Michael Thomas, and mother of Elder Jacob M. Thomas. She was the first person baptized in this church.—Brother Hinebaugh continued his visits, and, in the course of three years, the number baptized had increased so that in the fall of 1814 they appointed a lovefeast at the house of Brother Jacob Fike, about one mile from Markleysburg. Eld. Samuel Garber, of Rockingham county, Va., was present and officiated at this meeting. An election was held for one speaker and one deacon. The lot fell on Jacob Fike, speaker, and Alexander Thomas, deacon,—the former father-in-law and the latter uncle to Elder M. Thomas. Then and there this church organized. It is now known as the Sandy Creek church, West Va.

About this time Brother Stuckman, a minister of the Jacob's Creek church, Pa., would occasionally come and preach for this newly organized church. In 1818 John Boger, a deacon of the Berlin church, moved into this church. In 1824 an election was held for two speakers and two deacons. John Boger and Samuel Hazelett were chosen speakers, and Christian Musser and a brother Landman, deacons. Up to this time all the preaching was in German, Samuel Hazelett being the first English speaker elected.—This same year (1824) Brother James Kelse, a minister of the Cumberland Valley church, Md., moved into the bounds of this church. Now, ten years after its organization, there were in this church four speakers—two German and two English—three deacons, and, as near as we can learn, about thirty members. From 1824 to 1834 the church had but few additions. In 1835 Jacob M. Thomas and George Moyer were elected deacons. In 1836, or about that time, Jacob Fike (minister) moved into Ohio, and J. Kelse (minister) into another congregation, and a choice was made for two speakers and two deacons. Jacob M. Thomas and George Moyer were chosen speakers, and John M. Thomas and Samuel Boger, deacons. In 1841 Andrew Umbel and Michael M. Thomas were elected speakers, and Joseph Zimmerman and Joseph M. Thomas, deacons, brethren Musser and Landman (deacons) now being dead. In 1842, or about this time, Daniel Harader was elected speaker, but he, like some others, did not accept the call. In 1845 George J. Thomas, Christian Fike, and Christian Thomas were chosen deacons. In 1850 this church commenced building her first meeting-house, and in 1851 about completed it, now known as the Salem church. Early in the fall of that year they held their first lovefeast in their new house. Samuel Hazelett now being dead, and George Moyer, from some cause, having left the church and attached himself to the fraternity known as the Shoemakers, both being ministers, about one month after this first lovefeast there was a special council called for the purpose of electing two ministers, and the lot fell on P. J. Brown and Christian Harader, Elders John Berkeley and Jacob Lichty, of Somerset county, being present. Brethren Quinter and J. Kelse were also present.

In 1852 John Boger, oldest minister in the church, died. Brethren Brown and Harader, both being English speakers, the German now ceased to be spoken. About this time, Jacob M. Thomas was ordained to the eldership. In 1856 Christian Harader (minister) moved to Iowa. In 1857 Samuel C. Umbel, Larken Hall, and J. M. Bernet were chosen ministers, and John Seese, Solomon Workman, and Franklin Shriver, deacons. In 1858 F. C. Barnes was elected deacon, and Jacob Beeghly, a minister of the Bear Creek church, moved into this church.

In the spring of 1861 several series of meetings were held in this church by the labors of P. J. Brown, Jacob M. Thomas, and Jacob Beeghly, which resulted in the addition of 91 by baptism and 5 reclaimed. This same year George Moyer came back to the church again. In 1862, or near that time, John S. Hook was chosen minister. In 1863 Jos. M. Thomas (deacon) moved to Ohio; Larken Hall (minister), to Iowa; and F. C. Barnes elected minister and M. J. Thomas deacon. In 1864 P. J. Brown moved to Ohio and James A. Ridenour (minister) moved into this church. The same year Geo. Moyer (minister) died. In 1866, June 26th, M. J. Thomas was elected minister, and in 1867 Henry Griffith, Henry Turney, John Romesburg, Jacob Beeghly, and Samuel Thomas were elected deacons. In 1868, or about that time, William C. Thomas was elected speaker. In 1869 Joseph Reckner was chosen speaker, and Joseph Guthrie, deacon.—In 1870 John Romesburg, deacon, died. In 1871 Samuel Boger, deacon, died, and in 1872 Henry Turney, deacon, died, and John Schrock, deacon, moved into this church. In 1873 Jacob Rush was chosen minister. Elder C. Harader was present at this election, 17 years after he had moved out of this church. This same year Ezra Thomas, Peter Strawser, and Harrison Glover were chosen deacons.—In 1874 John Wilhelm was chosen deacon. In 1875, H. Glover moved to Nebraska, and Elder Solomon Buckalew from Cheat River, moved into this church.—In 1876, Jan. 1st, Peter Guthrie was chosen deacon, and the writer promoted to the full commission.

So at this date, Jan. 1st, 1876, about 62 years after the organization, this church has 12 ministers—2 of whom are elders, and all of whom speak English, and 2 also speak German—16 deacons, and a membership of about 400. Nineteen ministers have been elected in this church and 29 deacons. Of the ministers 5 have died, 1 is in Missouri, 1 in Ohio, 2 in Iowa, 1 in Westmoreland Co., Pa., and 9 are still at home. Of the deacons, 7 have died, 2 are in Ohio, 1 in Nebraska, 5 are now speakers, and 14 are still at home.

Brother James:

We are the brethren of the Upper Codorus congregation, sometimes called Miller's congregation. We are erecting a new meeting-house near the Maryland line, and near to Baughman's new railroad, where brethren can easily come by the railroad. As to church news I have but little to give; but, so far as I know, we have but little cause for complaint. Thanks be to God for his mercy and goodness shown toward us. I think, when we consider what he has done for us, we should be more earnest, loving and kind. If God should deal with us according to our conduct toward him, I fear it would go very poorly with us; but God is merciful to the unjust, as well as kind to all. So we should be also. The Scriptures teach us that we should love our enemies. Love is the bond of perfectness. We read, too, that love is greater than either faith or hope. Where the love of God is there is kindness. If we could remove mountains, and understood all prophecy, or could speak with the tongues of men and angels, it would not profit us anything if we had not charity or love. Not every thing that glitters is gold; so not every thing that makes a fair appearance, or shines, is really good and pure. There may be a good outside appearance, while the inside may be hollow or rotten.

Editors Primitive Christian:

I am no subscriber to your valuable paper; however, I have the pleasure of reading it pretty regularly. I think much good must result to the unconverted, who are not yet heeding God's word. When I fail to read one number of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, I feel disconsolate; the time seems to pass away slowly till I am privileged to peruse its wholesome pages, which seem to agitate a sinner's mind, causing him to think, and meditate on the goodness of God. I also have the pleasure of attending the Brethren's meetings, of which I hope to be a member before long. We should all strive to do all the good we can to our fellow men, and obey him who is able to conduct us through the vicissitudes of life, that we may meet in a serener clime. In God's word we learn that heaven is a place of happiness; then it is surely worth contending for.

As an item of news I will say, that, in this locality, everything has assumed a growing appearance. Corn is not all planted yet on account of the wet weather we have had for a few days past. Fruit promises to be a bountiful crop. Health is reasonably good; no deaths have occurred of late. Early in the spring, lung fever and colds were prevalent.

Yours in love,

A. E. KEACY.

Book Notice.—An Apology.

Doubtless some apology is due many of the brethren and sisters for my great delay in filling orders for my last pamphlet, entitled One Baptism. Owing to my printers being overrun with work, they were some four months behind time getting my pamphlet finished. But it is now out, containing forty closely printed pages, and will be found the most interesting pamphlet that I have yet published, being a dialogue, showing that trine immersion is the only ground of union in baptism, that can be conscientiously occupied by the leading denominations of Christendom. I have now filled all orders on hand, and if any mistakes have occurred the parties will please give me immediate notice. The pamphlet will be sent, post-paid, on the following terms: One copy, 15 cents; 10 copies, $1; 25 copies, $2.—Some one in each congregation should send at least one dollar and get ten copies to sell. Also, Bro Stein's Christianity Incompatible with War is now, at his own request, reduced to 25 cents per copy.—This is an excellent work and should be in the hands of all lovers of peace.

Address, J. H. MOORE,
Urbana, Champaign Co., Ills.

To Whom it may Concern.

Some four years ago there was a notice published in the Gospel Visitor, concerning John K. Leedy, from the Flatrock church, Va. Now as there has been a reconciliation between said church and J. K. Leedy, we take this method to inform the brotherhood again, through the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, that such is done by order of the church. Signed in behalf of the church.

The Stein Fund.

HOW TO COMPLETE IT PROMPTLY.

The Northern District of Illinois at its meeting, May 15th, appropriated sixty dollars to the above named fund, believing this to be about our share. It is to be hoped that other districts will take similar steps to complete the matter, and thus enable the work to be begun as soon as possible. Fraternaly,

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstance in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

ESTHER BALES fell asleep in death, March 24th, 1876 aged 61 years, 1 month and 13 days. She was a faithful and consistent member of the Christian church for twenty years. Her associations and daily walk with her friends and neighbors, were examples of piety and humility. Her charity to the poor and needy was without stint, and she was always faithful to the divine injunction to visit the sick in their affliction. Funeral by Elder Daniel Bowman, from Heb. xiii. 14, to a large congregation of sympathizing neighbors and friends. B. F. KOONS.

BROTHER JACOB REFLOE died in the Libertyville church, Jefferson county, Iowa, on the 11th day of May, 1875, aged 55 years, 7 months, 11 days. Brother Jacob was unmarried. He was a worthy member, and tried to walk worthy of the vocation of his calling. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Funeral discourse by brethren Christian Harader and Peter Luiz.

JOHN H. ESHELMAN.

In the Clavion congregation, MARION WOOD, son of Elder Wood and Sister Mary Wood, April 20th, 1876, aged 9 months and 14 days. Funeral services by the writer, from Matth. xviii. 2, 3.

G. W. SHIVELY.

NANCY BALES, wife of Benjamin Bales, died August 16th, 1875, aged 61 years 6 months and 28 days. She was a kind and dutiful wife, an affectionate and loving mother, and a faithful and exemplary member of the Christian church for more than 14 years.—Funeral by Elder Daniel Bowman, from John ii. 25, 26, "Whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." Oh! what cheering and incentive words are these of the dear and loving Savior! Though these mortal bodies of ours sicken and die, and moulder back to the earth whence they came, yet if we are faithful to God's holy law, we will continue to live on in a more holy and blissful state of existence.

In the South Waterloo church, Black Hawk county, Iowa, April 30th, 1876, Elder TOBIAS MUSSEK, aged 47 years and 17 days. He leaves a sorrowing widow (a sister) and eight children to mourn his departure. Bro. Musseck was born on the 13th day of April, 1830, near Berlin, Somerset county, Pa. He removed some years ago, to Janelaw, Lewis county, W. Va., whence he removed, three years ago, to this State. He ailed all winter (disease unknown), and died in the triumph of faith. His death will be greatly felt all over the community. Funeral obsequies was improved by the Brethren, speaking to a very large concourse of people, from Rev. xiv. 15.

ELIAS K. BUECHLY.

In Cook's Creek church, Rockingham Co., Va., April 7th, 1876, Brother RAPHAEL, MY-

MRS. aged 35 years 9 months and 17 days.—Disease, typhoid fever. He was an official member in the church. Funeral services by brethren Jacob Thomas and Solomon Garber from Psa xxxvi. 9.

In the same congregation, and at the same place, of the same disease, April 18th, Sister CATHERINE MYERS, mother of the above and of the writer, aged 59 years 11 months and 23 days. Funeral services by Brethren Isaac Long and S. Cline, from 2 Tim. iv. 6th. SAMUEL H. MYERS.

In the Tuscarawas congregation, Tuscarawas county, O., May 4th, 1876, JOHN HENRY, son of Brother Jacob and Sister Elizabeth Huff, aged 4 months less 1 day. It is well with the child. Funeral services by the writer. NOAH LONGANBECKER.

At Buffalo Mills, Bedford Co., Pa., March 30th, 1876, MRS. SARAH JANE HARDMAN, wife of Jacob Hardman, and daughter of Peter and Hannah Arnold, aged 38 years.—She left six children living, the youngest only eight days old. She gave directions and advice to her family as calmly and composedly as if going on a pleasant journey.—During her last hours she seemed to be talking with her two little boys who had preceded her to the spirit world. EMMA A. MILLER.

Mr. CHASE HALE and his wife, CLARISSA HALE, who were each 85 years old, died at their residence in Washington county, Tenn., last Saturday night. It is said by those who were present that there was not more than one-fourth of a minute's difference in the time of their death. These old people lived together as husband and wife for perhaps 65 years. Their lives were spent pleasantly together, and it is said that in their devotions for the last fifteen years they have prayed that they might both die at the same time. PETER MILLER.

In the Cowanshannock congregation, Armstrong county, Pa., of scarlet fever, SUSANNAH, daughter of William and Catharine Hays, and granddaughter of Brother Martin and Sister Mary John, aged 4 years 9 months and 13 days. Funeral services by the writer, on the 14th of May, 1876, from Luke xviii. 15, 16. J. B. WAMPLER.

"O wad some power the gift to gie' us,
To see ourselves as ithers see us."

Behold that pale, emaciated figure, with downcast eye, like some criminal about to meet her fate! See that nervous, distrustful look, as she walks along with a slow and unsteady step. The pink has left her cheeks and the cherry her lips. The once sparkling, dancing eyes are now dull and expressionless. The once warm, dimpled hands are now thin and cold.—Her beauty has fled. What has wrought this wondrous change? What is that which is lurking beneath the surface of that once lovely form? Does she realize her terrible condition? Is she aware of the woful appearance she makes? Woman, from her very nature, is subject to a catalogue of diseases from which man is entirely exempt. Many of these maladies are caused by her own carelessness, or through ignorance of the laws of her being. Again, many female diseases, if properly treated, might be arrested in their course, and thereby prove of short duration. They should not be left to an inexperienced physician who does not understand their nature, and is, therefore, incompetent to treat them. The importance of attending to Female Diseases in their earliest stages cannot be too strongly urged. For if neglected, they frequently lead to Consumption, Chronic Debility, and oftentimes to Insanity. In all classes of Female Diseases, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is without a rival. No medicine has ever surpassed it. In "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," of which R. V. Pierce, M. D., of Buffalo, N. Y., is the author and publisher, is an extended treatise on WOMAN AND HER DISEASES. Under this head the various affections to which woman is incident are carefully considered, accurately portrayed, and a restorative course of treatment suggested. Every woman, as she values her life and health, should possess a copy of this valuable book. If she be diseased, this "Adviser" will show her how she may be restored to health, and also direct her how she may ward off many maladies to which she is constantly being exposed. Let every suffering woman, heed this timely advice and see herself as others see her. Price of Adviser, $1 50 (post paid) any address.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

Not a Dye; makes harsh hair soft and silky; cleanses the scalp from all impurities, causing the hair to grow where it has fallen off or become thin.

Can be applied by the hand as it does not stain the hand or soil the finest linen. As a Hair Dressing it is the most perfect the world has ever produced. The hair is renovated and strengthened, and natural color restored without the application of mineral substances.

Since the introduction of this truly valuable preparation into this country, it has been the wonder and admiration of all classes, as it has proved to be the only article that will absolutely without deception, restore gray hair to its original color, health, softness, lustre and beauty, and produce hair on bald heads of its original growth and color.

This beautiful and fragrantly perfumed article is complete within itself, no washing or preparation before or after its use, or accompaniment of any kind being required to obtain these desirable results.

HERE IS THE PROOF
OF ITS

SUPERIOR EXCELLENCE.

Read this Home Certificate, testified to by Edward B. Garrigue, one of the most competent Druggists and Chemists of Philadelphia, a man whose veracity none can doubt.

I am happy to add my testimony to the great value of the 'London Hair Color Restorer,' which restored my hair to its original color, and the hue appears to be permanent. I am satisfied that this preparation is nothing like a dye, but operates upon the secretions. It is also a beautiful hair dressing and promotes the growth. I purchased the first bottle from Edward B. Garrigue, druggist, Tenth and Coates streets, who can also testify my hair was quite gray when I commenced its use.

MRS. MILLER,

No. 730 North Ninth St., Phila.

Dr. Swaney & Son—Respected friends: I have the pleasure to inform you that a lady of my acquaintance, Mrs. Miller, is delighted with the success of your "London Hair Color Restorer." Her hair was falling rapidly and quite gray. The color has been restored, the falling off entirely stopped, and a new growth of hair is the result. E. B. GARRIGUES, Druggist, cor. Tenth and Coates, Phila.

BOSTON TESTIMONY.

July 22d, 1871.—Dr. Swaney & Son: Last winter, while in Trenton, N. J., I procured six bottles of London Hair Color Restorer, which I like very much, in fact better than anything I have used in the last nine years. If you please, send me one dozen bottles C. O. D., care of W. S. Fogler & Son, druggists, No. 723 Tremont street, Boston.

Respectfully yours,

ADA BAKER,

No. 69 Rutland Square.

"London Hair Color Restorer and Dressing" has completely restored my hair to its original color and youthful beauty, and caused a rapid and luxuriant growth.

MRS. ANNIE MORRIS,

No. 616 North Seventh street, Phila.

Dr. Dalton of Philadelphia, says of it: The London Hair Color Restorer is used very extensively among my patients and friends, as well as by myself. I therefore speak from experience.

SPRING.

The beautiful spring-time,
The spring-time has come;
The green grass is waking,
The trees are a-bloom;
The brook has burst out
From its cold wintry chain,
And leaps to the singing
Of bright birds again.
And fain would I be
Like thou on the wing,
To welcome thy coming,
O beautiful Spring.

'T is gay, merry spring-time,
Life's spring-time with me;
I would be like nature,
As joyous and free;
As sweet as the lily,
As mild as the dove,
All sparkling and leaping
With gladness and love,
Oh, I am so happy!
I flutter and sing,
Rejoicing in childhood,
Life's beautiful spring.

Then plough up the furrows,
And sow them with care,
And plan for the fruitage
The summer shall bear—
Of goodness and virtue,
Of kindness and love,
Of faith and of hope
For the garner above.
The harvest shall be
As the seed that you bring,
'T is seed-time for heaven,
Life's beautiful spring.

Tit-bits.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

SUSTENANCE AND SECURITY.

Your perplexity originates in a misapprehension of the figure which Christ employs in John 10: 9. You ask, "When am I in, and when am I out?" You are always in and always out, if so be that Christ is Your Door, and Fold, and Shepherd. The figure is a patched one, and lets us into the mind of Christ just as two patches of natural truth can. The sheep had to go out for pasture, and in for shelter; but the believer is pastured and sheltered all the time. To be out as the sheep were out, is to have no Golgotha. To be in as the sheep were in, would be a life of eternity and starvation. What was alternate with the sheep, is simultaneous with the Christian.

When we are in we are out, and when out we are in, and this makes just as rich and sweet and safe a life as God can give.

FORGIVENESS.

I see you are hanging on the edge of a precipice. Hold on, and thank God you are not at the bottom. Millions drop into hell from the crag of implacability. Nothing does God require more explicitly, than the absolute necessity of a clean forgiveness. Your provocations are multiplied and aggravated. The rasp that is drawn across your sensibilities without respite for successive years, is rough and sharp enough to require the concentration of all the Jobs in christendom in order to keep you from cursing your day. From the depth of my soul I pity you; and if this is any comfort to you, let down your bucket to the end of your chain, with the assurance that what is deepest and most tender in me is open to your dip. But your victory rests with yourself. I can offer you my counsel and tender you my sympathy, but this will not make you a king to yourself in the domain that must be conquered in order to a genuine forgiveness. To tear yourself from yourself, to double yourself up and thrust yourself under your heels, and make a general smash of yourself, and be all the more truly yourself for this mauling and self-annihilation—this is the work before you, and a mighty work it is. To accomplish this, we must be close enough to Emmanuel to feel the beating of his heart. By the time you are through your struggle, you will be "more than conqueror through him that loved us"—you will be a god, fit to occupy a seat with Christ in His Throne. Kings alone can truly forgive, as kings alone can reign. Hereby know we whether we have ever offered the Lord's prayer aright.

I can give you no specific directions. You know the import of the Cross. Honor that, and stand well with yourself in your sense of right, set your heart like a flint, give no audience to any suggestion that cheapens the blood of the dear, great Lamb, and you will be as sure of making room for the glorious nature in which alone forgiveness dwells, as that God is God.

A PURE HEART.

Guilt makes people timorous, and a violation of conscience makes them guilty. And yet nothing is so helpless and dependent as conscience; it is at the mercy of every circumstance that can give a wrong bias to our judgment. Perhaps more souls perish through misguiding than hardening of the conscience. Those who worship God, and those who make supplication to a dragon-fly, and burn incense to a frog, render fealty to the same inborn consciousness of obligation to right. Therefore it requires more than an uncondemning heart in the popular sense, to have a confidence toward God that is any better than distrust. A good conscience maintains a great possibility, and is so far always in the line of righteousness, even when the particular thing it honors is in direct opposition to God. He that perpetually violates his conscience, even in relation to what is inherently wrong, is ever carrying on a process that diminishes and finally destroys his capacity for righteousness. Our hearts may feebly free while the right is undone, and the wrong substituted. But no one can do what he believes to be wrong, though it be the expressed will of God, without paralyzing the power to do right. The purity of heart which God requires is primarily an unperverted judgment. It is to the reason and imagination that revelation is directly addressed. Without imagination the future is to us a nonentity, and without reason faith is impossible. "Teach all nations" is the fundamental condition of right doing. Wrong teaching must issue in wrong faith and practice. A bad heart darkens the reason more and more. And a blinded reason makes the heart more bold and confident in wrong. Paul avers repeatedly that he had a "good conscience" while blaspheming God and persecuting the saints. His heart was running over with "the poison of asps," while he thought he was "doing God service." A false relation to God through the reason, kept his conscience pure, even while his mind and his heart were enveloped in the midnight of error and rancor. The testimony of a good conscience is not necessarily the testimony of God, save in so far as it is a testimony to the principle of right without an intelligent apprehension of what is right. Thus the essential constitution of the soul has by sin become one of the most fatal barriers to salvation. No glow of belief, or force of conviction, or testimony of experience can change the nature and relation of things. The anxious bench will remain a humbug, however many ascribe their conversion to its magic. Sprinkling and monodips will continue to be delusions, no matter how many regard them as the vestibule of Heaven. The use of tobacco will remain a direct physiological wrong, and, to say the least, and indirect moral injury, even if we with a Pauline conscience make pipe and quid an auxiliary to religion. A pure heart asks for something more than professed purity of aim and purpose. It demands such a crucifixion of lust in all its forms, that the medium of light from the sun of Righteousness may be unstained. Few consider the power of desire to obscure the judgment, and mislead the conscience.

Coming Unworthy.

While some, doubtless come to the Lord's table who have no right to feel that they are invited to come,—carelessly, formally, and therefore unworthily,—while many come from habit, from worldly motives, rather than from holy desires and longing after God's ordinances, and while such incur an awful risk to their own souls, for such eat "and drink judgment to themselves," not considering the Lord's body; yet there are, on the other hand, many timid, fearful, anxious souls, who, from mistaken ideas with regard to this blessed ordinance, stay away, and think that they are only testifying deep humility by thus refraining from attending the Lord's table. They judge themselves unworthy; they cannot believe that the gracious invitation extends to them.

Let us bear in mind that there is a great difference between receiving unworthily and being unworthy to receive: every man that thinks himself unworthy to receive these mysteries, is not therefore an unworthy receiver. Alas! if we go to the worthiness of the person that comes to this table, who of us can be said to be worthy to come before so holy, so jealous, so great a God? or who of us is worthy of that incomprehensible and diffusive love represented to us in this ordinance? If we reflect on the marvelous purity of the divine nature, who of us can be thought worthy to approach it? The best of us have reason to exclaim, Unclean, unclean! But it is God that makes us worthy,—who puts upon us the worthiness of his own dear Son,—who clothes us with this wedding garment, so that we can approach Him with holy boldness and confidence. Again, remember thou comest not hither to contribute anything to his happiness, but to open thy mouth wide that He may fill it; thou comest not hither to proclaim thy perfections, but to have thy perfections supplied; thou comest not hither to boast of thy cleanness, but to be washed from thy sins; thou comest not hither to glory in thy merits, but to ask alms at thy great Master's hands,—His grace, His love, His compassion will make thee worthy; thou comest not to Him to give an account of thy riches, but as an hungry beggar that wants bread, to feed on the hidden manna. All that is required of thee is to look on thy Redeemer as thy greatest friend, and to use him like a friend; to make His friendship an incentive to love Him; and so to love Him as to hearken to his counsels, to be governed by His directions, to bid farewell to everything that would destroy that friendship, to repent of thy unkindness to Him, and to prefer His advice before flesh and blood.—The Upper Room Furnished.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Our Secrecy.

BY A. CHAS. WHITMIRE.

"But all things that are reprov'd are made manifest by the light: for whatsoever doth make manifest is light." Eph. 5: 13.

In No. 2, Vol. I, of PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, appeared an article addressed to "Secret Societies;" and as I am an Odd Fellow, and hold the views assailed by the writer, I feel that I must say something for the Order of Odd Fellowship. Bring what charges you may upon the suspiciousness of secrecy, the tendency of evil to seek darkness and mystery, and of good to come to the light that it may be manifest, still, you will hardly contend that secrecy is, in itself, and necessarily, a conclusive proof of evil. If not, then it is uncharitable to condemn any individual or institution on the score of secrecy alone. Now let us fairly understand each other. Our secrecy "hath this extent no more:"—

1. We are secret, as every family is or should be secret, in regard to the personal affairs of any member which are submitted to us for counsel, aid, admonition, rebuke, or punishment. They are his secrets, not ours, much less the world's; and baser would we be to publish them, than if we were to squander property or money that had been solemnly confided to our keeping.

2. We are secret, as a merchant is secret in regard to correspondents and customers, in concealing the names of informants, and their information concerning the character and standing of applicants for membership. We have no right, morally, to injure those who confide in us; and even the laws of our country would punish as libel or slander the exposure of the applicant's faults.

3. We are secret, as Christ's followers are commanded to be, in bestowment of donations to distressed brethren or their families. Unfeeling, indeed, must be the prying soul that would insult the relieved by publishing their poverty in boasting of his own charity! May Odd Fellows ever be reproached for secrecy rather than be guilty of such unchristian conduct!

4. We are secret, as every banker and business man is secret, in our modes of ascertaining whether a stranger applicant is a partner in those funds, a portion of which he is about to withdraw. Each banker or merchant has secret signs by which he knows whether the draft presented him is genuine. We have signs and tokens by which to know men, whether they are genuine Odd Fellows, whether they are entitled to receive what they ask. A meddling, prying fellow, seeking to find out and counterfeit the secret signs of a trader, would be rewarded for his ingenuity with the contempt of all honest and honorable men, even if the worthy forger escaped the penitentiary! Of what higher estimation is he deserving who impertinently seeks to possess himself of the secret signs (and expose them to others, probably, no honest than himself) by which we guard the treasury of the dependent sick and distressed, the widow and the orphan?

5. We are secret in our forms and ceremonies of initiation, and the use of our emblems in the instruction of our members. This use renders the lesson more impressive; and to disclose the mode of teaching would deprive the instruction of the charm of novelty, and impair its efficacy.

That this is the utmost extent of our secrecy, honest and truthful men of all denominations among us are ready to testify. These secrets, then, belong to no individual alone, and therefore no one has a moral right to disclose them. They are the order's only. They concern not the world, and belong not to the public. An individual out of the order has no more right, in morals or propriety, to pry into them or demand their revelation, than he has to turn eaves-dropper among neighbors, or ask a wife to reveal the confidential conversation of her husband. The disposition to acquire and expose the secrets of others, is as wrong as any iniquity to seek to uncover: as impertinent as peeping into a business man's letter's or a neighbor's market basket or dinner pot. And yet there are persons—honest, high-minded people in all else—who have allowed this spirit so far to govern them, that they condemn, without evidence, every so-called "secret society," and pry into its private affairs, and encourage others to expose them to the public. Surely such conduct must arise from a want of due consideration of what is due to their own characters as honest, decent men. The same principle, applied to individuals, would justify a clergyman for exposing cases of conscience confided to him by his flock; an attorney for betraying into loss of property, character, and even life, his client; a physician for disclosing the affairs of his patient, and all he sees and hears in the house he visits; and a military commander who informed the enemy of his plans of action, and the countersigns on which depend the security of his army!

Such anti-secrecy people, to be consistent, should have no secrets of their own, and keep none confided to them by their families and friends; should expose their most private thoughts and feelings to the public; relate their domestic conversations and conjugal endearments; expose purse, pocket book and private papers at all times and places; never vote a folded ticket, seal a letter, receive secret advice, bestow private alms, or offer secret prayer! For, if secrecy is wrong, or proof of evil, all these things are evil.

We will only add that, properly speaking, Odd Fellowship is not a secret society. Our constitution and By-Laws, our times and places of meeting, the names of our officers and members, generally, the amounts and sources of our receipts, the items of our expenditures, our principles and objects, the proceedings generally of our national and state grand bodies, all these are as public as those of any legislature or other public department in the country. As well, therefore, might you call any individual or family, the United States Senate, or President's Cabinet, or a Grand Jury—all of whom have secrets—"a secret person," "a secret family," "a secret senate or cabinet," or "a secret jury," as to call us "a secret society," merely because we have secrets.

Furthermore we have been branded as "an oath-bound association, whose members are obligated, by bloody penalties, to favor each other wrongfully, and to punish violations of their obligations in some severe and terrible manner;" yet there is not a single obligation administered among us, inconsistent with any duty we owe to self, family, country, mankind, or to our Creator. All the aid we are to render each other, is and must be within the limits of strict humanity and patronism, of mortality and religion. We invoke no penalty on life and limb, person or property; nothing but the social and moral consequences which follow the violation of any similar pledge of sacred honor among the rest of mankind; consequently, no one among us is bound, in any way, to revenge any violation which an unworthy member may make. We are not, therefore, an oath-bound institution, nor are our obligations oaths—no jurist would call them such—but simply solemn pledges and covenants, wherein our yea "is yea and amen."

I will here quote a small portion of your letter, commencing at the beginning, viz: "I was once at a hall in the third story of which was a lodge room of the Odd Fellows. At intervals, during the evening, a loud and startling noise proceeded from said room, which caused the building to quiver to the foundation. It sounded as if heavy wheels or rollers were propelled over the floor, intermingled with the stamping of hundreds of feet." In this, I do not hesitate to say, that I really think you have exaggerated to some extent. Contemplate of this, and see if you do not feel as though you could recall a portion of it. You also say, "They will not come to the light, because their deeds are evil." When the Shilo (according to the Christian faith) appeared on earth, he pursued the same system of selecting a few from the mass for the purpose of private instruction and associated effort. Step by step, Jesus advanced his apostles in the knowledge which they were afterward to teach the world by example and precept. And when the proper period arrived, in obedience to the Master's command, they went forth and proclaimed openly what they had learned in secret. The same method was observed by the early teachers of Christianity, in the formation of churches of the faithful. And their peculiar discipline, and their system of mutual aid and relief among themselves, have continued, to a greater or less extent, down to the present day.

If we leave the theatre of special providences, we find the same system of selection for the inculcation of truth and duty adopted by the wisdom of all ages. The family, if we may consider it as a merely natural institution, is such an association. Private in its character, secreting from the public its dearest and holiest operations, it teaches its members not only those principles and precepts which are to be entertained and practiced among its own members, but those also pertaining to the social circle, the political gathering, the worshipping assembly, and the world at large.

Each family has its peculiar modes of teaching and training, which it shrinks from exposing to the cold unsympathizing curiosity of strangers. And some of these are secret, not only to those that are without, but even to a portion of the household itself. Odd Fellowship stands on the same general basis of necessity and utility in its selections and exclusions. It has its own mission to perform, its special principles and their applications to teach, and its own peculiar methods of culture and training. That its operations may be in fraternal harmony, it requires a selected number, qualified to aid in preparing each other for the proper discharge of their special and general duties to themselves and families, to the order, and to mankind, and to God. Adieu.

Likeness to Christ.

This likeness of the follower of Jesus to him is one of character. All any of us are worth morally is exactly represented by our character. That is all we have for our capital here, and it is all we shall have for our capital in heaven. Wicked people understand this, and their great aim is to destroy the character of the good. It was this they were aiming at in respect to the Christ when they said, "He is a wine-bibber and a glutton." They hated him because people credited him with being a good man. It was a devilish conspiracy on their part to destroy his reputation. That was the strong, vital thing about him, and they banded to destroy that. It is the strong, vital thing in us who follow after him to day. Not in our moods nor feelings; not in what we believe in respect to truth! but in what we at heart, and taken as a whole, really are, are we to look to find our needed likeness to the Christ. "Christ in us the hope of glory," means when our natures in wardly are in the likeness of Christ, then we may have hope of glory. What nature is this in me? Let us all ask ourselves then. Is this Christ? What grounds have I for hope?—Golden Rule.

An hour of solitude passed in sincere and earnest prayer, or the conflict with, and conquest over, a single or "subtle bosom sin," will teach us more of thought, will more effectually awaken the faculty and form the habit of reflection, than a year's study in the schools without them.

A Reply to Our Secrecy.

BY R. H. MILLER.

[The following reply was written by our request. We think it necessary to say this that friend Whitmore and brother Thomas may understand why brother Miller replies. The article was sent to brother Miller for a reply, because we knew that he had, of late, been giving the subject considerable thought, and that he would be prepared to write a reply without much extra study. We wish to say for brother Thomas that he, too, we believe, is fully competent to answer our friend on this question, and our columns are open for a farther reply from him. While we do not wish to close our columns against our friends, even though we believe them to be in error, we want to have their mis takes fully and fairly shown. B.]

Your defense of Odd Fellowship being written with more than ordinary ability, and most of it with apparent candor, demands a reply, which we hope you will accept with the same kindness and desire for truth purposed in giving it.

The first point in your article worthy of note is your misunderstanding and consequent misrepresentation of our views. You assume the liberty of placing us in opposition to all secrecy, even that taught in the gospel. This sadly misrepresents our faith. We accept all that is founded on the divine law; all that is taught in the gospel, both public and private, secret and open: secret prayer, alms-giving, and "if thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone." These, and all other secret and private duties taught in the word of God and in the laws of nature, we accept and teach as being right to keep. The issue, then, is not as to keeping those secreties taught in the word of God, but as to those outside of divine authority, which you make and teach in your lodge. You have a routine of mystic rites, ceremonies, emblems, secret signs and passwords, which are not taught or found in the gospel. The issue is as to keeping them. We oppose them, and the secret order built upon them, for several reasons: first, they are entirely outside divine authority and teaching; second, they are used for the interest and benefit of a select and favored few, working by secreties for each others benefit, hence all the principles of self-interest are involved in it; third, it is schismatical. It would take a part of community, because they have money and prosperity, while it rejects, will not take, the poor, infirm, and helpless; showing clearly that it does not work for the general good of all, but separates a few from the mass of mankind, and works for their interest. We oppose your secret order, as it is our duty to oppose all who teach and practice secret working forms outside of the law of God.

1. In your first argument you say, "We are secret, as every family is or should be secret." This we believe is not quite true. God is the author of that sacred institution, the family. He is the author of all the obligations and duties public or private, secret or open, which rightfully belong to and enjoin upon every member of the family; and the family which holds and keeps no secret works or duties, only those taught and justified in the laws of God and nature, is not like you: it differs from you precisely in the same manner we do, and just to the same extent. If there be a family with a number of secret signs, rites and ceremonies not taught in the word of God, by which secreties it works for its own interest and advantage, that family is like you, because you have both left the law of God in the secrets you have made for your own benefit.

You claim to be like the family "in regard to the personal affairs of any member which are submitted to us (you) for counsel, aid, admonition, rebuke or punishment." You need not boast of that as a peculiarity; for there is not a society of any kind, savage or civilized, that has not borrowed as much from God's primeval institution, the family. That, however, does not commend you or them as being right, unless your aid, counsel, admonition and punishment be given according to the law of God; but when your aid, counsel and admonition are given according to a secret code of rites, emblems and signs, all outside of the gospel, it is not one particle of evidence that you are right in the sight of God. We stand upon the gospel, and reject all your secret system that is outside of it as being wrong; because, as you say, it selects a favored few, and places them upon a secret code of preparation and training, to work by secrecy for their own welfare.

2. You say, "We are secret, as a merchant is secret, * * * in concealing the name of informants and their information." You may make your secret order after the pattern of a shrewd, financiering, secret-working merchant to fill his vaults by secret plans of self defense and self-interest. Truly you do pattern after him. You take a part of community, those well to do in life, the rich, hale, popular, business man, that your funds may increase, and you may have power to help and aid each other; you train and teach them in secret signs to work for each others benefit in trade finance and almost every matter in which you have any interest, while you reject the poor and unfortunate, lest your funds should be exhausted. You are much more like the shrewd, secret-working merchant than you are like the God-given God-governed family.

3. You say, "We are secret, as Christ's followers are commanded to be, in bestowment of donations to distressed brethren and their families." In this you seem to boast of having some of the sacred divine truths of the gospel. It is true you have not got one good thing, not one good thought word or action, to be observed in your lodge which the Christian has not already. He has the same good without joining your order. You have no good about your order, except what you have taken from the Bible, the law of the Christian; and you take the service and duties of the gospel and mix them up with your mystic rites and ceremonies, working with secret signs and rules for worldly, temporal, selfish purposes, like the secret working merchant. Why, then, should the Christian join your secret order, when he already has, in the church built of God, every good thing, every sacred, saving truth, which can be incorporated into this life, to bless and benefit the race of man? Why should not the Christian be satisfied with the God-given, perfect law, without adding your human, merchant-like compound to the unalloyed, perfect righteousness of a gospel faith and practice? If you will show one good thing in your secret order, one duty we owe to God or man, which is not already enjoined upon the Christian by the law of God, then, and not till then, will you have even the shadow of an argument to prove that the Christian should join it. Your argument that we should accept your secret order because you have in it some gospel truth and service, is simply evidence against you, because no man has a right to take the service and truth of God and incorporate it with human inventions for temporal, selfish purposes. As well might the merchant or banker add the truth and service of God to his secret plans and signs for his own self-interest. If you should take the pure honey from the hive and mix it with gall, it would be mockery to ask the bee to come to your hive of bitterness to eat your compound. Such is your argument: you take the truth and service of God and mix it up with an institution of worldly, irreligious men, working secretly for worldly purposes, then you ask the Christian to join your order because there is some truth in it, when, by joining it, all he gets is the secret, selfish part of it, for the rest he had before.

4. You say, "We are secret, as every banker and business man is secret, in our modes of ascertaining whether a stranger applicant is a partner in those funds * * * Each banker or merchant has secret signs." This is really your second argument over again, making the secrecy of your order after the model of the merchant, banker and business man, working secretly for self-interest and self-defense. If you had made it after the likeness of Christ and his apostles, it would be a thousand fold better for mankind, and then you would have some right to ask the Christian to accept it; but as it is we cannot see how it can be any benefit to mankind generally, or right for the Christian, because we believe your institution to be as selfish as the merchant or banker, and more dangerous to public interest, because it monopolizes more power to confer favors and benefits upon its own members in finance and politics. What I have said of your third argument is proved true by your fourth one; that is, you have taken some of the gospel service and truth and mixed them in a secret institution made after the model of money-loving, secret-working, worldly men, for self-interest.

You seem to stigmatize, with a good degree of contempt, those who would find out the secrecy of the merchant, banker, or lodge, and expose it to the public. But you must not blame me that I do not sympathize with you fully in this; for as your order is made after a model of men working secretly for self-interest; and as we oppose all your secrecy that is not required by the laws of God and nature, you cannot expect us to fully appreciate your horror at these secretcies being exposed. There are some things which the laws of God require to be kept secret, it would be really wrong for any one to expose them; but the secret signs and works of human invention for self-interest make a very different thing. The secret signs and works of the merchant, for his own interest, only serve to give him a chance to deceive other men, or to get advantages more than other men have, to neither of which has he any right. About the same is true of your secrecy: it works for your interest, by giving you advantages over other men in trade, finance, politics, or anything in which you choose to use it. These advantages which your lodge gives, you have no right to, either morally or religiously. They are given by a monopolizing, pledge-bound, secret-working power dangerous to the general good of the church and of mankind, because it gives advantages to a favored few that are not derived from the laws of God or nature. When you select out of community a prosperous, favored few, working secretly to give each other advantages over and above other men in finance, politics, religion, or anything else, as you have neither a moral or religious right to monopolize these extra advantages, you need but expect to find "some honest, high-minded people in all else" who cannot fully sympathize with you when the secrecy which gives these extra, unscriptural advantages is exposed.

You say a man has no more right to get your secrets and expose them than he has to "ask a wife to reveal the confidential conversation of her husband." You are just about right in that. If the confidential conversation of the husband be strictly in accordance with the laws of God and nature, and if he only confided secrets to which he had a legal, moral and divine right, then it would be wrong in any to seek or in her to expose such secrets. But if the secret works confided to the wife by her husband were outside of the law of God—a secret plan to get some hidden advantage over other men, to get office or power that he might rule the church, the court, the state, or any other matter, secretly, for his own interest or for the interest of a political ring, then he has no moral or legal or divine right to ask his wife or any one else to keep such secrecy, no more than he has to ask them to keep any other wrong he does secretly.

You say, "Some honest, high-minded people condemn, without evidence, any so called secret society." Is that not uncharitable? When all your secret signs, rites and ceremonies are entirely outside of the gospel, is that not some evidence to the Christian who takes the word of God as the man of his counsel? When Christ and his apostles give us no precept or example for your secret pledges, is it not some evidence to the Christian that the best, most holy and righteous men that ever lived on earth, after whom we should pattern our lives, have given us an example without a single vestige of your secret warning by rites and signs outside the law of God!

5. You say, "We are secret is our forms and ceremonies of initiation." These secret forms and ceremonies by which you initiate your members are conclusive evidence that they are not founded on Scripture. And the manner in which you mix them up with the religious service and teaching of the gospel is as foreign from the precept of inspired men as the Mussulmanic rites of the Koran.

You say, the use of your emblems in the instruction of your members is a secret. This, too, is a human drapery you would add unto the duties of the Christian. These emblems and your secret use of them can no more be found in the gospel teaching than the golden calf of Aaron. Through the idols are taught the faith and duties of the Pagan; through your emblems are taught the secret duties of the Odd Fellow. Through the Lord Jesus and his holy apostles are taught the duties of the Christian. To the latter the former are antipodes; and they are as incompatible as oil and water. You can no more reconcile the secret workings of Odd Fellowship for the extra benefit of a favored few with the universal love and atonement of Christ, than you can the Pagan benefits of the Roman god of war. One is boundless and gracious as the wants of a fallen race; the other narrow, contracted and selfish as the extra advantages which by these emblems and signs Odd Fellows confer upon each other.

When you say "Odd Fellowship is not, properly speaking, a secret society," your usual candor seems to have faded. To prove your position you refer to the Family, the Senate, the Cabinet and Jury, saying, as they have some secret duties and are not secret societies, therefore you are not. But your reasoning condemns your position when it is fully understood. If the family, senate, cabinet, court and jury work for the general good of all, having no secretcies only those morally, legally, and divinely required, they then are not like you, neither are they secret societies; but if the family, senate, cabinet, court and jury work secretly for their own interest and advantage, or for the interest of a certain favored few—a ring; if they work by secret signs for self interest and not for public good, they, too, would be secret societies, and be like you. And when they and you work for self-interest by secret signs, ceremonies and emblems, outside of the laws of the country and the laws of God, then you are both secret societies in the proper sense of that phrase.

You say, "There is not a single obligation administered among us inconsistent with any duty we owe to self, family, country, mankind, or to our Creator." We believe you are wrong in every item of this sweeping declaration. God is the author of every duty we justly owe to him and every man, woman, and child on earth; and if your lodge creates one duty not in the laws of God, that duty is inconsistent with God's government. When you bind yourselves by secret modes to confer special favors on each other, these favors are inconsistent with the duties you owe to the rest of mankind; and when you bind yourself in these secret pledges, your conscience, your tongue, your judgment, no longer have the freedom given by the Creator, but are enslaved to the secret rites of a secret, worldly order. This enslavement you never can throw off, no difference if you become convinced that the whole thing is unscriptural and wrong. For these and other reasons we believe your sweeping declaration is a mistake in your judgment or pen. Every obligation or duty made by your secret rites and ceremonies is inconsistent with the duties you owe to yourself, family, country, mankind, and to God, as it is inconsistent with the freedom of conscience, of tongue, and of judgment, given by the Creator.

You say, "All the aid we are to render each other is and must be within the limits of strict humanity of patriotism, of morality and religion." This is not strictly true, because your aid is given on the principles of secret pledges and covenants made with a special few; not on the principles and teaching of the gospel. Your secret pledges and signs give a man a right to your aid that the teaching of the Christian religion does not, humanity does not, morality does not, patriotism does not; for a man may have all the noblest qualities that can adorn human nature, and they give him no right to the aid conferred by your secret rites. The Scriptures, humanity, patriotism and morality, all teach us to give our aid upon the broad principles of love to all, not pent up in the lodge to aid a favored few on conditions of their having made a secret pledge; but God like, Christ-like, giving aid to all, even down to poor Lazarus, too poor to get into your lodge, having no money to pay his fees. Your lodge was not made for him. The rich man clothed in purple and fine linen could get in: he might have been a merchant or a banker. If the aid of your order were given according to the Christian religion it would take in poor Lazarus and reject the rich man; but you do not work that way. By the laws of your order, the poor beggar is rejected, because he is not able to pay his fees, while you take the rich and prosperous.

You compare your order to Christ and his apostles. My dear friend, it would not even be just to compare your order, working for the favored few, to the kindness of these poor dogs, who hunted Lazarus and licked his sores, working for the good of the dying beggar. If you had made your order after the model of Lazarus Hunters instead of the secret-working merchant and banker, there would have been far more in it for the general good of mankind, and you would have a better right for comparing it to the Christian religion or humanity.

You say, "When the Shilo (according to the Christian faith) appeared on earth, he pursued the same system of selecting a few from the mass for the purpose of private instruction and associated efforts." We believe this comparison of your order to the Shilo does injustice to him and his truth. He taught lessons of truth to his disciples, and commanded them to be preached among all nations, to every creature under heaven; because they were for the good of all. He said to his disciples, "That which you hear in secret, proclaim upon the housetop." Your secret order is precisely opposite the Savior; you say, "That which you hear in secret keep for your benefit." While your order works for the interest of the favored few, the Shilo suffered, bled and died for a fallen race; and every pain he suffered, every drop and stain of his blood stands as a witness against the correctness of your comparison with him. His boundless mercy to a fallen race; his universal love and goodness to all; his apostles spending their lives in suffering and want, carrying the richest blessings of heaven and earth to all men, the rich and poor alike, and sealing their faith with their own blood, is divine evidence that you are wrong in comparing your self-interest, secret-working, merchant, banker institution to any of these heaven-born, self-sacrificing, universal-loving men of God.

You again refer to the family and say, "Each family has its peculiar mode of teaching and training which it shrinks from exposing to the cold and unsympathizing stranger." If a family has no mode of training or teaching, no secrets to teach or keep, only those taught in the laws of God and nature, that is a family not like your secret order. It is a God-given, a God-governed institution, we fully endorse, but if you will picture a family with a routine of secret rites, and signs, and modes of training outside of the divine law, all for their self-interest, necromantic, sooth-saying, fortune-telling Gypsies, your secret order is like such a family. Both have secret works which you have made for your own interest; both have modes of training that are outside the laws of God.

In conclusion you say that "the secret teaching and training in the lodge is to prepare you for the discharge of your duties to yourselves, to your families, to the order, and to mankind, and to God." You are right in only one of these declarations. Your secret training only prepares you for the self-made duties of the lodge. To say these secret rites and ceremonies prepare you to discharge your duties to God, when he is not the author of one of them, surely is presumption. Your secret signs and emblems no more teach you duty to God than do the secret signs of the merchant or banker, or the necromantic Gypsy. God's word teaches your duty to him, to mankind, to your family, and to yourself; but God's word does not teach your duties to your secret order. Your secret signs and emblems do that. To prove the truth of this position you may be my witness; for you cannot tell of one duty you owe to God which you learned by or from the secrecy of your order; neither can you tell one duty you owe to mankind generally which you learned from the secrecy of your order. So it is with the family, you never learned one duty you owe the family from the secret rites and ceremonies of the order. The duties taught by the secrecy of the order, if we dare call them duties, are like the duties or obligations taught by the secret signs and works of the merchant and banker; they belong to and work for the interest of the ring for which they were made, and they teach it how to work for its own interest. This is the sum of their teaching, and what is learned from their secrecy.

Now, my dear friend, I have spoken to you freely in reply to your article, with no design to wound your feelings, in the least. I hope you will get the work I have written on that with other subjects (it is advertised in PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN) and read our views more fully. Then if you see any error, write me a long letter, privately, and I promise you a kind and earnest reply.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
The Resurrection.

BY JAMES WIRT.

The resurrection is a subject of prophecy, and denotes the rising again from the dead, the resuscitation and animation of all who have died.

There will be two resurrections in the future; the first will occur at the beginning of the thousand years of Christ's reign on earth, and the other after the close of that period. The dead in Christ will rise first, and afterward they that are Christ's at his coming, who are alive and remain, shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye, preparatory to meet the Lord in the air and be his constant guests.

The general resurrection will be just previous to the Judgment day, and includes all who were not permitted to come forth in the first resurrection. The human family is divided into different classes; the first is the resurrection of the righteous and the latter is the resurrection of the wicked. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, for on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ."

The rest of the dead live not again until the thousand years are finished; then they shall come forth to be judged and to receive merited rewards of happiness or woe, according to their deeds done in life. The two classes at this time will be stationed the one upon the right hand and the other upon the left hand of the great Judge of all the earth; the former will be told to come up to inherit the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world, as the deeds of kindness done towards the least of the brethren in Christ will then be remembered and be regarded as done for the Savior. The latter will hear the denunciation, "Depart from me, ye workers of iniquity, I never knew you." "These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."

"This corruptible shall put on incorruption and this mortal must put on immortality." From these words we infer that there will be quite a change in the constitution of resurrected beings. They shall differ entirely from their present, organized bodies, as they undergo the work of renovation, enabling them to compare harmoniously and assimilate with higher orders of intelligent beings; and there is an illimitable series of gradual development, until we approach the summit of angelic natures, that is designated in the revealed word of God as the Archangel. "As we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." There are many thoughts connected with this beautiful truth that afford comfort and consolation to the pious and faithful adherent to the Master's cause; for when he appears, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. May we have the same desire of the Apostle Paul, that we might attain unto the resurrection of the dead, and be prepared by divine grace to become heirs with all the saints of that crown of righteousness reserved in heaven, there to utter forth the praises of him who has loved us and redeemed us by his blood, and has brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.

"Be Ye Separate.

BY WILLIAM H. BEEHLEY.

"Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." 1 John 2: 15.

By the above passage of Scripture, we can learn a lesson, of vast importance, and one that will be to the benefit of our souls' salvation, if we consider well those things; namely the things of this world.

It is very evident that we cannot be a separate people from the world, and yet mingle with the world in the various worldly amusements that are indulged in by the world, such as are known as, Sunday-school picnics, and exhibitions, and shows, which I fear some of us too often attend.

I am afraid, beloved brethren, we are not careful enough concerning those things that pertain to this world. It is very evident, yea, an indisputable fact, that the above mentioned gatherings, are of this world, and if we, who profess to be the true followers of the meek and lowly Lamb; attend such places of worldly amusement, we certainly are not what we profess to be, or at least not what we should be. So then let us be careful where we go, and what we do, for the world is watching us in every move we make. So let us be careful not to make any moves but what will harmonize with the word of God, and then if the world, (or any of the world) should imitate our movements, it will be to the salvation of their souls. Oh! it seems to me that we can very readily see the vast importance of taking the "more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip." Let us try by the help of God to live so that our light will shine to the world, and they seeing our good works, will glorify our Father which is in heaven. Let us show to the world, that we can be a separate people from the world. If we only would meditate more on the shortness of this life; and on the awful doom of the wicked. It seems to me we certainly would be more careful what kind of examples we set before the world. "The world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." 1 John 2: 17. Let us try and live so that we shall be numbered with those that shall abide forever, which we can do by being a separate people from the world.

The Drowsy Sentinel.

A General, after gaining a great victory, was encamping with his army for the night. He ordered watch to be kept all around the camp as usual. One of the sentinels, as he went to his station, grumbled to himself, and said, "Why could not the General let us have a quiet night's rest for once, after leaving the enemy? I'm sure there is nothing to be afraid of."

The man then went to his station and stood for some time looking about him. It was a bright night, with a harvest moon, but, as he could see no sign of danger anywhere, he said to himself, "I am terribly tired, I shall sleep for just five minutes, out of the moonlight, under the shadow of this tree." So he lay down.

Presently he started up, dreaming that some one had pushed a lantern before his eyes, and he found that the moon was shining brightly down on him through the branches of the tree above him. The next minute an arrow whizzed past his ear, and the whole field before him seemed alive with soldiers in dark green coats, who sprang up from the ground, where they had been silently creeping onward, and rushed toward him.

Fortunately the arrow had missed him; so he shouted aloud to give the alarm, and ran back to some other sentinels. The army to which he belonged was thus saved, and the soldier said, "I shall never forget, as long as I live, that when one is at war, one must watch."

Our whole life is a war with evil. Just after we have conquered it, it sometimes attacks us when we least expect it. For example, when we have resisted the temptation to be cross and pettish, or disobedient, sometimes when we are thinking, "How good we have been!" comes another sudden temptation, and we are not on our guard, and do not resist it. Jesus says to us, "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation."—Sel.

It is a great mercy to enjoy the Gospel of peace, but a greater to enjoy the peace of the Gospel.

Botany.—No. 6.

BY HOWARD MILLER.

Having got on as far as the flower, it may be well to repeat that the whole energy of the plant is directed toward the formation of seed, and if from any reason this is prevented, it continues its efforts to perfect its seed by renewing the blossoms, the whole season. Thus you see you can safely pull all the flowers you wish, and the more you pull for yourself and your friends, the more you will get in the end. The yellow or colored dust, called pollen, and found in the small organs within the flower, sometimes gets into other plants, of the same kind, and the result is what we call mixing. Every boy has noticed how corn will mix when two kinds are planted near each other. In the case of the corn the pollen of the red grain is blown from the tassel of the stalk to the silk of the hill of yellow corn, and going down the hollow pistem-like thread forms a red grain there. This is the way all the mixing in the corn-field is brought about. You can not see the hollow in the silk, but you can see the mouth gaping widely to catch the pollen, which is floating in millions of grains all through the air when the corn is in tassel.

Insects often carry this pollen from one plant to another and cause havoc with fruit. This is the reason why the pumpkin and squash family mixes so terribly. A bumble bee will go into a pumpkin flower, get himself all covered with the yellow pollen in his search for honey, back out, and then into a squash blossom, when, if ever so little of the pollen gets to the proper place from off his dusty back, the mischief is done and the seed will produce not squashes but pumpkins.

A very large book might be written as to the methods insects take in fertilizing plants. If you cover over a bunch of red clover with a veil, or thin gauze, to keep out the insects, you will not get a seed, because the plant can not well fertilize itself. The fertilization of all Phanogamous plants is different in detail, and sometimes man has to step in and help matters. Thus in the case of clover, the honey bee can not get to the pollen, but its wild brother, the bumblebee, can, and he makes all our clover seed for us. In Australia clover will not seed because of no bees, and lately they have been importing nests of bumble bees from England for the good they will do the farmers of that far away island in making clover seed for them.

Think of this the next time you wonder what bees were made for to sting people.

Keeping the Tongue.

Keep it from unkindness. Words are sometimes wounds. Not very deep wounds always, and yet they irritate. Speech is unkind sometimes when there is no unkindness in the heart; so much the worse that, unintentionally, pain is caused.

Keep it from falsehood. It is so easy to give a fast coloring, to so make a statement that may convey a meaning different from the truth, that we need to be on our guard. There are very many who would shrink from telling a lie, who yet suffer themselves in such inaccurate, or exaggerated, or one-sided statements that they really come under the condemnation of those whose "lying lips are an abomination to the Lord."

Keep it from slander. The good reputation of others should be dear to us; sin should not be suffered to go unrebuked; but it should be in accordance with the Scripture method: "Go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone." And it should be borne in mind that what is too often considered as merely harmless gossip runs dangerously near, if it does not pass, the confines of slander. A reputation is too sacred to be made a plaything of, even if the intent be not malicious.—Scl.

Origin of Surnames.

The system in use with English speaking people was of slow growth, and many of the common surnames owe their existence to the expedients which were resorted to while the system was developing. The occupation or residence once added became part of the name when the occasion of its adoption was forgotten. Many names established in this way explain themselves, while others can not be understood without tracing them back to the old English or Latin. Of the first class, Mason, Baker, Farmer, Shepherd and Cooper; Chapman, a trader, from chepe, a market; Sutor, a not very common name, meaning in old English and Latin, shoemaker; and Spencer, from dispensator, or dispenser; and of the second class, Smith, in Anglo-Saxon, meant to smite, and was applied to all those occupations in which success depended upon a strong arm. The frequent use of the name is thus explained. Gow has in Scotland the meaning of our word smith, and the Gows were so numerous that many changed their name to smith. The termination word indicates a keeper; Woodward was in early days a keeper of the forest—perhaps the king's—and Durward was a door-keeper. The special business of the keeper is expressed in the beginning of each word. The Earls, Lords, Deacons, Squires, and Chamberlains, can trace their names back to some forgotten holder of an office or dignity.

A very general attempt was made by adding son, or its equivalent, to the father's name, to put an end to the confusion which a scarcity of names naturally caused. Johnson, Peterson, Smithson, and other names of a similar termination, are examples of this. The same idea is expressed, by adding ing. Brown-ing means the son of Brown, whose name was probably suggested by his color, since color or height, or any personal peculiarity, was often mentioned when names failed. In Hebrew, Ben is prefixed; in Welsh ap; in Scotch, Mac; and Russian, Vitch is added. The Welsh also joined with the name of the son that of the father in the possessive case. John William's told briefly that William was John's father; and when in the course of time the idea of possession was lost, Williams became a family surname; John John's was changed into John Jones by careless pronunciation, and Jones is now the commonest of all Welsh names. Names of French origin are known by prefixes de, du, des, de la—and by a number of suffixes, among which ville is the most common.

A family living on a hill were called from the location—Hill or Hills—and the name Underhill applied to those on the edge of the plain. Wood, Atwood, Lake, River, Pond, and other terms of the same character, when first introduced, were no more a part of the name of those on whom they were fixed than the post-office, to which letters are sent, is of the person to whom the letters are addressed. Observer.

Somebody.

"What is the use of being in the world unless you are somebody?" said a boy.

"Sure enough, and I mean to be," answered his friend. "I began this very day. I mean to be somebody."

Ashton looked George in the face. "Began to-day! how? What do you mean, to be?"

"A Christian boy, and so grow up to be a Christian man," said George.

"I believe that is the greatest somebody for us to be."

George is right. There is no higher or manhood than Christian manhood.

You must look alone to Jesus to be saved. If you look at time and its attractions, without looking unto him, you will adore the world's trifles, and become its dupe and victim. But if you look unto Jesus with dependence and delight, this will save you from the delusions of time, and secure your enjoyment of that greatest of all blessings, to "live together with him;" which includes, to see his glory, share his joy, sit on his throne, survey his triumphs, and herald his praises. Yea, more, to be mirrors to reflect his glory; instruments to perform his will; witnesses to attest and proclaim his faithful love, his costly and undying friendship to the listening universe for ever and ever.

RULES FOR AGENTS.

1. At the head of every letter give the name of your own post-office, county and State; and the date on which it is written.
2. Write the name and give the full address of every subscriber you send, as legibly as you can.
3. Write "New" before the names of all new subscribers.
4. In ordering a change of address, give the post-office, county, and State, to which the paper is sent, as well as the post-office, county, and State to which it is to be sent.
5. Do not mix up different items of business; but take up and finish one item before you take up another.
6. Write items intended for publication on a separate slip.
7. Make every lawful effort to obtain subscribers, and to do good in whatever way you can.
8. Send money by drafts, post-office money orders, or registered letters.
9. Observe the above rules, and you will expedite business, save us from much trouble, and yourselves and our subscribers from disappointments and vexation.

THE STRENGTH OF WEAKNESS.

"For when I am weak, then am I strong."—2 Cor. xii. 10.

Such is one of the strange and seemingly paradoxical sayings of the Apostle Paul. His meaning seems to have been this: When I am the most conscious of my own weakness, and know that of myself I am utterly unable to do and bear what it is my duty to do and bear, and with this consciousness of my own weakness and helplessness, throw myself upon God and trust alone in him, he then imparts to me his strength, and makes me strong in him, by his Holy Spirit which he gives me, and which becomes to me a spirit of power and of patience and of boldness. The idea conveyed finds a parallel in the language of Jesus, "Blessed are the poor in spirit." Those who are poor in spirit feel their want of strength as well as of righteousness and of every thing else that is good. This state of conscious emptiness we must come to, to be prepared to receive the fullness of God. And it is the fullness of God that makes us strong. Self must be annihilated, or in the language of inspiration, the old man must be sacrificed, and put out of the way, that God may become enthroned upon our hearts and work in us, and by us, and for us. Here is the strength of the saints.

When we trust to ourselves and to our own strength, we are sure to fail in the hour of severe conflict. So it was with Peter. The confidence he had in himself, for he seems to have had no regard to any strength but his own, led him to say; "Though all men shall be offended because of thee, yet will I never be offended." Matth. xxvi. 33. But when he was tried, how terribly he failed! The humble and self-distrusting Paul said, "When I am weak, then am I strong." The hasty and self-confident Peter might with propriety have said, "When I am strong, then am I weak. When he thought to accomplish much, he failed altogether. We are only strong when the Lord is our strength. How strange that it takes so much teaching to make us fully understand this!

Another mistake we commit is in putting too much confidence in carnal weapons. "Some trust in chariots, and some in horses; but we will remember the Lord our God." Ps. xx. 7. The ancient warriors fought in chariots, and hence the allusion to chariots by the Psalmist. If he had expressed himself in modern military ideas, he would have said, Some trust in cannon, and some in musketry. How many who think there is danger, retire to their beds at night with a revolver under their heads, or a gun near their beds rather than trust to God as their shield and protector. Such trust to carnal weapons. But the apostle, speaking for Christians, says, "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds; casting down imaginations; and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." 2 Cor. x. 4, 5.

"These weapons of the holy war,
Of what almighty force they are,
To make our stubborn passions bow,
And lay the proudest rebel."

We have an interesting account in the history of the Pacific Island Missions, which beautifully illustrates the propriety of trusting to moral rather than physical means of defense. Two young men went as missionaries to Patagonia. Having heard of the savage character of the Patagonian, the friends of the two young men advised that they be supplied with weapons of defense; but Mr. Coan, one of the young men, had a strong belief that all these, even the pocket-knife, must be discarded. On nearing the Patagonian shore, the captain of the vessel in which these devoted followers of the Prince of Peace sailed, said, that as the natives were so savage and untrustworthy, he would not allow his crew to land; and he could only put Mr. Coan and his companion on a beach in small boat with their goods, saying that if they lighted a fire the natives would come into sight. It was a lonely position for the two missionaries; but the natives were soon seen lining the brow of the neighboring hill.—They came near and sought to satisfy themselves that the strangers were entirely unarmed—by examining every part of their dress, and even taking off their stockings and taking out their pockets; but finding nothing, they expressed their friendly regard by taking their new friends in their arms, and receiving them into their tribe. 'They gave us,' writes Mr. Coan, 'horses to ride on; and we traveled with them about three months, east, west, and north, visiting their camps and hunting grounds, and falling in with their clans. In this way we saw nearly all the savages of the eastern Patagonian Pampas.' The tribes are wild, and in the wildest state of savagism, living wholly by the chase, and roaming with their women and children most of the time, carrying their skin tents and their all with them. We had no interpreter; all our communications to the natives were through signs. Some of our friends had advised us to go armed into Patagonia. We had said, 'No, our weakness is our strength; our apparent unprotectedness our shield.' And so it was. The savages saw we were defenseless and harmless; and our God made them our protectors."

This is the course for Christians to pursue—the course the gospel directs. And the gospel is the power of God unto salvation, and if it was carried out in its principles and spirit, it would often preserve the natural life when it is not preserved, as well as promote the spiritual. "He that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword." Rev. xiii. 10. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." 1 John v. 4. When "the eternal God is our refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms," Deut. xxxiii. 27, we shall be strong to suffer or labor as our duty and position may require. But to be strong in the Lord, we must be weak in ourselves. Let us study the suggestive language of the apostle, and endeavor to know with him our own weakness and God's strength.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

TROY, O., May 29th, 1876.

Dear Primitive Christian:

Our journey thus far has been pleasant, and we are quite well. Our first stopping place was in Columbiana Co., Ohio. We stopped to visit our aged mother, and found her quite well, though the infirmities of age are multiplying upon her.—Our interview was mutually pleasant.—We took the train at homeworth station on the Cleveland and Pittsburgh railroad, and went east to Bayard, and from this place went to Canal Dover, and there took the Cleveland and Marietta railroad, to Newcomertown, on the Pan-Handle road. In passing down the Tuscarawas River we observed that there had been a great deal of rain in that valley, and though the river had not been very high, the small streams have. It has been very wet in the eastern part of Ohio, and the farmers are considerably behind the ordinary time for planting corn. The wheat crop in the valley above named is by no means promising. Neither is it in any part of the State through which we have passed. Here in the the Miami Valley, along some of the rivers, we notice some good fields of wheat, but upon the whole, the crop through the valley will be light. One of our brethren, an excellent farmer, and an old resident of the country, informed me that he never saw so poor a prospect for wheat in this country as there is this season.

The communion meeting in the Newton church commenced on Friday afternoon, the 26th instant, and we had the pleasure of attending it. It was very large, and was a season of refreshing from the Lord. It seemed to be an occasion of rejoicing to all, and especially to the members of the congregation in which it was held. They probably enjoyed it the more, as they have passed through some fiery trials. A number of the members of the Newton church, with the Elder, John Cadwallader, were separated from it. It was a very unpleasant occurrence, as all such separations are. Those that were separated have built a meeting house, and are holding meetings. John Flory, of Virginia, who was separated from our brotherhood, visited Newton several times and held meetings with John Cadwallader and his friends, and a number of persons was baptized. But John Flory has returned again to the fold from which he had strayed, and has been received into our brotherhood. We hope that he will be faithful and thus redeem the time that has been missused, and the labor that has been misplaced.—The Newton church at present seems to be enjoying peace and harmony, and we trust there is a brighter day before it. It was once one our most flourishing and lively churches, but the enemy seems to have taken advantage of the opportunity that was afforded him for doing mischief, as he is ever ready to do, and produced serious trouble. We would save ourselves a great deal of trouble, and the church reproach, if those who have charge of it would watch its interests with the diligence and care that the solemn trust committed to them demands. And, indeed, every member of the church should do his part in preserving the church from trouble and in assisting to extend its borders, for "whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it." We should all understand that owing to the relation existing between the individual members and the body, the prosperity of the entire body will add to the prosperity of each member, and that the faithfulness of each member will promote the efficiency of the body. In view of this consideration, it is to the spiritual interest of each member of the church, to have the church in a healthy spiritual condition.

We met at the communion meeting of the Newton church, brethren Thomas and Zeigler, from Virginia, and Brother Bashore, from Missouri, with other ministering brethren from adjoining churches. Bro. Bashore is a young man, only twenty-two years old, and has been but a little time in the ministry. He is devoting his time at present to the ministry, and is zealous in the Master's cause. We preached once in Covington, and had a pleasant visit among our friends there. The brethren reminded us of the encouragement we gave them when we left them to hope that we might return again to them, and still desire us to do so. So much at home do we feel among the brethren there, and such is the Christian friendship that seems to exist between them and ourself, that we should cheerfully do so, if duty would seem to require it. This beautiful country is surely attractive, and possesses a large store of the comforts and conveniences of life. But as we are "strangers and pilgrims on the earth," and as we as Christians are looking "for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God," and as that city cannot be found on earth under the existing form of things, we must not be too partial to any particular locality, but let the Lord choose our inheritance for us, and be satisfied with the place and labor which he allots us. In the guidance of his providence and Spirit we should have faith, and an open ear to hear the "still small voice," and a tender conscience to feel the drawings of his grace.

The churches in this valley are furnishing considerable help for the Annual Meeting, and there will a number of brethren and sisters go to assist in performing the labor. It is said the location selected for the meeting is a very pleasant one.—We expect to leave here about Saturday, and will spend the Lord's day before the meeting in Bellefontaine, where there will be appointments for preaching.

As we are well, and enjoying ourself as well as could be expected away from our dear home and kind friends in Meyersdale, we trust they are all well, and that things are moving along with their usual harmony in the office of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. J. QUNTER.

Cleanings and Jottings.

OUR MANUSCRIPT BOX.

As the editor is absent, and as we are lacking in the usual supply of editorials, we will try, to some extent, to supply the lack from our Manuscript Box. The last article taken out under the above heading was No. 4; and hence we will proceed in order with

No. 5—E J., York New Salem, Pa. This article is written in the German language. The text is: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not in by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." John x. 1. Leaving the German article, which, by the way, contains some wholesome admonitions, we shall subjoin some observations by Matthew Henry on this and a few of the succeeding verses. He says:

Let us observe something from the parable itself.

(1.) That good men are fitly compared to sheep. Men, as creatures depending on their Creator, are called the sheep of his pasture. Good men, as new creatures, have the good qualities of sheep, harmless and inoffensive as sheep; meeek and quiet, without noise; patient as sheep under the hand both of shearer and of the butcher; useful and profitable, and tame and tractable, to the shepherd, and social one with another, and much used in sacrifices.

(2.) The church of God in the world is a sheepfold, into which the children of God that were scattered abroad, are gathered together (ch. 11. 52.) and in which they are united and incorporated; it is a good fold, Ezek. 34. 14. See Mic. 2. 12. This fold is well fortified, for God himself is the wall of fire about it, Zech. 2. 5.

(3.) This sheepfold lies much exposed to thieves and robbers; crafty seducers that deauch and deceive, and cruel persecutors that destroy and devour, gracious wolves, Acts 20. 29. Thieves that would steal Christ's sheep from him, to sacrifice them to devils, or steal their food from them that they might perish for lack of it. Wolves in sheep's clothing, Matth 7. 15.

(4.) The great Shepherd of the sheep takes wonderful care of the flock and all that belongs to it. God is the great Shepherd, Psa. 23. 1; SO. 1. He knows them that are his, calls them by name, marks them for himself, leads them out to fat pastures, makes them both feed and rest there; speaks comfortably to them; guards them by his providence, guides them by his Spirit and word, and goes before them, to set them in the way of his steps.

(5.) The under-shepherds, who are entrusted to feed the flock of God, ought to be careful and faithful in the discharge of that trust; magistrates must defend them, and protect and advance all their secular interests; ministers must serve them in their spiritual interests, must feed their souls with the word of God faithfully opened and applied, and with gospel-ordinances duly administered, taking the oversight of them; they must enter by the door of a regular ordination, and to such the porter will open; the Spirit of Christ will set before them an open door, give them authority in the church, and assurance in their own bosoms. They must know the members of their flocks by name and watch over them; must lead them into the pastures of public ordinances, preside among them, be their mouth to God, and God's to them, and in their conversation must be examples to the believers.

(6.) Those who are truly the sheep of Christ, will be very observant of their Shepherd, and very cautious and shy of strangers. [1.] They follow their Shepherd, for they know his voice, having both a discerning ear and an obedient heart. [2.] They flee from a stranger, and dread following him, because they know not his voice. It is dangerous following those in whom we do not discern the voice of Christ, and who would draw us from faith in him to fancies concerning him. And they who have experienced the power and efficacy of divine truths upon their souls, have a strange sagacity to discern Satan's wiles, and to discern between good and evil.

No. 6.—D. S. T. B. This consists of suggestive hints, brief but earnest admonitions, interspersed with various petitions to our Father; showing the deep emotion of the writer. An hour spent daily in such exercise in the closet, would certainly be acceptable to God and beneficial to any Christian. We glean from this article the following:

KNOWLEDGE.

The first knowledge man should endeavor to obtain is of himself. Know thyself, and by so doing thou wilt gain fame. Humbleness of mind, meekness of spirit, and charity, should be the result of all our thoughts; "For I say," said Paul to the Romans, "through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think, but soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith." Rom. xii. 3.

DANGER.

The greatest obstacle to man's salvation is his fixing his mind on earthly treasures. While he rises up early, and late takes rest, to secure them, he forgets that he has a soul to be saved; and when the night cometh (or rather death), when no man can work, he finds himself unprepared to meet his Judge. "But be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God."—Rom. xii. 2.

No. 7.—P. S. This is an attempt to show that the two swords mentioned in the text, "Lord, behold, here are two swords," represent the two dispensations, the Mosaic and Christian, or the law and grace. It strikes us that it is a mistake, and that a sword and a plowshare, or a spear and a pruning-hook, would have represented the two dispensations more aptly. However, the writer comes to the conclusion that carnal weapons belong to the world and not to the church of Christ, and the Christian's weapon is the sword of the Spirit which is the word of God.

No. 8.—This is an item of correspondence from Bro. Allen Boyer, of Lena Ill., dated Jan. 7th. By some means it came into the wrong box, and hence was overlooked until it is out of date.

No. 9.—F. B. B., Blain, Pa. Text: "To the weak became I as weak; I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some." 1 Cor. ix. 22. The writer enforces the wholesome doctrine that we should exercise forbearance toward each other; and especially, that the strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak. He illustrates by relating a quarrel between two brothers and what followed. After the quarrel was over the elder endeavored to convince their father, in presence of the younger, that his brother was in fault, and his side was right and true. "After the affair was over, on a certain day the father said in a loving manner, 'I will give you an advice how to avoid quarreling with your only living brother, and that is, do not cross his feelings; and if disputes arise between you, as you are the elder, try to gain his affections by using mild means. You will find it to be the best way.'"—This advice might be good for older persons.

No. 10.—W. S. B. This is on dancing and its usual attendants and consequences. After stating in strong terms the evils connected with and growing out of this sinful pastime, the writer closes with the following admonition:

"You and I, my dear reader, will soon go the way of all nature, and I beseech you, as a philanthropist, to prepare to meet God; that you may not be in that multitude that will cry for the rocks and mountains to fall upon them and hide them from the wrath and indignation of him that sitteth upon the throne. He that wishes to reach the elysian fields of immortality, must yield to the mandates of the gospel and come under the jurisdiction of the divine Providence."

No. 11 is from a brother who had frequently heard of our paper, but had neglected to subscribe till this year. Now he wonders why he did not subscribe sooner, and why every brother or sister who is able does not subscribe. He thinks it is good and cheap. We think so, too:

only $1 60 a year, or 75 cents from this No. to the end of this volume.

No. 12.—J. R. S., Ashton, Ill. Text: "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Luke xii. 32. A part of the article was mislaid and lost; hence, although what is left indicates that the article was worthy of a better fate, we must pass what is left of it into the waste-basket. B.

ARE GAS-FITTINGS FIXTURES.—This question was considered by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in the case of Jarreck against the Philharmonic Society: "Houses are considered as finished by the builders when the gas fittings are completed. The fixtures are put up in more or less expensive style, according to the taste and means of the persons who mean to occupy them, whether as tenants or owners. If the tenant puts them in, it is not denied that as between him and the landlord they are his and he may remove them, or they may be sold as his personal property, on an execution by the sheriff. No doubt the owner, if they belong to him, often sells them with the house. They add more to the value of the house than they would be worth if removed.—But if there is no agreement to sell the house as it is—fixtures and all—the purchaser is not entitled to them."

A great fire occurred in San Francisco on Thursday night, May 25th, destroying property valued at $300,000.

Hon. J. A. Crawford, at Kingston, Ga., was stung on the head by a bee, May 24th, and died in two minutes.

A report was presented and passed the General Presbyterian Assembly at Brooklyn, May 25th, discountenancing dancing.

In the Methodist Episcopal General Conference, Cincinnati was selected as the place for holding the next session in 1880.

The paper mill of Lyman Hollingsworth, at North Grelton, Mass., was burned Thursday, May 25th. It was valued at $140,000.

Violent and destructive hail storms are reported in various parts of the country. In Clay county, Iowa, the ground was covered with hail to the depth of four inches.

The latest intelligence from Mexico is of an alarming character. It is reported that the President of the Supreme Court has started for the United States, and that President Lerdo is preparing for the sale of his property in case of disaster.

The President on the 22nd nominated and the Senate immediately confirmed Hon. Edwards Pierpont to be minister to England, Judge Taft to be Attorney General, and J. Don. Cameron, of Pennsylvania, to be Secretary of War.

Late advices from Mexico state that the military situation had not materially changed. The federal troops had been withdrawn from Oaxaco and many insurgents had returned to their homes. The official Diario declare that if the United States troops invade Mexico on any pretext whatever the Government will defend the soil.

In Memory of Sister Lavina Kiehl.

Died, near Jacksonville (Walnut Bottom), of typhoid pneumonia, at half-past five o'clock on the morning of the 11th of April, our much beloved sister, Lavina, wife of Bro. A. Kiehl, aged 66 years 11 months and nine days. Thus—

"One by one our friends are passing Over to the other shore"—

Whither Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, has gone, "who, for the joys that were set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God." Again the revolving year has brought us to the season which commemorates the passion of our Lord, and in which we are accustomed to contemplate the sufferings of the Man of Sorrows for the sins of the world. The memorable scenes of the last week of our Lord's incarnate career, culminating in his atoning death, are then recalled and solemnly pondered by ever true believer; and the more deeply are we impressed by these reflections when a meek and patient sufferer lies before us, gradually but surely wasting away under the withering influence of disease which has baffled the efforts of human skill. Through such a season we have just passed, under the heavy stroke of affliction and bereavement. "Under the shadow of the great forty days of Lent," which has overspread the Christian world in this eventful year, she whose decease we now chronicle passed through the most trying ordeal of suffering; and during Passion Week, which leads us near the cross of the Redeemer, on Tuesday preceding Good Friday, she finished the work that had been given her to do, and went from labor to reward. Just as the rising sun shed its first faint rays of light over our world her weary spirit was released from the suffering tenement of clay, and soared aloft to the realms of eternal day. We witnessed the trial and struggle, but could not avert the impending doom. The sentence was passed; the summons had come, and the tears of sympathy or the sighs of regret could not alter the fixed decree. "Death enters, and there is no defense;" and it has invaded this quiet family circle, and ruthlessly severed the silken cords of affection, which bound a devoted wife to her husband, a fond and tender mother to her children, a faithful sister to the church she had served so long, and to all around her an unwavering friend. But the love that cemented those loving hearts together is not dissolved by death. She prayed the Lord to take her home to glory, and now her prayer is answered.—We deeply feel the loss we have sustained, but have no cause to mourn. Her end was peace. In her latest moments she evinced the power of sustaining grace.—When we believed the senses had utterly failed in death, when the throbbing heart and fluttering pulse had almost ceased to beat, and that no lingering word would be syllabled by her faltering tongue and quivering lips, she faintly whispered the name of Jesus; and soon after she even more distinctly said, "Yea, yea, yea," as if spoken in response to the cheering voice of her Beloved, upon whose rod and staff she leaned while passing through the valley of the shadow of death, now waiting to welcome the weary traveler home. She looked lovely and saint-like in death, more beautiful than ever in life. As she lay shrouded in her coffin, she appeared like one who had lain down to pleasant dreams beneath a cloudless sky. The high esteem in which she had been held by the church and by the entire community was clearly evinced by the attendance and attention given from first to last during her illness and after her decease. From long experience she had become familiar with many of the diseases which commonly affect humanity, and was well skilled in some branches of the medical profession. Hence she was very useful, and will be greatly missed. Her funeral was largely attended. Many sympathizing members and friends followed her remains to the place of interment, near Milltown, where many more joined the procession. The coffin was taken on a bier into the meeting house, and placed in the aisle where she often sat while living.

The occasion was improved by the brethren who labor in the vineyard here, from 1 Cor. xv. 51—53. The mystery spoken of by Paul, the resurrection of the dead, and an exhortation to steadfast men of the gospel, was the theme throughout, which was both solemn and impressive. Before her remains were removed many persons of both sexes passed through the aisle to take a last sad look at the friend they loved so well. Then the coffin lid closed, and she was borne away to the grave, where the last solemn rite was performed, and she was buried from our sight forever. "The graves of our friends are our preachers; they are so silent, and yet speak so forcibly; they utter no words, but they awaken recollections which make the heart bleed." And if, perchance, the absent ones who were not here to weep with those who wept over the coffin and the grave of their sainted mother, should, in after years, visit the quiet spot which memory hallows, many recollections of past experience will be awakened there by the side of that little mound of rising earth which marks her lowly resting place; and these recollections will touch the heart as no human sermon ever can—like the very voice of Him who speaks from the eternal world: "Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return."

MIRANDA.

Eclaircissement.

To C. H. Balsbaugh:

DEAR BROTHER:—In reply to your criticism in No. 20, page 316, I would say that my authority for saying that the "River Brethren" sprung from the "Old Brethren," is as follows:

In a work entitled "Hitchcock's Analysis of the Bible," page 1125, Art., "River Brethren," the author says, "So called because the founders of the sect, in Germany, soon after the year 1705 were baptized by one another in the river Eder. This mother church migrated first to Holland, and in 1719 to Pennsylvania. . . . In 1867 were mostly found in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Canada."

Also, in a "History of the Religious Denominations in the U. S.," published by Q. D. Rupp, of Lancaster, Pa., 1844, p. 92, in an article written by Bro. Philip Boyle, of Md. (now deceased), the writer traces the Old Brethren to the same time and place; that the person baptizing them was chosen by lot, and his name never divulged; that they were driven to Holland, and in 1719 emigrated to America.

Also, see "Brethren's Cyclopaedia," Art., A. Mack, p. 10.

Thus we see that both sects originated from the same source, according to the above accounts.

History must be at fault, or your tradition. Which is it?

Plumcreek Normal School.

Brother Quinter:

We would inform you and your many readers that Plumcreek Normal School is being largely developed. The Library for general reading and reference has been much increased this month, by contributions from friends, with still further promises to aid us. We invite all our brethren to send us suitable books to enlarge it.

The Cabinet is now opened, for the first time formally, on the 24th of May, for the reception of Geological, Mineralogical, and Entomological specimens and ancient relics and curiosities. This will be quite an aid to the school. All are invited to contribute to the Cabinet, and their favors will be acknowledged.

An Herbarium is also connected with the school, under the care of Professor Miller.

With improved school books, the above aids, and thorough teaching, we are prepared to extend good facilities to the children of our fraternity for pursuing a course of study.

Tuition—only $10 for term of 6 months.

Boarding—$2 50 per week.

Let us have the endowment completed and we will be able to do good in a systematic way.

For particulars address,

The Sunday School Teacher.

The vocation of the Sunday-school teacher is one of great importance and responsibility, and this should be properly felt by those who are engaged in it.—It is only by having proper views of any calling that we are rightly fitted to discharge its duty.

Any one acquainted with our Sunday schools knows full well that there are some engaged as teachers who have no proper idea of the work. They seem to think that all they have to do is merely to hear the class read and keep them together for a short time. When this is done they think their work for the day is done, and they think no more about it until they meet their class the next time, when the same course is pursued. Such teaching must, in the necessity of the case, amount to be little.

Any one engaged as a Sunday-school teacher should look higher than this.—The office itself is of a much more sacred character. The Sunday-school standing in organic connection with the church, contemplates the spiritual welfare of the children; and should aim at nothing less than their salvation. A teacher, therefore, who makes no effort to bring the children entrusted to his care and instruction, to the Savior, will fail in the accomplishment of the object of his vocation.

The first and chief thing that should be impressed upon the mind of the teacher is the thought that he should labor earnestly and incessantly for the spiritual well-being of all the members of his class. This should lie near his heart and never be lost sight of. He should, during the week as well as on Sunday, think of the ways and means by which this can be most effectually accomplished. The lesson should, to this end be diligently studied and whatever truths are contained in it should be brought out clearly and impressed upon the minds of the children with earnestness and affection.

Much depends upon the way in which the truths are presented. If it is done in such a way and manner as to leave the impression that it is not of much importance and that there is no need of its being immediately embraced, its effects will be little; whereas, if the class is made to feel that they have a personal interest in it, and that they should give it a lodgment in their hearts, and endeavor to practice it in their lives, there is every reason to believe that it will produce its legitimate fruit. There is no labor we can perform that will more certainly bring with it its reward than when we sow the seed of the gospel in humble reliance and dependence upon the divine blessing. For God is not slack concerning his promises, as men often are, but will most certainly water it with his blessings and give an abundant increase.

Viewed in this light Sunday-school teachers have much to encourage them in the faithful discharge of their duties.—Many, as examples show, have been successful in bringing all the children committed to their care to Christ. And when true to their calling they are important helpers to the minister in his work, and they will at the last day receive a blessed reward for their toil and self-denial, from the chief Shepherd who will say, wherein ye have meant to do good to the lambs of the flock ye have done it unto me.

What the teacher should do first—in time as well as importance, is to take that part of God's word which is designed as the lesson and bend the mind upon this with no other helps than his own powers of analysis and thought. Of course he must look to God for help, but this God has already promised to the faithful student who feels his need of light and wisdom, and asks his heavenly Father for such a blessing. Then when he has done his very best himself may he resort to human helps. His own thinking may then be corrected—difficulties cleared up, more illustrations be gathered, and all the aids he needs, to classify and complete his analysis, or explanations be secured. But let the main dependence be upon God and the power God has. A lesson thought out for one's self is worth a good many retailed from somebody else. The teacher himself feels better for it, and the pupils know from the start that it is the result of prayerful study rather than of rapid cramming of commentaries.

There should be, if at all possible, in every school, a teachers' meeting. It is essential to unity, to thoroughness, to efficiency, and to success. This meeting should be under the charge of the minister or superintendent, and should meet every week if possible. It should not be a mere business meeting, a debating society, a fashionable resort for empty gossip, nor a mere crutch or substitute for study.

It should be an assembly of earnest and devoted souls, heartily uniting in a free and pleasant study of God's word in preparing the lesson for the following Sunday. The leader should be competent, faithful and energetic. The devotional exercises should consist of a few inspiring hymns and earnest prayer. Under such arrangements and regulations the teachers' meetings will prove successful and subserve an excellent purpose. It will direct teachers how to study and how to enjoy study. It will also tend to keep alive in them a proper interest in the growing zeal for the noble cause, and stimulate them to diligent and earnest work. Better and more real work will be done. The school will richly profit thereby. The general result will evince progress and prosperity.

We would therefore, by way of conclusion, encourage Sunday-school teachers in this good work. There are here, as in other departments of life, times of discouragement, when it would seem as if we were making no progress. We must not, however, judge from appearances.—The truth may lie a long time in the heart before it begins to bear fruit. Our duty is to labor as effectually as we can and leave the result to God, who will without doubt add his blessing.

JOHN T. KOLP.

East Lewistown, Ohio.

NORTH LIBERTY, IND.

Dear Brother Quinter:

Seeing a request in one of our papers asking those who had received light from reading to send their names and the manner of their conversion, a circumstance was recalled to my mind which occurred about twelve years ago.

I was born and lived in East Tennessee until I was about eighteen years of age. About that time I drifted toward the West, on account of our late cruel war. I sometimes think the providence of God led me to take this step—to leave father and mother in such a time of need. It happened to be my lot to stop in St. Joseph county, Indiana, where I had an old uncle living, who has since died in the faith of the Brethren. Here I heard a strange doctrine proclaimed by the Brethren, as the Brethren were and are yet strangers in the section I came from. I thought those old "Dunkards," so-called, were the most selfish people that I ever met, as the prevailing churches where I was raised were Methodist and Missionary Baptist, and I had been living as the world is living to-day. "How is that," says one. Just as the young birds in the nest—waiting for the feeder to come with food; holding their mouths open to receive it, but never opening their eyes to see what it is. But alas! it generally is a fatal spider that is brought.—Spiritually speaking, so the world is drifting along to-day. In most of the popular churches they wait for the minister of the gospel to come along and tell them their duty, and when he comes the word as it is in Christ is not spoken, and consequently the congregation is fed on that which is poison to the soul.

Time went on, and it seemed that those Dunkards went on with their doctrine, year in and year out, about the same, which made me pay the more earnest heed. Finally, I began to compare the doctrine which the Brethren preached with that of the New Testament, placing myself as an obstacle in the way, and taking notice how often I would get hit with the power that was thrown from one to the other, trying at the same time to hold my position. Directly I found myself losing ground, and surrendered to the Brethren.

This was in 1869, and I hope that I am in full fellowship yet with the Brethren. In a word, as "faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the word of the Lord," Rom. x. 17, so I came to an understanding in full by reading that word which will not pass away when heaven and earth shall fail. And I was most forcibly struck with that portion which reads as follows: "He that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin." And I would hereby state to my dear young readers that the word of the Lord is the true plan of salvation; and when you read it and hear his voice harden not your hearts, but give it a free acceptance and the Lord will bless you. Take no man's advice for the plan of salvation except the Lord's, for he is the author and finisher of your faith, and you may rest assured that you will not be fed on things that do not pertain to heaven, as the world is. After a full investigation of the matter, I don't take the Brethren to be as selfish as I did, though I sometimes think that some brethren give themselves a little too much over to the affairs of the world yet. May the Lord bless us. J. SUMMERS.

On Prayer Meeting.

Dear Brother James:

I wish to speak to the brethren and sisters through your worthy paper, and may God help me to speak for good to the upbuilding of his church and to the edifying of the brethren and sisters in the East as well as West.

First, the most important thing in religion is to be alive to every duty. For Paul says, in 1 Cor. xi. 2, "And keep the ordinances as I delivered them to you." This is right, and the brethren do all this; but does duty stop here? Not by any means. For we are commanded to pray without ceasing.

Now, brethren, "come, let us reason together," for I want to speak to you upon the question of prayer-meetings and Sunday schools. We cannot live without prayer; for we will fail in our expectations—lose our love to God and each other. We cannot live too close to God, for Christ declared to his apostles, "If ye ask anything in my name, I will do it." God has given us this means to ask for what we want of him. Brethren, do you want to be renewed and strengthened in the inner man? Then pray for it. Do you want your neighbors born again? Pray for it. Do you want your children that you love so much to be with you in the church? Then pray for it. Do you want to feel your own heart warmed by the gift of the Holy Ghost? Then pray for it. I feel, dear brethren, that we are not able to bring one blessing from heaven without prayer. Some may say, "We pray at our regular meetings." This is right. But do you feel that it is enough? I answer, No; for I see the church dead while she has a name to be alive. I see the members cold and lukewarm, and I feel it too. We must get out of this awful condition, or God will spew us out of his mouth, and we will be neither fit for heaven nor hell. "Ye are the salt of the earth; if the salt has lost its savor wherewith shall it be salted.

Now, brethren, if you have any saving power in you, it is by prayer. I saw a good article in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN not long ago, on prayer meetings, and I say, God help the effort to extend prayer-meetings in the Brethren's church all over the United States. "Well," says one, "I do not object to prayer-meetings if they would not call on me to pray."—Let us be careful not to refuse, for they do not pray after death, nor beyond the grave. Then let all the churches have an appointment for this purpose, and one to lead by reading a chapter and lining a hymn, and all sing, and all pray, and if any has a word of exhortation, let him say on, and you will find enjoyment in it, and you will love God and one another. Amen.

Dale View Sabbath School.

ADDISON, SOMERSET CO., PA. }
May 22nd, 1876.

Dear Brother Quinter:

The Brethren and friends living in the vicinity of the Peck School house in this township would say through the medium of your paper that the organization of our Sabbath school was completed yesterday. The officers are as follows: Superintendent, elder J. B. Sell; Assistant Supt., Jacob W. Peck; Secretary, Wm. J. Miller; Treasurer, Solomon Hershberger; Librarians, Samuel Mosholder and Israel Berkley; Sexton, Lewis Peck.

As it is our desire that all who can read in the Bible should make use of it in preference to any other book. We have organized two Bible classes, the first under the instruction of Lewis Peck and the second under the instruction of Winfield Bird. We have also organized four primary classes with teachers as follows: Miss Elizabeth Peck, First Spelling; Abraham Folk, Second Spelling; Jacob W. Peck, First Abecedarian; Israel Berkley, Second Abecedarian. All the officers and teachers and forty two scholars were present besides a large number of visitors.

At a previous meeting $20.00 had been subscribed and a library ordered which will soon arrive, and we hope will help to keep up the interest already manifested by the community.

WM. J. MILLER, Sect.

MARTINSVILLE, MO. }
May 25th, 1876.

Dear Brethren:

This being Ascension morning, I will try to write a few lines for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. Last March two years ago, I, with my family, came to this part of God's moral vineyard, for the purpose of trying to build up a congregation of believers. We have formed an organization, baptized six, and reclaimed one. We number sixteen, and are in peace with one another so far as I know. We are scattered over twenty miles of territory, which has made it hard for me to labor for the cause here; the distance being from 4 to 16 miles, and my only way of going is to walk. I have been now trying to labor for the good of the Master's cause for over eight years, and have never yet had a way of traveling of my own, but to go afoot; and I am now compelled to give it up, as my limbs pain me for days after I make a trip of 16 or 20 miles. I have an appointment seven miles off; and the last time I walked there and back my legs pained so that I could not work at all on Monday. Now I have withdrawn the appointment that was farthest off, and will discontinue one next Lord's day. This, dear brethren, is hard for me to do, as I love the cause, and the members where those meetings are held do not like for me to discontinue, but I must, as I cannot endure it. There are nine sisters and seven brethren, two of whom are very old. We have two deacons.

Now, one might think, "Call one to your assistance." I have talked with the members, but they say, "We have no choice now." As it appears this season might be harvest-time for us, and much good accomplished in Jesus' name, will not some of our ministers make up their minds to come to our assistance this season? I live forty miles from the railroad, and about forty miles from any ministering brethren. I would like to get a minister to move here. There has quite a number of newcomers moved in here this spring, but no brethren. Health is good here; also good prospects for fruit, &c. Now, shall I have ministerial assistance? Beloved, I have written this from a sense of duty, and out of love.

From your weak yet hopeful and sincere brother—
W. B. SELL.

The Full Beard Again.

I received a postal card from a brother, demanding proof from me that Jesus was the true Nazarite, and that he wore a full beard. As he is the first man I ever heard to doubt it, I think he should prove. He did not. But he can read at his leisure the 13th chapter of Judges, of the command of the angel to Manoah's wife, what she was to observe and what Samson was to observe to become a deliverer. He began to deliver the children of Israel from under the bondage of the Philistines; and as Samson failed to be a true deliverer, in a certain degree, and Jesus succeeded to deliver the human family from under the curse of the broken Law, and he succeeded, I conclude he was a true Nazarite, as the evangelist Matthew refers to the same scripture when he says, "He shall be called a Nazarene." Matth. 2: 23

Now, dear brother, if you still think I have my foot in, try and help me out, as I desire to be built on the rock Christ, as he is the chief corner stone.

Yours truly,
SOLOMON GILBERT,
New Lebanon, Ohio.

To the Brethren in the West.

Inasmuch as many calls for ministerial labor are made by you, through the press, and I desire to go west, I write thus to you. I am a farmer; but am not able to buy a farm. I want to rent, and prefer a farm already stocked. I have a tolerably large family, and can run two or three teams. I would prefer to go to central or southern Iowa, and have no objections to locating where there is no organized church.

As some brethren seem to be a little particular as to the kind of minister, when they call, I would refer all who want to ask any questions about me to the following elders: George Hoover, Sulphur Springs, Henry Co., Ind.; Elias Caylor, Arcadia, Hamilton Co., Ind.; and John H. Caylor, Noblesville, Ind. Any one knowing of any such situation, and wanting my humble service, will please write to MARRIN J. McCLURE,

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Somerset congregation, Ind., May 14th, 1876, our friend, JOSEPH STAIN, aged about 62 years. Disease, gravel. He leaves a wife and eight children to mourn his loss. About four years ago he was attacked by the same disease, which caused him to think something of the future, which, previously, he had thought but little about. But he now lies in his narrow home without ever having made any profession of religion. He was a good neighbor, and honest in all his dealings. Funeral attendance large. Services by the Brethren, from Gen. iii. 19.
H. R. MINNICK.

In Norristown, Pa., April 6th, 1876, suddenly, of apoplexy, Sister SUSANNAH GODSALL, aged 60 years and two months. She was a widow. Her maiden name was Custer. She was first married to Alexander Blackburn, with whom she lived about ten years, when she became a widow. After some years of sorrow in her bereaved state, she was again married to Dillman Godshall, but again became a widow after several years. She was a consistent member of the church about 25 years. Funeral occasion improved by brethren John U. Stingliff, Henry Cassel, and Isaac Kulp.

Specialties in Medicine.

We publish on our eighth page a lengthy article describing the system of the noted specialist, Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., in which he sets forth with considerable force and clearness his reasons for devoting his whole time and attention to a single department of medicine—the treatment of lingering chronic diseases. The same article also takes up the subjects of diagnosis, methods of consultation and treatment, etc., and will be found to contain many valuable hints to the invalid. Dr. Pierce is the author of a work which has already attained a large circulation—"The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser"—containing some nine hundred numerous illustrated pages, and devoted to medicine in all its branches, a work well calculated for the guidance and instruction of the people at large, and which may be had for $1.50 (post-paid) by addressing the author. Dr. Pierce has now been before the general public long enough to enable the formation of a careful estimate of the efficiency of his treatment and his medicines, and the verdict, we are glad to know, has been universally favorable to both.

THE LUNGS!

CONSUMPTION!

This distressing and dangerous complaint and its premonitory symptoms, neglected cough, night sweats, hoarseness, wasting flesh fever—permanently cured by DR. SWAYNE'S COMPOUND SYRUP OF WILD CHERRY.

BRONCHITIS—a premonitor of Pulmonary Consumption, is characterized by catarrh, or inflammation of the mucus membrane of the air passages, with cough and expectoration, short breath, hoarseness, pains in the chest. For all bronchial affections, sore, throat, loss of voice, coughs,

DR. SWAYNE'S COMPOUND SYRUP OF WILD CHERRY IS A SOVEREIGN REMEDY.

Hemorrhage or Spitting of Blood, may proceed from the larynx, trachea, bronchia or lungs, and arises from various causes, as undue physical exertion, plethora or fullness of the vessels, weak lungs, overstraining of the voice, suppressed evacuation, obstruction of the spleen or liver, &c.

Dr. Swayne's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry

strikes at the root of disease by purifying the blood, restoring the liver and kidneys to a healthy action, invigorating the nervous system.

The only standard remedy for hemorrhage, bronchial and all pulmonary complaints. Consumptives and those predisposed to weak lungs should not fail to use this great vegetable remedy.

Its marvelous power, not only over consumption, but over every chronic disease where a gradual alterative action is needed. Under its use the cough is loosened, the night sweats diminished, the pain subsides, the pulse returns to its natural standard, the stomach is improved in its power to digest and assimilate food, and every organ has a purer and better quality of blood supplied to it out of which new recreative and plastic material is made. Price one dollar. Six bottles $5. If your druggist or storekeeper has not got it, we will forward half dozen to any address on receipt of price, freight pre-paid.

Should the bowels be castive, or head-ache accompany your disease, the patient should procure a box of

DR. SWAYNE'S TAR PILLS.

Take first a few doses of pills and follow with Swayne's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry. The Pills will evacuate the bowels, which is of the first importance, relieve the congested liver, purify the blood, strengthen the nerves, improve the appetite and remove all biliousness. They are purely vegetable and act specifically on the liver as Blue Mass or Calomel, without any bad results from taking. Price 25 cents. 5 boxes $1. Sent by mail on receipt of price.

ITCHING PILES! PILES, PILES, ITCHING PILES!

Positively cured by the use of SWAYNE'S OINTMENT.

HOME TESTIMONY.

I was sorely afflicted with one of the most distressing of all diseases, Pruritus or Prurigo, or more commonly known as itching Piles. The itching at times was almost intolerable, increased by scratching, and not unfrequently becoming quite sore. I bought a box of Swayne's Ointment; its use gave quick relief, and in a short time made a perfect cure. I can now sleep undisturbed, and I would advise all who are suffering with this distressing complaint to procure Swayne's Ointment at once. I had tried prescriptions almost innumerable, without finding any permanent relief.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.

Health and Beauty—how to secure them.—Female Irregularities.—Beauty is as indispensable to the happiness of woman, as is health to her existence; the loss of charms being regarded as a greater affliction than death itself. Holloway's Pills and Ointment have done more toward preserving it, and relieving the various disorders incidental to the sex, than all other advertised medicines united. Thousands of lovely females have had their constitutions ruined or beauty blighted by drastic aperients, pernicious stimulants, and poisonous lotions. The mild, soothing, and restorative influence of Holloway's great internal and external remedies, in all complaints of women, are now generally admitted, whether in the Spring-time of womanhood, or in the Autumn, or turn of life.

*** Sold at the Manufactory of Professor HOLLOWAY & Co., New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents, and $1 each.

CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the signature of J. HADDOCK, as agent for the United States, surmounts each box of Pills and Ointment. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

SOME MOTHER'S CHILD.

At home or away, in the alley or street,
Wherever I chance in this wide world to meet
A girl that is thoughtless, or a boy that is wild,
My heart echoes softly, " 'Tis some mother's child."

And when I see those o'er whom long years have rolled,

Whose hearts have grown hardened, whose spirits are sold,

Be it woman fallen, or man all defiled,
A voice whispers sadly, "Ah! some mother's child."

No matter how far from the right she hath strayed;

No matter what inroads dishonor hath made;
No matter what element cankered the pearl—Though tarnished and sullied, she is some mother's girl.

No matter how wayward his footsteps have been;
No matter how deep he is sunken in sin;
No matter how low is his standard of joy—
Though guilty and loathsome, he is some mother's boy.

That head hath been pillowed on tenderest breast;

That form hath been wept o'er, those lips have been pressed,

That soul hath been prayed for in tones sweet and mild:

For HER sake deal gently with some mother's child.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

How Does the Spirit Strive with Men.

BY J. W. WHITE.

"And the Lord said, My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh." Gen. 6: 3.

The above Scripture occurs but once in my knowledge in the Old or New Testament; and that was spoken when there was yet no written law given, but holy men of God spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

I heard a southern minister, not long since, say, "One thing we do know, that the Spirit of the Lord operates on the heart of the sinner to bring him to God." I will look at this a little in the fear of the Lord. The above Scripture is used by some to prove that the Spirit of the Lord operates upon the heart of the sinner, separate and apart from the gospel, to convert him. If God's word teaches so, I have failed to find it. I think that Nehemiah in the 9th chapter 30 verse tells us how the Spirit strove with man.
He says, "Yet many years didst thou forbear them, and testified against them by thy Spirit in the prophets; yet would they not give ear." Now Job says, "The ear try-eth words as the mouth tasteth meats." The eye and ear are the two main organs that convey knowledge to the heart. With the heart man believeth; and all know that in case any individual is brought before a court of justice who has neither seen nor heard anything about the matter, his testimony is of no account. "Strive," means to labor, to contend. This is the way I understand God's Spirit strove with man.

The prophet says, "The word of the Lord came unto me saying,
Thus saith the Lord," &c. The Lord said unto his disciples, "I will pray the Father and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever, even the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive; because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him." Now mark, the apostle says, "The world cannot receive the Spirit of truth."
Does not a sinner belong to the world until he complies with the conditions of the gospel? Let me produce one evidence here: "And we are also his witnesses of these things, and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him." Acts 5: 32. Here we see that it is on condition that God has promised the Spirit.

Now I will get back to the point.
Our Saviour says, "If I depart, I will send the Comforter unto you."
"And when he is come, he will reprove the world of righteousness and of judgment," &c. John 16: 8.
Question: How did the Spirit reprove the world? I claim he re-proves the world, or, that his Spirit strives with man, as he did with ancient Israel. The apostles on the day of Pentecost were the first under the new dispensation to reprove the world; "and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance." Peter being the foremost apostle, "standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice, and said unto them, "Ye men of Jude, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you, and hearken to my words, for these are not drunken as ye suppose."
Now here the Spirit, in Peter, re-proved some for retaining a doubt, and others for supposing that they were full of wine, &c.

Again, let us hear Stephen, Acts 6: 10, "And they were not able to resist the wisdom and the spirit with which he spake." Acts 7: 51,
"Ye stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost; as your Fathers did, so do ye." Here I see that the Lord reproveth the people by Stephen, and that they were a stiff-necked people, and uncircumcised in heart and ears, &c.

Again, Acts 7: 54, "When they heard these things, they were cut to the heart; and they gnashed on him with their teeth." Question:
Was it the Spirit of the Lord operating on their hearts separate from the gospel? I think not. "A grievous word stirreth up anger, but a soft answer turneth away wrath."
They were grieved at the words of Stephen, or the teaching of the Spirit. When our Saviour reproved the people, they were grieved, and sent to take his life.

Again, "The Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith," &c. 1 Tim 4: 1. To speak, means to utter words with the mouth. "Ho that hath an ear let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."
Again, "He that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, he is like unto a wise man," &c.

In Heb. 2: 1, the apostle says,
"Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard," * * "for if the word spoken by angels was steadfast." Here we have angels speaking—to whom? to sinners?
No; to holy men of God, such as Noah, Abraham, Moses, Joseph, and the shepherds. Again, the apostle says, "Faith comes by hearing; and hearing, by the word of God."

I have been asked, how it comes that one sinner will move, and another sitting by will not move.
I answer, because the one that moves believes the word preached, the other does not. Hear the apostle in Heb 4: 2, "For unto us was the gospel preached as well as unto them; but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it."
Now I say right here, that man is not a free agent, if there must be a supernatural power to operate upon his heart, separate from the gospel.

Rom. 1: 16, "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. "For therein is the righteousness of God revealed," &c. We hear it asked, Does not the Father draw the sinner? Let us hear Jesus in John 6: 44, 45: "No man can come to me except the Father draw him; and I will raise him up at the last day. It is written in the prophets, And they shall all be taught of God. Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me." Here it is set forth in the light of the gospel, that it is those who are taught and who have heard and learned of the Father, who come to the Son. Hence I repeat that "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." And "how can they hear without a preacher?" "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized." Acts 20: 41.

But one says, "The Spirit accompanies the word,"—as much as to say that the sound of the gospel cannot accomplish everything upon the heart of the sinner, except the Spirit operates with the word. Such language I have failed to find in any connection. I know that the Spirit and the gospel are in the heart of God's children. But the sinner only has the promise of the Spirit by complying with the conditions of the gospel. In Eph. 1: 13, the apostle, speaking of those who first trusted in Christ, says, "In whom ye also trusted after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise."

Again, it is asked, Does not the Spirit knock at the door of the sinner? Look there at this Scripture, Rev. 3: 20, "Behold I stand at the door and knock, if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." Question: How does he knock at the heart of the sinner? Is the Spirit separate from the gospel? No; for he says, "He that heareth my voice and opens the door." I conclude that faith and hearing compose the door of the heart; for with the heart man believeth, and with the mouth confession is made.

Again, I am told that the word of God is the seed. Our Saviour says in his parable, Luke 8: 12, "Those by the wayside are they that hear. Then cometh the devil and taketh away the word out of their hearts, lest they should believe and be saved." I want to be understood: we must have that faith that works by love as the apostle says. Our Saviour says, those are his mother and brethren which hear the word of God and do it. I read in Acts 14: 27, "How God had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles."

I am getting this letter longer than I intended; yet I have several passages of Scripture I would like to offer on this subject. I read in Acts 16: 14, of a certain woman named Lydia, whose heart the Lord opened. Now Lydia, I think, occupied about the same position as Cornelius or the Eunuch prior to their conversion; for they were all worshippers of God. I want the reader to bear in mind that I am trying to show how the Spirit strives with man. The apostle says: "And we sat down and spake unto the woman which resorted thither." Lydia, whose heart the Lord opened, at tended unto the things which were spoken of Paul. Then she was baptized. I think Lydia was a free agent, as all others. I do not think the Lord would have opened her heart, if she had not been willing; but he knew her heart, so he spake unto her by his servant, and she heard and believed, as the Eunuch did Philip. The Lord spake unto Philip, saying, "Arise and go." Again the Spirit said unto Philip, "go," which are synonymous terms. So the Lord always strove with man. They that hear, believe, repent, and obey the gospel from the heart, have the promise of eternal salvation, or, the Spirit of God, and not before.

Some can see a world of things, but for their lives they cannot see how the sinner can obey the gospel without the Spirit operating upon his heart apart from the word. They can see the gambler call to his fellow to come in, and he moves; to another he drops a line, he reads it, he moves. Is God's word so inferior to that of man? I think not. It is said, "While the sinner is lying on his bed, is there not a still small voice telling him that it is not all well with him?" A voice as a voice must enter the heart by the ear. I think, more properly, conscience tells us "all is not well." The Psalmist says, "I commune with my own heart upon my bed."

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Secret Societies.

BY B. F. SHIVELY.

"I spake openly to the world, I ever taught in the synagogue and in the temple whither the Jews always resort, and in secret have I said nothing."

It hardly seems possible that a professor of religion, who has once been placed on the platform of his own personal responsibility to God, through the Bible, should suffer himself to fall back into ancient darkness, and enter into collusive combinations with cliques of his fellow men, and pledge himself to be controlled in his actions by a system of mystic frauds so uncongenial to Christianity. But such seems to be the case in some parts of God's moral vineyard, as confirmed by the brother in an article which appeared in No. 10 of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. While we rejoice that a few have dared to raise their voice against an institution so obnoxious to religion and contrary to the great fundamental principles of Christianity, we regret that it is not more frequently discussed throughout the brotherhood, and brought before men, and especially young men, to whom they would offer so many inducements, that they might take warning before entering a craft which not only strips them of their manhood in this world, but will eventually deprive them of eternal life in the world to come.

That it strips man of his manhood will not be questioned when we consider the degradation to which he is exposed while undergoing initiation into the different degrees of Freemasonry. When men allow themselves to be led into a lodge-room blindfolded with a halter around their neck, they do that which is not only silly but positively degrading; and who that is possessed of the spirit of a man would not be ashamed to thus appear in public? Certainly he who can submit to such degradation has lost much of the spirit of a man, especially a Christian, as in the opinion of Macons themselves when they are honest enough to express their mind. One has said that "the candidate for initiation is put through a course of preliminary nonsense offensive to his moral sense and degrading to his manhood."

That it will eventually deprive him of eternal life is a conclusion at which we arrive from the standpoint that no Christian can be a Free Mason, and visa versa because it takes away liberty of both speech and conscience. In the act of initiation conscience with liberty of speech is surrendered, and the working of that order may be such as to shock his sense of right and wrong; yet he dare not express one word of disapprobation. Thus no Free Mason possesses an unshackled conscience which the Christian so much values. It takes from him independence of expression; the dignity of openness, the high and precious motive which can excite the soul to deep and holy action, by placing a seal of silence and concealment upon his lips; by putting him under vows of blind subjection, and by requiring submission to a humiliating and degrading ceremony of initiation. It withholds from him all that constitutes the true ascendancy of manhood, and substitutes the mummeries, and dumb show regalia, and display for the power of thought and the wealth of research; and so numerous are the reasons why Christians cannot be Free Masons that space would not permit a full discussion even if the writer had the ability. Suffice to say, in addition to the foregoing reasons, that Freemasonry profanes the ordinance of the oath; recognizes none but the universal religion of nature; is in direct opposition to the teachings of the Savior; it contradicts the Bible, profanes holy things, misquotes, misapplies, and perverts the Scriptures, is dangerous to society, and, as a system, is altogether Anti-Christian. No man having the least reverence for the word of God can aid in the horrid perversion of the Scriptures; hence, we say, do not be identified with the unfruitful works of darkness, but come out from among them and be separate, and touch not the unclean things.

There are many other secret societies besides Masonry, but they are all substantially the same; perhaps not quite so extensive, yet all are ramifications from the same great trunk, Free Masonry—and inherit all its vices, immorality, and degradation; hence what applies to one is equally applicable to all. Therefore all true Christians should be vigilant in guarding against this depreciating evil, not fearing the disapprobation of anyone. For of all the calamities that can befall a people, there are none greater than that of having its Christian faith insidiously undermined, and the purity of that religion corrupted and debased. Where members of the church, and even ministers of the gospel, themselves, have been deluded by favors and specious pretexts into the practice of Masonic arts, and the trivial, delusive mysticism of the lodge mingle as a homogeneous element in the solemn, serious, and all-important worship of Christ, our religion cannot possibly escape corruption of the most insidious and dangerous kind. The altars of Freemasonry and those of Christianity are antagonistic, and one or the other must be destroyed; for a Christian people cannot so designedly blend fruits of good and evil as to offer its oblation on both altars and still live. And of a surety the simple sanctions, and sterling virtues of Christianity can never be relished by those who are taught to admire the costly temples, the lofty priesthood, the pretentious altars, the elocutionary prayers, the convivial hymns, the impressive ceremonies, the solemn cavernous initiation into sublime and ineffable degrees of perfection, the liturgies, the dedications, the libations, the blazing insignia, the pompous ceremonial, the seductive symbolicisms, allegory, and mystery which embody the rites conceal the craft power to Masonry. By their pretensions they insinuate that it is a religious help to raise oneself by self-sacrifice to heaven; the pretention is as vain as was the devotion of Julian to the Pagan altars of the immortal gods, for as an ethical principle, serving to lead to a moral and spiritual life, Masonry like the Paganism of Rome is below even our contempt. All the good will to men, all the works of beneficence to which it can lay claims are but artful mockeries, base copies, at best for a selfish purpose, of the virtues inculcated by the higher and nobler teachings of the Savior and his church.

Close to the Savior.

There may have been something of simplicity in the remark of a diligent follower of Jesus, but there was in it also the true triumph of faith, when she said: "I hear others talk of their temptations. For my part I am not troubled with them. I strive to live so near to my Savior that the tempter has no power over me." For years past we have noted the life of this disciple. And when we have thought of her consistent walk, her unwavering constancy, her unwearied diligence in good works, and all this under circumstances sometimes adverse, with no slight degree of personal affliction, we have sometimes wondered whether she still abides in so serene assurance by the side of Jesus that temptation's angry might forbears to assail her. Of this, at least, we are assured, that if she is tempted she ever triumphs over the foe.

"In the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me." Such was the confident boast of David, and such is the trust of the Christian who seeks shelter in the near presence of the Almighty. Here is a haven where the storms of adversity cannot afflict, a retreat into whose hiding-places the tempter dare not penetrate. A minister, far advanced in age, was approaching the end of the journey. For many years he had been blind, and deep poverty was his earthly fortune. A brother minister, visiting him, inquired whether under these circumstances Satan did not sometimes tempt him. The old man's face kindled into an expression of fervor, while he earnestly replied: "He knows better than that." The last triumph had already been achieved, and the vanquished foe had ceased to torment him with suggestions of doubt. Blessed faith! Glorious triumph! Trembling age through divine trust becomes victorious over blindness, poverty, feebleness, want of friends, and every other earthly ill, and, resting unmoved in the serene sweetness of perfect assurance, takes hold of the eternal strength. How perfect the realization of the words, "I strive to live so near to my Savior that the tempter has no power over me."

Nearness to Jesus! What a depth of comfort it brings. Not all shall escape the onslaughts of temptation. Jesus himself was not exempt. The apostles were sorely tried. Christians of every age have passed through its fires. But for the faithful and trustful there is a pavilion of unailing protection. "He shall hide thee under his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust." "He will not suffer thy foot to be moved." Trials will come, sometimes with an inexpressible intensity of bitterness. The plowers may make long their furrows upon your back. Affliction may apply with an unsparring hand its rod. The heart may be riven with the keen edge of the sword, and its fountains gush forth with anguish. But in all this the believer may say, "When my heart is overwhelmed lead me to the rock that is higher than I." In the bosom of the Savior is the "calm and sure retreat" which offers security and unutterable consolation. Hither, O hither, let me hasten with swiftest feet, and here, secure from the tempter's pointed shafts, and sheltered from the wiles of the false and designing, let my soul abide evermore.—Sel.

"The nearer the kingdom of heaven appears, the less is the force by which the world draws and holds the believer. Attraction is in proportion to the quantity of the matter and the nearness of the objects; and so the globe itself, with all its wealth of gold, yea, though it were solid gold itself and all to be mine, does not attract me with any force, if I live above it and hard by the throne of God."

THE fairest flower in the garden of creation is a young mind, offering and unfolding itself to the influence of divine wisdom, as the heliotrope turns its sweet blossoms to the sun.

For The PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
THE LIFE OF JESUS.

BY JAMES Y. HECKLER.

FROM THE GERMAN.
The life of Jesus is a light
That went before us: then
Who follows not the same arlight,
Remains ensnared in sin.
The needy soul will suffer loss,
Because it does not bear the cross,
And will not take relief.
The life of Jesus is a vest,
And he who puts it on,
Is of the wrath of God released,
The judgment he will shun,
And come to joy eternally,
Where mortal stripes can never be,
Where there is purest rest.
The life of Jesus, too, is small,
For whom will be meek,
He shall escape the torments all,
If he himself car seek
To sink—and lowliness assume,
The same shall fully overcome,
And shall obtain the crown.
The life of Jesus, too, is poor,
And truly strange on earth
Will be the soul, which will endure,
With pure desire of worth,
To follow only that same light,
Although, reproach he suffers right,
The end will bring the crown.
The life of Jesus overrates
For all the wealth of earth;
And who his life assimilates
May be licted forth,
From every creature free, in strife
Alone, to follow in this life,
Wherein, even Death must yield.
O, Life, 'tis every thing thou art:
Who findeth thee in faith,
Obtains the rest within his heart,
And sorrows have their death.
In thee my purest thoughts employ,
Thou art and giv'st alone the joy
That never has an end.
O, Life, 'tis thee I long to see!
Make known thyself to me.
O, take my self and give me thee!
Burn out right well in me
All selfishness, all nature check,
Lord Jesus show me still thy track,
Thy spirit guides me home.

What a Heaven, earth and hell full of meaning in a single word.
BREAD. The want of it is hell; the supply, salvation; the taste, the hope of glory; its fullness, Heaven.
The whole world is hunger-bitter.
Hell is a penitentiary of starving criminals: a penitentiary without penitence. The Upper Eden is a Garden of lunar-ripening fruit—an Everlasting Breadfeast. To be lost is to be always gnawed with hunger, always parched with burning thirst, without a crumb to stay the corrosion of the one, or a drop to alloy the everlasting blistering of the other. Holiness and sin before death are the germs and foretastes of eternal opposites after death.

Oh, the bitter wail of our famished immortality! How the world raves in the madness of its hunger!
The entire posterity of Adam turned into swine-herds feeding on the dry carobs of transient gratifications!
What a greedy devouring of husks, and what hungry looks for something better! All the unholy ambition, all the money-greed, honor-greed, lust-greed, animosities, envies, jealousies, self-seeking and selfscourging; all the restlessness, emptiness, and neck-break scramble for pleasure of some sort, are so many outbreaks of hunger in our starved, shrivelled, blinded, perverted, sin-blasted, sin-loving humanity. Were a single soul capable of swallowing a world at a meal, three times a day, with all its wealth and glory and honor and pleasure, its hunger would increase rather than diminish. Our immortality is too capacious for such meagre fare. Our hunger is too intense, deep, and vast to be stilled by such paltry morsels as worlds, and by feasts that last only for centuries or millenniums. Deity for the soul's meal, and Eternity for the period of its digestion—this is what our nature demands, and what God in Christ is waiting to give to every hungry soul.

What the Saviour said of water, may be said with equal truth of bread: Whosoever eateth of this bread shall hunger again; but whosoever eateth of the bread that I shall give him shall never hunger.
"I am the Bread of Life." "The Bread of God is He which cometh down from Heaven, and giveth life unto the world." For want of it
"the whole creation groaneth and travailleth in pain," hell is wailing in hopeless despair, and gnashing its teeth on fire and ashes. The world has it, but eats not. The Great Loaf of Eternal Life is under the feet of the ungodly. Hell never had it, and never will. No barley cake from Heaven ever tumbled into the host of damnation. Judges 7: 13. The death of Christ was decisive, and ours is no less so. The Bread of Life was raised in the Third Heavens with the leaven of Everlasting Love, and baked in Gethsemane and Golgotha, and is offered to the famishing in the probation of mortality, and enjoyed to the full in the resurrection state.—

There is a vital principle in all edible bread. A dead loaf is a mass of corruption. "I am the living

Bread: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever." Here is more than being. Man lives before he eats, but is utterly without life in the sense in which it is imparted by eating. Man must be allowed to have some prerogative over a tadpole, and Deity some dignity above an ephemera. This Bread is God, and to eat it is to grow like Him, and this is to live. Sin not only leads to death, but is death. Righteousness not only begets joy but is joy. The very conception of it is bliss, and yet it is an effect. So death is the wages of sin, logically, and yet the instant we infringe we die. God has Eternal Life, though always to be. The devil also lives now, but does not live like God, and consequently has not eternal life even if he lives as long as God.
Had there been no hunger in our nature, God would have sent no bread. Had there been no immortality in our hunger, something less than Immortality would have satisfaced our appetite. This fact is the key to unlock all the Bible says in relation to human destiny. Christ did not come to give us life in the simplest sense. It was on the basis of life wrongly related that He planted the lever of redemption.
He came to give us character, and this character is the very essence of Deity. Without it there is no God; and apart from this conception, eternal life is never mentioned in the holy oracles. To eat this Bread is to eat Life, and this gives a quality and range of being the exact opposite of sin and its issues.

Spiritual Bread is of so rich a quality that a single bite has substance enough to sustain not only forty days and nights, but a lifetime.
The Crumb which God put into the mouth of Adam nourished him nearly a millennium, and fed the race four thousand years. When Christ sat on Jacob's well, weary with His journey, He was so sweetly and amply supplied with Heavenly refreshment, that he felt no need to take dinner of the provisions brought by the Apostles. John 4: 6—8, 31—34. Here is a glorious lesson, but we are slow in learning it. Every kind of life must have its proper nourishment. What belongs to the earth must be nourished by the earth. Man's lower nature is a vitalized lump of clay, and out of the clay he must get his bread. But the life that comes from God must have God for its sustenance. Created mind separated from Mind Un-created, in its character and aims, necessitates everlasting friction and disintegration. The soul can no more live on "the meat that perisheth," than the body can subsist on angels food. "What is born of the flesh is flesh; what is born of the Spirit is spirit." God is as essential to the soul as the earth to the body. A starving man sometimes sees devils and hideous monsters in his ravings, and when food is presented he fancies it is poison, and struggles to get beyond sight of the hateful dish. So "the god of this world hath blinded the eyes," "hardened the heart," and perverted the will "of them that believe not," so that they beg every devil that sin has made for a dry crust to alleviate the gnawing of their souls. Instead of carrying their empty sacks into Egypt, and applying to Joseph for corn, they wander about in Sahara, and will not be preached out, nor whipped out, nor entreated out. Where one discovers that Christ is the Bread of Life, ten thousand abide by the swine-troughs, live and die and live forever in the gnawing, grinding, wasting, agonizing hunger that has the immortality of God, and the character of the devil.

The earth will not yield us our bread without diligent cultivation. The petition, "give us this day our daily bread," means toil. Neither will God nourish our souls without the faithful and constant employment of the means He has instituted. He has His fixed conditions for the bestowment of all His blessings. To depreciate the condition is to miss the blessing. No person ever ate a mouthful of bread without the intervention of immutable law; and no soul ever tasted "the Bread of God" without obedience to the conditions on which the Divine favor rests. God Himself is governed by law, and has not created a lawless atom. Salvation simply means perfect harmony with "the law of the Spirit of Life in Christ Jesus." Rom. 8: 2. "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord." Heb. 12: 14. This is the bread-law of the kingdom of God. "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." John 17: 17. This is the table-rule of Bethel. "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me, and to finish His work." John 4: 34. This makes a plump, ruddy Christian. "Thy will be done in earth as it is done in Heaven." Matth. 6: 10. Here men and angels express an identical want. The angels want bread as well as man, and must get it on the same conditions—obedience to the Divine will. With this corresponds the entire incarnate history of Christ. When He assumed human nature, He said, "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God." Heb. 10: 7. At the dark, solemn terminus He said again, "not as I will, BUT AS THOU WILT." Matth. 26: 39. The whole scheme and execution of redemption in three words—"AS THOU WILT." This is the Bread of Heaven. This is the three-fold strait gate that leadeth unto life. These are the three gates of pearl that open into the "city which hath foundations." These three words hold all the Life and Power and Glory of Father Son, and Holy Ghost. The fulfillment of every promise and the bestowment of every blessing comes through these three words. This is the triple pivot which swings God over to us in all His fullness, and us over to Him in all the beatitudes of redemption. On these three words rests the Throne of God. This is the golden ark of the upper sanctuary which contains all the manna for the world to come. "Bread enough and to spare." If our life is an echo of these three words, our Eternity will be an echo of the life of God.

The Baptist Principle.

BY PROFESSOR WILLIAM C. WILKINSON.

The true organizing principle of Baptist churches may be stated in three words. It is OBEDIENCE TO CHRIST. An essential part of obedience to Christ consists in persuading to obey him. Christ said: "Be baptized." This, therefore, is one of his commandments. To "be baptized" is so far obedience. But Christ said also "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." This is another of his commandments. To "teach" to obey is obedience. Obedience in this full sense—that is, to obey and to teach to obey—is the mission of Baptists.

We insist upon baptism not because it is a rite, but because it is an ordinance. It is not the baptism so much as it is the obedience that concerns us. To have been baptized is comparatively, nothing. Not to "be baptized," but to obey in being baptized is what the Baptist principle requires. The Baptist principle of full obedience to Christ requires this, first, of us ourselves; and then requires us to require it, secondly, of others. The obligation to obey in being baptized ourselves is imperative. But no less imperative is the obligation to obey in teaching others also to obey in being baptized. The duty of teaching obedience is equal, is indeed identical with the duty of obeying. Our principle of obedience to Christ makes us, first, Baptists ourselves; and then immediately sets us to making Baptists of others. If we cease to seek proselytes, it is because we cease to be Baptists. We become propagandists; of Baptist views by one and the same almighty creative act of God. The principle of obedience to Christ makes us, simultaneously and inseparably, both the one and the other.

Baptists, therefore, misunderstand their own position and suffer their position to be misunderstood by others when they consider themselves or suffer themselves to be considered merely or mainly the champions of immersion for baptism. Immersion for baptism Baptists unwaveringly believe in. But immersion for baptism is not the Baptists' reason for existing as a distinct denomination of Christians. It is not for baptism according to a particular definition that they stand, so much as it is for obedience in baptism according to some definition. But it is not for obedience in baptism according to any definition, even according to the true definition, that Baptists stand. What Baptists stand for is obedience to Christ in everything—in baptism, certainly; but in all other points not less. Their organizing principle is the principle of universal obedience. This principle includes baptism; but it does not exhaust itself in baptism. If, just now baptism seems to be disproportionately prominent in Baptist inculcation, it is because of a reason that is destined, as we trust, to be temporary. There is no reason for our being known by the name "Baptists" except that so many Christians still fail of obedience to Christ in baptism. I do not care to say fail of being baptized, or, more exactly, of having been baptized; but fail of obedience in baptism. Our name "Baptists" is a provisional one. We accept it for the time from our brethren. When our brethren accept from us—or better, from our Lord (both theirs and ours)—the principle of obedience to Christ, they and we together may be contented with the simple common name of Christians.

"But how," it may be asked, "does this Baptist principle of obedience to Christ apply to the Baptist practice of restricted communion? There is no commandment (is there?) of Christ that forbids intercommunion on the part of Baptists with Pædo-baptists."

Certainly, I answer, there is no such explicit commandment. This is true, on the one hand; but it is equally true, on the other, that so too there is no commandment that enjoins the intercommunion in question. On both sides alike explicit commandment is wanting. We are left to infer the will of Christ. To infer the will of Christ, I say, for we are not left to consult our own will. The principle of obedience forbids that. Now, what is the obviously-implied will of Christ?

"Repent and be baptized," says Christ. (I make no discrimination in authority between what Christ says with his own mouth and what he says by the mouth of an apostle.) Every one that "repents"—that is, every one that obeys Christ's first commandment; in a single word, every "convert"—is directed next and in immediate sequel to "be baptized." Then follow many other commandments of obligation to be habitually obeyed; among them, or, rather, besides them, one of a ritual nature, to be often (occasionally, perhaps periodically) but not habitually obeyed. This last commandment, being not moral, but ceremonial, in its quality, and of occasional rather than habitual obligation, is, in reason, as in fact, placed subsequent to the command "Repent." This every one admits. But not less, both in fact and in reason, it is also placed subsequent to the command "Be baptized." If repenting must precede communion, being baptized likewise must, as well. The command "Be baptized" precedes the command to commune, as they occur in Scripture, exactly as does the command "Repent." So much for the order of Scripture. As for the order of reason, the rite which symbolizes creation, beginning, birth—namely, the rite of baptism—of course, precedes the rite which symbolizes sustenance continuance, nurture—namely, the rite of the Supper. Plainly, therefore, the implied will of Christ is: First baptism, afterward communion.

Now to the spirit of obedience the clearly implied will of Christ is just as binding as his expressed will is. True, there is no distinct commandment. Be baptized before you commune. But so there is no distinct commandment, Repent before you commune. Christ's will, however, is clear as to both points, and no less clear as to the one point than as to the other. The principle of obedience requires us to act accordingly. But, still further, the principle of obedience requires us to exert our influence to induce others to act accordingly. Now suppose a case. I meet a Christian man that has never obeyed the ordinance "Be baptized." He may have been sprinkled, he may even have been immersed in His infancy; but he has never, in any plain, simple, straightforward sense of the word, obeyed the ordinance "Be baptized"—that is to say, being addressed by Christ in the imperative, "Be baptized," he never once met it with the obedient "I will," but has always replied "I have been." He has, therefore, never obeyed Christ, in particular. I, a Baptist, meet such a man. I say to him: "Come, sit with me at the Lord's table." That is, I invite him to do what I believe to be inconsistent with the will of Christ. How does that "teach" him to fulfill Christ's will? How does that comport with my principle of obedience? But he says to me: "My conscience is satisfied." I am obliged to reply: The command is not "Satisfy your own conscience," but "Be baptized." I shall not interfere with your satisfying your conscience. Indeed, I shall try to enlighten your conscience, that you may have an enlightened conscience to satisfy. But, meantime, surely, I cannot invite you to do what I believe to be inconsistent with Christ's will—that I should not be conscience-clear in doing myself.

On the other hand, the same man invites me to sit with him at the Lord's table. My sitting at the Lord's table on some suitable occasion is an act of obedience, because I am so commanded. My sitting with him, on his invitation, at the Lord's table is not an act of obedience, because I am not so commanded. But if my sitting thus with him should signify approval of his disregard of Christ's will, in not having previously obeyed in being baptized, why I should be guilty of disobedience myself. And if my act of intercommunion with him did not signify approval of his course, what good result of fellowship or of brotherly love, what good result of any sort, would be gained?

The fact is that as Baptists could not conscientiously partake themselves of the communion without previously obeying the command "be baptized," so they cannot, expressly or impliedly, countenance the partaking of the communion by others without the same previous obedience. They cannot invite another to disregard what they believe to be the will of Christ, any more than they can disregard that will themselves. They cannot accept an invitation to join another in an act which, on that other's part, involves disregard of Christ's will, any more than they could by word of mouth approve the disregard involved. The act itself of intercommunion would virtually approve the disregard unless accompanied by an explanation and a protest. The protest and the explanation, if given, would be drowned and lost in the louder eloquence of the approving act. The only consistent thing for Baptists is evidently to abstain from any implication of themselves in an act which involves disregard of Christ's will. The practice of restricted communion is simply such a course of abstinence. Free communion could be significant of nothing but withdrawal of protest and silent approbation. Restricted communion has in it nothing offensive but the disapproval and protest that it contains. We dare not retract this solemn negative act and signal fidelity to our Lord and to our brethren. We are sorry to give offense. We like to be liked. But noblesse oblige; true nobleness compels us; the principle of obedience to Christ makes us as much afraid to countenance disregard of Christ's will on the part of others as to be guilty ourselves of the disregard. We wish to see our brethren obey Christ, precisely as we wish to obey Christ ourselves.

The principle of obedience to Christ is the Baptist principle. That principle is at the bottom both of Baptist baptism and of Baptist restricted communion; and of the one as much as of the other.

Work! Work!

BY J. S. FLORY.

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, wither thou goest." Eccl. 9: 10.

Our text as you will notice is a quotation from the wise preacher, and his words are worthy of our most serious consideration. The leading fact set forth, is the necessity of working while it is day with us. While we have the ability and means at hand, he would have us to know it is the time to lay hold, and that too with an earnest will. Of all things we find to do that of "working out our salvation" stands preeminent. Whatsoever else our hands find to do, this "one thing needful" should by no means be neglected, and the reason why it should not, we will notice after awhile.

We should not only do this important thing, but we should do it with all our might. Do it with a will—with all the power delegated to our head, heart, and hands. Our hands will find the "plough" set in the furrow, and the command of the master is, "work, work," while it is called to-day. We must put our hands to the plough, not in a lazy manner as though we did not care whether we pleased our master or not. But with a zealous grasp we should seize the golden opportunity—throw off every impediment, as the laborer does while enduring the heat of the day—that we can run the race so as to win,—never, no never look back, for if we do, we are not for the Kingdom. It matters not what we are called on to do in the service of our Master we must work with our might. The humblest possible station requires the same "might" as the heart exalted. Think of this, ye nominal professors, who seem to think you have but little or nothing to do, and find fault with others because things do not move on with the speed you would like to see. Whatever you find for your hands to do, "do it with thy might," and it will animate others to work with their might. If you find on a Sabbath morning it is your duty to go to the place of worship "go with thy might"—go as if it was a pleasure to go, even through rain or storm, and pray with thy "might" that others may lay hold with their "might" and the meeting will be a season of divine grace to your own soul as well as to others.

Our text implies we should love the Lord with our whole heart and soul—obey him with an earnest will—work for him, or in his service now, and with our whole might, that we may be saved and made partners of his righteousness here, and of his unbounded glory hereafter.

The reason why we should now, or as soon as our hand findeth something to do, work with our might, is because "there is no work, nor force, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither we go." Ah! yes, we are all tending to the grave, and there is no work to be found there. We cannot work "out our salvation" there for there is no work there, all is silent. Love hath no power there, faith knows no work there, hope is a stranger there. Oh! the solemn fact there can be no work in the grave; all that has been left undone in life will be undone forever! Good resolutions may pave the way to the grave, but if they were not put to practice such resolutions will forever be of no avail, because none can be put to practice there in the silent grave.

No device there. Alas! no. In this world "man has sought out many inventions;" many devices are resorted to to excuse us of the necessity of serving the Lord. Many devices are figured out to ease the guilty soul, but in the grave there is no device of any kind; device is a stranger there, no excuses will be made there. There is no "knowledge" in the grave. In life we may gain knowledge of the world, of science, and of God, may learn to know there is a way of escape—a way from darkness to light, may learn of the glories of salvation and how to gain eternal life. But in the grave there is no such knowledge. When death comes he throws the "key" of knowledge into the gulf of oblivion. No unlocking the precious casket of understanding in the grave. Neither is "wisdom" found there in that silent abode of darkness. Here in life we have wisdom. Oh! how precious the boon. "Wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness and her paths are paths of peace." What innumerable blessings God has vouchsafed to us here in this life of probation. He has "brought life and immortality to light through the gospel," made us recipients of his most gracious love, endowed us with susceptibilities that we may become "wise unto salvation." Oh! what wisdom; but it can't be found in the grave, no! no. Go to the silent abode of the dead—the once wise and reverent heads which now lie there beneath that marble slab, were once our friends and our associates here; ask them whether they know any work there in their silent rest. Echo will answer, "none." Ask the man who followed once in the way of device, whether he finds device there; and were he to answer, it would be "none." Make inquiry by the grave of the man who was learned and wise whether he findeth knowledge or wisdom in that narrow cell; "by no means" must be the answer. Seeing then that none of these are found in the grave to which we are going, oh! let us work now; for now is the day of salvation, now is the accepted time to work with all our "might." We have only a few days to work at best. Oh! then shall we "stand all the day idle?" Come, sinner, while mercy is flowing so freely. Your hands will find much to do, if you will escape the wrath of God. Lay hold with all "thy might."

Tear away from the forged chains of sin, now while such golden opportunities offer, for you are hastening to the grave, and when once there, you can never work more. As death finds you, so the judgment will find you. Ah! yes, you must come forth in that great and notable day of the Lord, but not to work, no, no, there will be no time to work there. But to "knowledge," though it be not found in the grave, it will be found in eternity. Better a thousand times better, it would never come to those who "die in their sins," but when this mortal shall put on immortality, and death no longer can hold power over the body, then, ah! then, you will "remember" how much was left undone in life, how offered mercies were slighted, how much precious time was lost—lost forever. Not having worked while it was day, now the long, long night of despair has set in—the thick gloom of eternal despair shall never, no never lift its shadow! Oh! what misery—what a doom awaiteth him or her that has never done the good work in life. May God in his infinite mercy awaken the unawakened, by the power of his sovereign will, and prompt any living soul to lay hold of eternal life now, while it is called to-day.

Greeley, Colo.

"None to whom we can Pray."

Confucius, the greatest and most subtle intellect China ever produced, once said, "He who offends against heaven has none to whom he can pray." This was the highest conception of the attributes of the Eternal, the Maker, to which the heathen philosopher could attain.

To a thoughtless soul, who is conscious every day that he "offends against heaven," and that "no one liveth and sinneth not," what an infinite sadness and despair are in those words, "None to whom he can pray." No propitiation for sins, no atonement, no salvation, no hereafter, no heaven.

According to the dark creed of Buddhism, that religion of death, the soul which has offended against heaven, when it goes out from this world, passes through various transmigrations, until it vanishes at last in the blackness and darkness of nothingness. It becomes annihilated.

O awful word! Annihilation! To the fearful and shuddering soul of the heathen, as it goes out on its dark flight to annihilation, what a prospect! Even the angels, when fallen forever from heaven, shrunk from the frightful thought of losing their existence.

But Christianity is the religion of life. It bids the sinner live. It teaches that he who offends against heaven has one to whom he can pray, who yearns to be sought in prayer, and who himself intercedes daily and hourly before the throne of the Father in his behalf.

The religion of Christ does not consign the trembling penitent, stricken with the thought that he has offended against heaven, to hopeless, dumb despair. The Savior stands between him and death, and earnestly pleads with him to live. No cold and pitiless philosopher stands at the door of the Christian heaven, and says to the broken-hearted pleader, "There is none to whom you can pray."—American Messenger.

Restitution.

You have defrauded your neighbor. You have done him an injury, not accidentally, but on purpose. You have sought your own profit by inflicting a loss upon him. You have taken what does not belong to you, but to him. You must then proceed to make restitution. Go at once. Go to-day, if you can. State the facts frankly and honestly. Acknowledge your wrong-doing, and repair the harm as fully as you can. It will cost you a struggle to do this. When, however, you have made up your mind to the struggle, you will probably find it easier than you expect. But whatever you do, don't keep this burden upon your conscience. It will stand between you and God. It is an obstacle which you cannot get over. You may forget that it is there; but there it is; and you are on one side, and Almighty God is on the other.—Dean Howson.

Serve God in your youth that you may be happy in old age.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
The Christian Temper.

BY H. P. BRINKWORTH.

Let the same mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus. Phil. 2: 5.

All true Christians are followers of Christ. They must walk even as he walked. They must obey him in all things; and in order to do this the carnal mind must be removed. "Ye must be born again." "The carnal mind is enemy against God;" it can not comply with nor be subject to the laws of Heaven; therefore we can see the propriety, and necessity of a new heart—a heart of flesh, a contrite, meek, and broken spirit, which will produce that holy temper, or, as it is expressed in the above scripture, "the same mind" that our blessed Lord and Savior possessed.

Let us see what the different branches of the Christian temper require of us.

1. Love. Love was the mind of Christ; for "God is love." This is what filled the heart of our blessed Redeemer; caused him to descend to the earth, to suffer, bleed, die, and rise again to procure a free and full salvation to lost and ruined man. The principle part of our holiness consists in being like him, and rendering our lives in conformity to his will by loving our God with all our heart, and our neighbor as ourself.

2. Humility. This grace Christ possessed, and taught to all his followers. It is the root of all other graces. And shall the glorious Savior be humble, and the miserable sinner be proud? How preposterous! Therefore, followers of Christ, be humble.

3. Godliness. It is characteristic of the natural man to be ungodly; there is no fear of God before his eyes. He spurns his divine precepts; casts away his gracious promises; tramples under his feet that blood so freely shed for him; and yet, amazing thought! love beyond degree! the Savior stands waiting, yes, willing to receive you back to him. "Beloved, I stand at the door and knock." Rev. 3: 20.

If we are godly in Christ Jesus, those acts of religion which before appeared hard and burdensome, will become easy. "My yoke is easy and my burden is light."

4. Contentment is another feature of the Christian character. Contentment with godliness is great gain. Let us be as the apostle Paul, content with whatever station in life we may happen to be in; yet going on to perfection. Let us not murmur. God knows us better than we know ourselves. The way to be happy in this world is not to elevate our station to our mind, but to bring down our mind to our station. If the Christian believes that all things work together for good to them that love God, he will await the workings of Providence with a resigned will to the will of his Father and his God. Thy will, not mine be done.

5. Meekness. Oh, for more of that meek and quiet spirit that characterized our Example—our Leader! Has not our Savior pronounced a blessing on his meek and lowly followers? "Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." View our Lord derided, spit upon, buffeted, enduring the contradiction of sinners, submitting to the vilest indignities from his accusers; and yet how meekly he bore all! He who could have summoned a legion of angels and have put to naught his enemies, submits; and, dear friend, 'twas all for you, to procure your free salvation. Have you accepted it? Have you obeyed? or, on the other hand, have you rejected this kind offer, and still stand unpardoned, unsaved? I treat you to accept now; for "Now is the accepted time, and now is the day of salvation." Tomorrow may be too late. Oh! come now; your Savior calls.

6. Mercy. "His mercy endureth forever." "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy," are the words of our Savior in that memorable sermon on the mount; and we see how he humbly complied with that requirement, always ready to do good to all who came in his way, healing the sick, relieving the broken-hearted and the distressed, and bearing the sorrows of the whole world. Well may the Christian follow the bright example set before him by the immaculate Lamb of God. If we have felt the need of mercy, and tasted the sweetness of mercy, we shall find a pleasure in being merciful to our fellow-creatures. We shall be ready to forgive, to pity, to relieve, and to do whatsoever our hand findeth to do.

Lastly, we would claim Sincerity. This the very soul of all religion. Every Christian grace has been more or less counterfeited. Some make a profession of religion on purpose to attain certain ends which they could not otherwise conveniently do. From this deceit may we be delivered, as a Christian people professing godliness. "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Let us all earnestly desire more of the mind that was continually prompting our Redeemer to such acts of benevolence and kindness. Let us pray for the same.

Let us exemplify our profession by the possession of the Christian graces already alluded to; then shall we glorify our Father who is in Heaven, and we shall at last be able to view our Savior as the fairest among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely.

The Value of Time.

Time is a measured portion of duration and eternity is unlimited time. The value of time should always be taken into consideration. One reason time is of such immense value to man is that such a small portion is allotted to him to accomplish so much in his probationary state.

In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth; the times and seasons of their revolutions were then ordained. The natural division and only standard of time is caused by the daily revolution of the earth upon its axis, thereby causing day and night alternately to appear. Hours and minutes are divisions of the day. Each passing minute should be improved, the hours then will take care of themselves.

Year after year passes away, fraught with golden opportunities of doing good, but how often are these precious moments neglected, letting them pass unimproved to our own detriment.

The necessity of valuing time aright is constantly demonstrated by all industrious persons. Those who are too frugal in the use of time, find, probably, when too late, that they have not employed themselves as industriously as they might have done, and do not enjoy the full reward of a well spent life.

Our life is made up of moments, and these moments are quickly passing away for others to follow in quick succession. We are permitted to live through our allotted time on earth, to qualify ourselves for the future where a field of useful activity will open for the admission of our energies in the elysian fields.

The value of the soul, as given by the Savior, is greater than the world; and he knew the worth of souls, as he paid a ransom by giving his life to redeem the soul from sin; and sufficient time is granted to work out our souls, salvation that we may spend an eternity of love and blessedness in the mansions prepared for all who love and serve him aright through life. The soul of man is precious, and time is also very precious, as it depends upon how we spend our time whether the soul comes into possession of the true riches, eternal life at God's right hand, where there are pleasures forevermore.

Following this train of thought, inspires us with the hope of everlasting life when time shall be no more, but one eternal day of bliss shall light the universe.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Botany—No. 7.

BY HOWARD MILLER

There are many reasons why the ideas we get hold of should be correct in the start; for bad views, on any topic, are like bad weeds, which, once started, hold possession. The flowers we cultivate and take so much care of here, all grow wild, and are really weeds in their native homes. In Texas plox grows by the acre, on the broad steppes of Russia, in their season, tulips grow by the acre; and on a hill near where I live, a whole field is one red and pink blotch of wild sweet-williams, and so on, all through our cultivated and prized flowers. They are all weeds some place on the earth.

Now it is time to leave hard names to take care of themselves, for a little, while we learn how to get up a very pretty ornament, which makes a pretty gift for one friend to give another. Nearly all the boys and girls who read our paper are living in the country,—the most do, I believe,—and you have often seen big red apples. Now when the apple is at its full size it begins to turn red. If you will cut out the letters of a name from dark ribbon, or better yet, court plaster, and stick them on the apple before it begins to redden, in the proper order to spell the name right, when the sun colors the apple red, it will leave all that part under your letters white or green; and when it is ripe, you can take it off the tree and steam off the letters, or, may be, wash them off, and there, printed on the apple, is the name of yourself or your friend. Or you can cut the letters out of a piece of cloth and sew it on the apple like a ball cover, when the sun will print the name in red. Apples so treated, bring high prices in the city during the holidays, when the rich are buying their Christmas gifts. After that you ought to be ready to say that the common apple's name is Pyrus Malus, if anybody asks you how it is known in scientific company. The apple, the crab tree, chokeberry and ash all belong together in one botanical place. Stranger groupings than that frequently occur. You have all seen the black, hair-like moss that carriage cushions are stuffed with. Well, that moss and pineapples grow together, botanically; and if you ever pursue the subject, the reason will be plain. This is hardly the place to tell why.

If Spring put forth no blossoms, in Summer there will be no beauty and in Autumn no fruit; so if youth be trifled away without improvement, riper years will be contemptible and old age miserable.

"'Twas the Kind Word You Spoke that Saved me."

"Rosa! look at that horrid, drunken man sitting on the curbstone; do come across the street, for I wouldn't pass him for anything." And Mary ran away as fast as her feet could carry her. Now, Rosa was afraid too, but the song she had been learning that day was still fresh in her memory. "Speak a kind word when you can" she had been singing, and the man before her, with his head bent on his hands, looked so forlorn and wretched, so sadly in need of a kind word that she went a little nearer, and she said timidly: Poor man, I am so sorry for you. Can I do anything to help you?"

He raised his head, looked at her in surprise, and his haggard face and despairing eyes almost made her t-o-ery for pity.

"Little girl, your kind words have helped me already. I never expected to hear any again, for I am without a friend on earth."

"But God will be your friend, if you will ask him," said Rosa, softly, going nearer still, while Mary beekoned anxiously for her to come away. "Did you ever ask him?" continued Rosa.

"No; I have been sinning against him all my life," groaned the man.

"Poor man! Let God be your friend. He can do everything for you. I am your friend, but I can't do anything but speak a kind word."

"Darling little girl, that kind word has saved me. Good by! And he held out his shaking hand. Rosa was not afraid now, and she placed her plump little hand in his, and as he bent down and kissed it, two hot tears fell upon it. Then he went away slowly, and Rosa rejoined her companion.

"Oh, you queer creature! how could you let that awful looking man take hold of your hand? I thought he was going to eat you up when he bent down his head," was Mary's greeting.

"I was afraid at first, Mary, but I am so glad I spoke to him. Only think! he says my kind words have saved him."

"Well, he never would be saved if it depended on my kind words, for I always run away from such folks," replied Mary.

Years after, a stranger, a noble, silver-headed old man, was addressing a Sunday school, and telling the scholars always to be kind to the friendless and distressed ones, especially the drunkard; "for when I was friendless, and sinful, and wretched," said he, "God sent a dear child to speak the kind words that saved me."

When the school closed, a young girl held out her hand to him, and with tears in her eyes, asked: "Sir do you not know me?" He looked at her long and earnestly, and then, taking both hands in his, he said solemnly and slowly, "Yes, dear child, 'twas the kind word you spoke that saved me!" And Rosa wept for gladness.

Dear children, "speak a kind word when you can.—Miss Nellie H. Bradley, in Temperance Banner."

Making the Best of Things.

Fussy people want everything just so, and expect that the sun, moon and stars are going out of their way to oblige them. The first lesson of wisdom is, Accept cheerfully the inevitable.

You can scarcely understand how much sweet and wholesome wisdom lies in simply making the best of things. If we fancy we are going to make circumstances bend to us, we shall be continually running our heads against a stone wall. The wall will never stir out of our way, but we can easily go round it.

We cannot help or hinder that very independent thing, the weather. It will rain or shine, be hot or cold just as it was sent. I have seen foolish people, who made themselves quite miserable about the weather. It was never going to rain again, or it would rain forever! The wind blew too strongly, or else they were suffocating for a breath of air! Their time was filled with complaints of things they could no more alter than they could alter the earth's orbit.

There are others I have known completely conquered by dust, flies, or mosquitoes. Such things are troublesome and annoying, to be sure, but we can avoid them by fretting and fuming? Fly-specks are bad enough, but a fretful disposition is a thousand times worse. Let the flies buzz and the mosquitoes bite, if they must, but try and keep yourself sweet and tranquil.

I remember reading of a philosopher, who was so very poor he had everything stripped away from him but a miserable straw bed and one wretched blanket. The weather became intensely cold, and to prevent freezing to death he wraped himself completely in the blanket, and cut holes for his eyes, nose and mouth. Here, he says, he not only existed, but was very happy. You have heard the story, perhaps, of two little street beggars who, on a bitter cold night, crept under an old door. Instead of lamenting over their misery, one says to the other, "Ah, Pete, what do you s'pose the folks do who hain't got any door?" Such examples of cheerfulness under great evils, should surely help us to meet the little evils of life in the right spirit.—Times of Blessing.

The study of God is far from being a mark of the weak mind, far from being a tangle in whose intricacies we only lose ourselves at the cost of pain and sorrow. On the contrary, the great mind is impelled to seek after God, and brings back into itself the wealth of life.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Preach the Word.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Brother David Smith, of the Big Swatara church, Pa.

That is what you always try to do. That is what all preachers claim for themselves. But there must be a screw loose somewhere, or a good many of them, or there would not be such a racket and clatter and jarring in the ministerial machinery. Some cry Paul, some Cephas, some Apollos, some Luther, some Calvin, some Menno Simmonds, some Herr, some Brinsler; while a few have learned the shibboleth of Heaven, and "name the Name of Christ." Judges 12: 6. 2 Tim. 2: 19. If all who offer their services as the ambassadors of God, will "determine to know nothing but Christ Jesus and Him crucified," all man-made gospels and human appellations will be in the lurch.

Christ's catechism is sufficient. We need no sectarian clipping and scissoring to recast and amend the word of life. We need no patert. gosseller to bake the Bread of Heaven over again, puffed up with the leaven of some creed-monger who fancies he can make a sweeter loaf than Christ. "Great swelling words"—of which the world is full—are like bubbles on the stream, they burst into nothing; and yet, alas, they burst into "everlasting shame and contempt," a miserable, God-emptied, hell-filled, immortal nonentity. Those brethren who preach nothing but the naked word, are the most efficient. The correlation of "the truth as it is in Jesus," makes a mighty sermon. Those who speculate and philosophize and stretch and pinch to make a point, are sure to be hobbled. Christ makes His own points, and has His own philosophy—the one very nice and exact, and the other very grand and immutable. A Heaven-appointed minister is talking philosophy all the time, and yet may never use the word philosophy, nor know what it means. "Never man spake like This Man," and yet viewed superficially, it looks like a medley of disconnected axioms. But the truth is a unit. Christ is the Alpha and Omega; and between these two there is the strictest possible logical connection. Repentance, Faith, Baptism, Remission of sins, are dependent for the order of their occurrence on the most rigid philosophy. Faith in the sense of credence, is absolutely essential before repentance. Faith before penitence in the sense of personal commitment, is impossible. Faith in the latter sense is emphatically the faith of Christ, or the faith of the Gospel. This faith no one can have without such repentance as nails all sin to the cross, and leaves it there to expire. The human mind cannot believe so long as the will and conscience do not give a radical testimony against sin. No barometer was ever so fine as the sense of right and wrong. Faith is possible only after a total revulsion of life, which brings the consciousness wholly on the side of holiness. It is as impossible to believe so long as the decision against sin is not complete, as to believe in the continuance of life in perpetual abstinence, or in the harmony of spheres without the law of gravitation.

The same law holds in relation to Baptism and remission of sins. This order can no more be reversed than that of repentance and faith. No amount of happy experience before baptism can settle this point. The relation of repentance and faith is a matter of consciousness, both being subjective apart from their expression; but in baptism and remission there is no subjectivity so far as we are concerned. One is done by us, and the other by God. And what transpired objectively* to us can produce no sort of objective state in us save by faith. So that there is no ground whatever for the oft-made assertion, "I feel that my sins are forgiven." We cannot feel what takes place in the mind of God, but we can believe it, and in so doing we have all the joy the case admits and the Gospel warrants. When any one says, "I know that my sins are forgiven, because I feel it," he says what he knows nothing about. We may know that we are forgiven, and must know, because God has promised it, and we believe it. If this promise is dependent on conditions, and we believe in neglect of them, and claim remission as the point of such faith, we are guilty of a very grave and foolish error. Every whit as much so as if we insisted that we believe in Christ while we continue impenitent. God is a King as well as a Father, and however perfect His forgiveness may be in His Fatherly feeling prior to baptism, the remission He grants is judicial, and dependent on process of law. Christ had to satisfy law by death, burial, and resurrection; and without these there had been no ground of remission. And it is by death to sin, burial in baptism, and resurrection to newness of life, that we realize the benefits of these great Messianic facts. Any intelligent lawyer the world over will tell us that it is inconsistent with the essential idea of law to pardon an offence against the government as a private or personal affair. A father may forgive his child without conditions which have express reference to law; but a king deals with his subjects solely through law, and cannot pardon a criminal without reference to the penalty which law imposes. What penalty has the Divine Government annexed to sin? "Thou shalt surely die." Has this penalty been met? "Christ died for our sins, was buried and rose again." 1 Cor. 15: 3, 4. Here is full satisfaction to the Divine Government; but in order to make it a real salvation it must become personal. We must comply with the counterparts of these three steps in the work of Christ;—We must die, be buried, and rise again. Or, in other words, we must "repent and be baptized for the remission of sins."

"I have not written unto you because you know not the truth, but because you know it, and that no lie is of the truth." 1 John 1: 21. "I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience; and the last to be more than the first." "I know that thou canst not bear them that are evil; and hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars." Rev. 1: 2—19. I write not to reprove, nor yet to instruct, but to encourage, and stand under your arms, and to strengthen you in the prime condition of a successful ministry—PREACH THE WORD. Lift the lid from the Ark of the Covenant, and let the tables of stone speak out the thunders of the Divine curse. Put on the lid, and let it proclaim that so may sin be covered and transgression be forgiven." Ps. 32: 1. Whenever there is forgiveness there must be a covering; first of Christ in the grave, and secondly, of the penitent in the water. How much is it necessary to experience before baptism? Exactly as much as is necessary for the remission of sin. Baptism is a condition of law and not a moral qualification for remission. Whoever is not fit for remission is not fit for baptism. The same character that makes baptism valid, also insures remission through baptism.

Gems of Thought.

Beware of shutting yourselves up within a certain narrow pale of sympathy, and fostering unreasonable hatreds and prejudices against others.

Self-respect is the noblest garment with which a man can clothe himself,—the most elevating feeling with which the mind can be inspired.

Have the courage to show your respect for honesty, in whatever guise it appears, and your contempt for dishonesty and duplicity, by whomsoever exhibited.

One man's estimate of another is not worth much if he cannot ask himself the question: What standard do I measure him by—what he is or merely what I think him to be."

God makes the metals for man, but never makes an engine for a watch. He seems to step back at that point where the will and energy of man can begin.—Prof. Swing.

The best perfection of a religious man is to do common things in a perfect manner. A constant fidelity in small things is a great and heroic virtue.—St. Bonaventura.

Truth itself, though couched in the homeliest speech, is ever majestic and imposing. It will stir and sway the mind by the sole might of its inherent grandeur.

A Letter from Denmark.

Assens, Den., May 8th, 1876.

Beloved Brethren: Grace to you who love the Lord Jesus. Amen.

On the fourth of May our dear Hansen came to us at this place. And how did he come in appearance? He appeared like a new man,—a perfectly conformed brother. On the 6th we went together after due consideration and prayer to a large, beautiful river, and there he was buried in the deep water according to the command of Jesus. Indeed it was a blessed place; and we felt in our prayers that the Lord and the heavenly host were present to witness the holy act, and see for the first time, perhaps, a poor sinner buried in this country according to the great commission of our Redeemer. Tears of joy flowed from the eyes, and we know there was joy in heaven too. Brother Hansen is now on his heavenly road rejoicing; and he is very zealous for the commands and cause of the Lord.

A sister desired to come to this place with brother Hansen to be baptized also, but her parents would not consent to let her come. On my way to Norway I shall stop there and do as the case demands. She desires, not only to see us and be baptized, but to be instructed in the holy faith. Perhaps we can get a place for her here in our neighborhood.

The tracts are now all ready for printing, and most of Trine Immersion is printed. We have much hard work with it as the grammar of the Danish Language has been much changed lately. I am getting out 1000 copies of each kind, as we shall need them all. They cost us 34 kroner each per 1000 copies of 16 pages each, or $10.75. Forty pages of Trine Immersion will cost about $27 per 1000 copies. We shall do the binding ourselves, thus saving some on the cost.

We have procured seats and intend to hold meeting regularly in our own house. We wish to go to Norway as soon as we can get some tracts ready.

There are no doubts as to the success of the mission if the proper measures are taken. It will be impossible for me to work to support my family, and attend to the mission for the simple reasons that in this country all hands are hired by the year or half year; and there is too much work in the ministry to attend to anything else. If we hire for a year or half year we must work every hour of the day or be dismissed; for if we lose a single hour the employer would soon get one who would please him. There is no work to be had by the day.

The only way to make the mission successful is to enable us to work for souls every day. Enable us to distribute tracts, preach on every opportunity and go from house to house until the Lord shall add stone to stone to his building here, and all are satisfied. We cannot, like in America, attend missionary work and other work too. Nor should the church put many persons in the field with the hope of scantily supplying them for the work. It is far better to have a few and equip them well, so that they can work diligently, than to have many who are able to do only a little. If we had a farm so that we could work it in the summer and preach during the summer, the case would be different: then we would be free to go and come when we please. But we have none; nor do we desire any, for there is too much work in the Master's vineyard here for us to spend our time in making money. It would be wise for the church to enable us to throw our whole time in the work of teaching the meek and effectual doctrine of Jesus; for then there might shortly be a sufficient number gathered in to organize a church, then the mission would be self-supporting.

We hope, by the help of the Lord, to do much in this harvest. How we would like our brethren to be here to see and learn the state of things, that you all might, through them, be assured of the facts. We are afraid of every penny we give out, for everything is high since the late war. This added to our other cares makes it sometimes unpleasant. And then we are reminded that so many precious souls are here to be taught, and that cheers us a little. I never did, nor do I yet, desire this responsible work; but having been put here by your desire, I trust I may look to you for sympathy, and state facts, leaving all to you to act as you think best. If the church in America is afraid to trust us in this good work, we pray you to find some in whom you have great confidence and send them here, and we will gladly give for the support of such, one tenth of all we can earn as long as we live. But if you expect us to work we must then eat. If much work is expected of us, and we are expected not to eat, it goes a little hard; but if it must be so, we will submit, and cast all our care on the Lord.

The church has gained in Bro. Hansen a good man, with rich experience, and well acquainted in this country, and may be made very useful in the cause. We may soon gain more such who are far better qualified to do this work than the poor one you sent. Let me then remind you all for the last time that we are here by your command, and expect to be used up in our Savior's cause without reward or honor in this life. We have thought it good to lay all the facts before you, and leave you to judge and act as may seem best. Let our dear brethren come and see if we state the truth. Let them judge in the matter, and appoint men here to do active work, then sustain them and the good results will soon be manifest.

Now we send you all our love, asking your fervent prayers in our behalf, and thanking you for favors bestowed. May our heavenly Father bless you all. Amen.

CHRISTIAN HOPE.

Dear Brethren:

I submit the foregoing synopsis of Bro. Hope's letter, and trust that we may all wisely consider the same. Oh, that we may use the wisdom from above, that success may attend the work. God forbid that any of our selfish ideas should hinder the good work begun; but that we, as the children of God, desiring the salvation of others with ourselves, may strive together to make the cause of Christ successful in Europe as well as in every other place. True, we can do nothing ourselves, for God must bless or all else will fail; but certainly we can only know by trying whether the Lord desires the people of the East to once more become the professors of the truth of Jesus. If the Lord wants the people to remain ignorant, he will withhold his blessings. This I cannot believe he desires, for in every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted by him. Not only those of the American nation, but those also of "every nation."

Can we, after learning that no one can get employment in that country unless he hires by the year or half year, any longer expect our dear brother to use his own hands to minister unto his and his family's necessities, and that, too, when his field of labor is so vast, and thousands of us are blessed with abundance? No, I do not believe that any brother or sister could for a moment feel to withhold their sympathy and support from our loved ones in a straggled land.

Let us, then, dear brethren, earnestly pray for those of "like precious faith" in Denmark, and whatever may be needed for their comfort let us be swift to supply. We know that our dear brother will live as sparingly as is within his power to do. In fact if he had the one thousandth part of the luxuries or unnecessary things that adorn our tables, he could plant a tree in every village in Scandinavia.

Let all those whose bowels of compassion are open for the loved ones in Europe, and who desire to have the gospel of our blessed Redeemer spread abroad among other nations as well as our own, send their contributions to Brother Collin P. Rowland, Lanark, Carroll Co., Ill.

Let us not get down on our knees and pray that the poor in spirit all over the world may be fed with the truth; that sinners among all nations may be converted to God, and then get up and oppose the sending of the gospel to "all nations." No, let us not be so unwise as to pray for a thing, and the next moment begin to oppose it. Surely God will severely chastise us for such a course. May God add his blessings, and cause us to look far beyond self, and then will his name be glorified and his children saved.

In tears, your weak brother,

M. M. ESHELMAN.

Correspondence.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood.

From Bro. F. P. Lehr.

Though I am like a captive whose liberty is circumscribed by the narrow limits of a cell, my faculties comparing with the lifeless forms of a wintry season, yet when the rays of the beautiful king of day are turned out from behind the clouds, a thrill of life pervades the whole system and a sigh of longing for activity escapes the heart, and makes it beat high and fast. Though the wintry season of inactivity befalls the child of God, he is nevertheless mysteriously, secretly growing in grace and in the knowledge of God, in patient endurance and firm trust in the divine leadings of the good Spirit; therefore, "let patience have her perfect work," O my dear afflicted brother or sister!

When I read to day the heaven-inspired and soul-reviving epistle—"Be Zealous"—flowing forth from the vessel which the great Potter is forming through sufferings inexpressible, to his own glory, and the joy, comfort, and molding of other vessels so that they may not only be of a firm and durable consistency but also at the same time shine forth like the face of Moses; not to frighten away the beholders, but to draw them nigh to the great Architect to be also moulded into vessels of honor to serve in the great house. In reading the 3rd paragraph, page 164, commencing at, "What moral fists were doubled, etc., my mind became young and the history of the church (in America) passed before me at a glance. What a change! Fear and dread filled the soul of many a zealous, sincere and upright brother; yea, even a zeal like that of Saul of Tarsus was thrown before the eyes of that patient brother, Henry Kurtz, yet in meekness he bore it all and went on steadily and surely, like Faust and Guttenberg, the inventors of printing; and what is the result? Why that little cloud that was at first not bigger than a man's hand hath now spread from shore to shore, and is dropping down the heavenly blessings upon thousands and tens of thousands, moistening and fertilizing the shriveled hearts of all that do not wilfully close their eyes and harden their hearts. Permit me, O ye young laborers, to call your attention to the fact that so many thousands of our fraternity still tenaciously keep the veil of Moses before their eyes that they cannot see the beauty of the labor of those who "were with Christ" and have learned of him.—They readily fall in with every invention that is of profit in temporal matters, but cannot spare a dime or the price for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, though they may have city and county papers to keep themselves posted in the things of the world. "O consistency, thou art a jewel!"

I entreat you, young and old co-laborers, to speak orally to those who do not read, that the devil, our adversary, took hold of the press, when he could not prevent the invention, and now scatters millions upon millions of books and tracts broadcast to pervert the hearts and minds of the children of men. Doth not the husbandman use every means and make every effort to subdue poisonous and obnoxious weeds, in order that he may be able to reap an abundant harvest for use? Is not the church a royal priesthood? If so, is the clerestory lights, the conscientiousness she not bound to bring offerings and sacrifices to purify and cleanse the people? Is not the Lord her portion?—Why, then, heap up treasures on earth, while there are so many starving for the bread of life?

I said above the history of the church passed before me at a glance. Nearly fifty years ago I left Northampton county, Pa., in search of a people that would live up closer to gospel doctrine. I can realize yet the impression the sight of the first meeting, and the manner of preaching made upon my heart. Truly this looks and sounds apostolic! Who may forbid that I may be baptized? That faithful veteran of the cross, George Hoke, performed the work, and oh, the joy and peace of soul! But for many years it was thought inexpedient to preach where there were no Brethren, and in fact they they were so so little known, and what little was known from Buck's Dictionary of Dunkards was not very enticing. But another era is approaching; the Gospel Visitor appears; a glimmer of light is set up to view. The light shines brighter and brighter until it can no longer be kept under the bushel; out it must come, and if even the ministers of that light have to appear before magistrates and governors, to avow openly and publicly that the principles of that light is non-resistant, full of love, peace, and good-will to all mankind, even to our enemies. Now is the measure of prophecy of 1260 days fulfilled, that the church had to be in the wilderness, from the time the beast began to reign, which was about the year 600. Hence the innumerable calls, "Come over to Macedonia and help us." And hence instruments are fitted out throughout the brotherhood that can grapple with the foe, that need not be afraid even at Athens to preach Christ and him crucified. Hence, also the printing press is dug out, which has laid buried with that simple-hearted brother, Sauer. Who is there in all the host of Israel that will fight against God? Nay, verily, my brethren. The time of ignorance God hath winked at, and now bids every one to arouse from sleep and work while it is called to-day.

Various propositions and plans have been offered by the pens of those of our brethren who feel the importance and responsibility of the work. These plans are almost all practicable, and if energetically carried out would produce the happiest results. But unity of action is wanting, and this cannot be fully established until we are brought to see our individual duty to impart the blessings of the gospel, as suggested in our periodicals from time to time.

In my humble opinion an editorial in No. 12 of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN headed "The Gospel and the Law—a Contrast," would bear reading and rereading again and again, followed with a self-examination in relation to the benefits we have received from our knowledge of the gospel, and the benefits which that knowledge has enabled us to impart to others. When, where, and how many times, have we experienced that "it is more blessed to give than to receive"?

Another question, and I will close for the present—Why are so many of God's faithful ministers so poorly provided for in this world, while so many others are rich? Echo—why!

Our Centennial World's Fair.

[As we are entirely out of church correspondence, we hope our readers will accept of the following view of "Our Centennial World's Fair," written by T. A. T. Hanna, and published in the Examiner and Chronicle (New York). We are not warriors, yet we read the history of wars; and while it is true that we "are not of this world," it is equally true that it is our privilege and duty to pass the time of our sojourn here with our eyes open. If brethren do not attend the Exposition, it is certainly right that they should have some knowledge of it, such as they can gain by reading and conversation. We regard the following, comparatively speaking, as containing multum in parvo.—B.]

I. THE MAIN BUILDING.

The first glimpse that we had of the enormous buildings was from the middle of the bridge over the Schuylkill river.—The railway from New York crosses that river in the very heart of Fairmount Park; and as the train moved over, we could see looking off to the right, up above the green, wooded banks of the river, the light-brown towers and pinnacles of the Main Building. Its outline stretched away, and was lost in distance—

"Towers and battlements he sees, Bosomed high in tufted trees."

Already, then, we had gained that impression of immense size, which is, perhaps, the most impressive feature of the Exhibition. And when we came to stand in the plaza between the Main Building and Machinery Hall, and to look along the line of the former, as it decreased in perspective toward the horizon, I was reminded of Wordsworth's cloud-city:

"The appearance intangibly disclosed

Was of a mighty city—boldly say

A wilderness of buildings, sinking far

And self-withdrawn into a wondrous depth."

A liberal privilege of quoting poetry must be allowed on such an occasion as this.—Besides, at the next Centennial, people may not be conscious of Wordsworth.

SIZE OF THE MAIN BUILDING.

All the readers of the Examiner and Chronicle have read that the length of it is correspondent with the years of the Christian era—1876 feet. But they have not all tried to actualize that dimension. If the building were built across the Central Park, it would cover nearly the whole breadth of the Park, from Fifth Avenue to Eight Avenue. Or, if it were built along the line of Broadway, it would stretch from Wall street to the Examiner office in Park Row. Or, if it were put athwart the East River, on the alignment of the Brooklyn Bridge, it would span the stream, and have a grip of a hundred feet or so on either side.

THE VIEW DOWN THE NAVE.

In looking down the broad middle aisle of the Fair, one is almost reminded of some old English cathedral vista. At least, he would be, if there were not such a flood of honest, common daylight poured over everything. But the high arches, that there is a transept somewhere down that space, the tone of the large organ heard far off, its notes struggling with varying success against the sound made by the trampling of ten thousand feet, and high overhead the flags and banners of many nations swaying in the currents of air, like the armorial hangings of Westminster Abbey, these things tempted me to shut my eyes and let imagination play, as if it were some minister of old. That, however, will not do at all. It is of high necessity here that one have his eyes open, and he will almost wish that for the time he had an extra pair of eyes, so many are the things that take the vision, to the right and left. The crowd of people is not yet large enough to be at all inconvenient. As you look down the nave, you see them numerous enough to enliven the scene, and there is a hum of many voices. But, indeed, ten thousand people might be scattered here and there under this vast pavilion, and they would no more produce a sensation of fullness than what an Irishman describes as a "haporth of tobacco in a sack."

WHAT WE SEE.

When we cease to think of the house and the people, and try to take a general view of the objects on exhibition, the main impression, of course, is one of "glittering generalities." The gleaming of gold and silver; the flashing of glass and crystal; the dark splendor of polished woods; the added light from large mirrors; the dull-red or yellow figures of terra-cotta; the shining shafts of polished granite and marble monuments; the bright, brazen glitter of musical instruments and "instruments of precision," as the French call philosophical apparatus; the many-tinted decorations of costly china; the elaborate raised ornaments of green and blue majolica; the dim lustre of antique and modern bronzes; the gay paint of iron railings; the dark, rich hangings of upholsterers' rooms, within which are displayed, or rather half hidden, the sombre, dull-flashing beauty of costly furniture; the elaborate work of the wood carver, as seen in lofty pulpit or broad side-board; the gorgeous pavilions of the jewellers, adorned with fresco, and gold, and glass, and brocade, and velvet; the white, pure laces that hang in a profusion most generous; the soft, luxurious hanging carpets, of Persian, Indian, Dutch, and English make, showing all that wonderful mingling of colors which we think of in connection with the phrase "Persian patterns; folds upon folds of dark broad-cloths; show-cases as large as a country school-house, almost, and filled with silks, rainbow bright in their many lines; massy columns of iron and steel, black or bright or gray, twisted, rolled, hammered, cast and wrought; enormous vials of oil, ranged like organ pipes, with a light like that of jewels shining through them; piles of chemicals, including the golden glow from enormous crystals of Prussiate of potash, the intense dark blue of ultra-marine, the icy white of alum; the wonderfully lustrous Behemian glass, shining with "purest ray serene;" snow-white textiles from the bleacheries of Belfast or the cotton-mills of Rhode Island; pyramids of gold from Australian lands; maps of many nations; whole libraries of books; what Solomon got for himself we have here—"musical instruments and that of all sorts"—the piano jostles the reed-organ, and the man who now sits down at the

"Decker" instrument cannot wait till the "Chickering" man is through with his piece; fire-proof and burglar-proof safes unfold their massy valves, and display their bolts of steel.

THE FIVE GATES OF MANSOUL.

Here is truly an organized attack upon all the five avenues of the human intellect. What Bunyan described as the five gates of Man-oul are all beset at once.—Some of the things that crowd upon the "eye gate" I have just recounted. "Eargate" may be besieged, for several hours of the day, by the music of a skillful brass band, at the centre of the building; from other parts of the expanse the sound

"Of instruments that made melodious chime Is heard, of harp and organ";—

in one place a gamut is cunningly composed of lumps of iron suspended, which, when struck, give forth very good music all sounds; bells, too, can be heard, and one of those musical "omnibus" instruments, which plays half a dozen instruments at once, like a "happy family" of sounds all shut up in one cage; musical boxes tinkle here and there; the water of rising and falling fountains, too, can be heard; and everywhere the rumble of the confused shuffling of feet, and higher the hum of voices, pierced continually by the "staccato" notes of happy children. We must interpolate, however, that the proportion of children in attendance is noticeably small; perhaps somewhat owing to the unvarying price of admission. As to the "nose gate," it is not of course so often excited as the two preceding; but perfumed business cards bear your acceptance; the "original" (or, is it not the original) Farina, from opposite the Cathedral of Cologne; has an abundant display of fragrant waters; the "Cashmere Bouquet" soaps are shielded behind their show-case, but they rouse your nostrils into imaginative exercise; in the Egyptian room a heavy odor of perfume exhales from some of the Arab wares. As for the "mouth-gate," it is assailed by restaurants whose sides will soon be "larded with the steam of thirty thousand dinners;" and at all times, soda-water fountains of enormous height roll down their cooling streams; the hungry heart may be aggravated by all imaginable forms and kinds of crackers, from the "Albert biscuit" to the "ginger snap"—these, however, with the delicate sauces and bottled viands, are but a Barucide feast. As for the "feel-gate," in spite of the prohibition, "Hands off," as the American gives it; "Please do not touch," as the English more gently put it; and "The visitors are requested not to touch the articles," as the polite Continental nations say—in spite of these many forbiddings, there is a temptation to pass one's hand over the polished section of some semi-trifold tree, or bury the fingers in the deep folds of tufted carpets, or to try if the granite slabs are "finished to the nail."

A SURVEY OF THE NATIONS.

Of course our own nation has the largest space and the greatest variety. Articles of cotton, wool, silk, linen, hemp and cocoa; of iron, steel, brass, tin, copper, nickel, bronze, gold, silver; of marble, granite, slate, clay, coal; of wood, hard and soft, in timber, in lumber, in shavings; apparatus for lighting up, from the farmer's lantern to the palatial gas-fixtures; soap, from a bit of toilet article to the lump of twelve hundred pounds; oil, from that which is gross as lard to that which sparkles like wine; monuments of yeast—enough, one might say, if it were all buried in earth, to puff this solid globe to the size of Jupiter; articles of apparel, from the shining hat to the shining boot; powder weapons, from the vest-pocket pistol to the Rodman fifty-ton gun outdoors; musical instruments, from a whistle to a piano or pipe-organ; a remarkable show of chemicals from Boston and Philadelphia; "magnificent household furniture," as the auctioneers advertise their stock.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Our ancestral lands have certainly done us great honor by the abundance, the variety, the skill and the richness of their contributions to our World's Fair. The Elkingtons, famous English silversmiths, have a copy of the shield, in repoussé work, which they sold to the South Kensington Museum for $15,000. The Staffordshire potteries are well set out, and the famous fileries of Minton, of Marr, and others, have great variety of tiles and some beautiful glazed patterns. The porcelain makers are on hand with delicate work; and the earthenware includes one jar large enough to hold a committee of the forty thieves. Gun-makers are fully represented, including the famous rifles of Henry, with one of which the Prince of Wales killed six tigers. The Royal School of Art Needlework has a canopy which is admired by all, and hung with draperies fit for kings. Umbrellas headed with gold and gems would not do to lend.

BRITISH COLONIES.

Canada is in the field with a great educational display of maps, books, and apparatus. I took interest, too, in looking at a list of lumberer's tools. To be a lumberman in the common idea, is to take an ax and start for the woods. It seems, however, that an Ottawa lumberman needs: Cant-dogs, jam dogs, timber-dogs, swamp-dogs, and even other species of canines made of iron; besides Rossing knives, pickeroons, Crotch chains, rivit links, saw-swages, and many other implements. The Australasian colonies, show three strange gilded piles; these represent the masses of gold sent out from those lands. Queensland's export was 65 1/2 tons, valued at $35,000,000. New Zealand exported 246 tons, or more than $151,000,000. The exported gold of New South Wales, $168,000,000.

GERMANY AND AUSTRIA.

Most striking in the German display is not the Hamburg tower of carved ivory work, nor the chemicals, nor the bronzes, but the display of books and maps from Leipzig. To show how abundant are "monographs" in German, I might mention an atlas of Mt. Aëna, an amazing piece of work, in great folio. Baedeker displayed his guide books, including his newest, that on Palestine, a beautiful thing. Austria has much variety, but is most splendid in Bohemian glass, before alluded to. Her meerschaum pipes are enough to make a smoker's mouth water, I should suppose. Large plans of the works of Trieste harbor are interesting to a student of cities.

FRANCE AND SWITZERLAND.

France, as might be expected, appears with her elegant dark show-cases stocked with furs, flowers, feathers, fans, laces, silks and velvets. Some of the last, from Lyons, are rich looking as ebony.—A group of moulded and painted figures, life size, meant for a Roman Catholic altar, is the "Adoration of the Wise Men." Two panes of glass, about ten feet wide by twenty five feet high, are probably the largest ever seen on this continent.—Switzerland had, besides the wood carving and watches, a set of maps of the Alps that make our best maps of America look like botch-work by comparison.

SPAIN AND ITALY.

Spain has not yet put her house in order. Perhaps the finest of her work is in the Toledo swords and daggers. Her colonies show fancy woods and fibers.—Italy has fallen rather below expectation. Her bronzes are only such copies of antiques as are well remembered by anybody from Rome or Florence. They cannot compare for finish with the French bronzes. But the glass work from Venice, the flagee silver from Genoa, and the mosaic jewelry from Rome, are notable and beautiful.

HOLLAND AND BELGIUM.

The Low Countries do remarkably well. The dykes of Holland are explained by a series of very large maps, plans, paintings and models. The Dutch East Indies, too, are not forgotten. The impression one gets of the long, gigantic, and victorious conflict which the Hollanders have waged with the sea, is thrilling.—The wide industry of Belgium is seen in her iron and lace products. She shows also a model schoolhouse, with gymnasium.

SCANDINAVIA.

Denmark is mindful of the great Thor-walson, and the Etruscan vases and medallions repeat his famous figures. Norway and Sweden have heavy furs, and great iron-work. The most popular things in the whole Exhibition are some groups of wax work in the their department. "The reindeer shot" and "The dead babe" are constantly surrounded by sympathetic admirers.

AFRICA.

Egypt has gorgeous horse-trappings of velvet and gold. Plaster casts of the old Pharaohs and of their temples are seen. An exact model of the Great Pyramid reminds us of our toilsome climbing.—Photographs of Cairee life and architecture help us to realize those scenes. The Orange Free State, at the other end of Africa, is a land

"Where strange, bright birds on their starry wings

Bear the rich hues of all glorious things," and has a pretty display of birds; diamonds, too, and various products of the soil.

SOUTH AMERICA.

Brazil has the most striking pavilion, as to its decoration, in the Exhibition.—The style is Moorish, and the painting very bright. The most notable articles here are the manifold kinds of woods.—Nearly all of these are polished, and some of them are very rich. Their prevailing tint is that of mahogany. Chili is strong in metallic ores.

CHINA AND JAPAN.

China has china and silks; but her department is unready. Japan has astonished every one by the display of fancy bronze vases. Some of these are gigantic in proportions, and many of them are wonderfully elaborate in design and finish.

COSTUMES, LANGUAGES, ETC.

Those who come expecting a many-colored array of foreign costumes will be disappointed. The Turkish fez, the Chinese habit, Spanish soldier's uniform, these can be seen. But the whole world is fast adopting the European dress. The Japanese at the Exhibition wear it as if it were native to them. But the many languages can be heard. Not many mottoes are shown. Egypt has this: "The oldest nation in the world sends its morning greeting to the youngest." A German bookstore says: "Criticism is an easy thing, but Art is hard." Spain has one on Columbus. An English publisher quotes Shakspeare.

A REFLECTION.

We have seen, then, the glory of ancient Tyre reproduced. No better summary of a World's Fair, than that inspired one in the 27th of Ezekiel: "With silver, iron, tin, and lead, they traded in thy fairs—vessels of brass in thy market—horns of ivory and ebony—emeralds, purple and brodered work, and fine linen, and coral, and agate—wheat of Minnith, and honey, and oil, and balm—wine of Helbon, and white wool—bright iron, cassia, and calamus, were in the market—precious cloths for chariots—chief of all spices, and of all precious stones and gold—blue cloths—chests of rich apparel, bound with cords, and made of cedar—thou wast replenished, and made very glorious."

GREELEY, Colo., May 29, 1876.

Editor Primitive Christian:

From present indications the Indians on the frontier are going to be troublesome during the present season. The Black Hills region of country is in the bounds of the Indian reservation. After the failure of the Government to negotiate for the Black Hills country it seems there were no attempts on the part of the General Government to keep the whites from going in and trespassing on Indian territory. The result is the Indians have commenced a general warfare.—The Black Hills excitement has caused hundreds and thousands of gold seekers to rush into this Indian country, and the result is, the Indians are murdering numbers of them. It is about two hundred miles from here to the Black Hills, but within half that distance the hostile Indians are massacring the whites who are aiming to pass in and out. Quite recently a whole family from Pennsylvania, by the name of Metz, with several others in the party, were all killed and scalped.—Another party of over thirty, including four women were killed, and almost daily we can hear of persons being killed by the Indians. It is singular that persons will for the sake of gold risk their lives. Both old and young thus rush into danger. A few days ago an old man about seventy years of age was brought to Cheyenne, about 50 miles north of here, for burial, whose entire scalp had been taken off.—The Government is enlisting men and horses for an active campaign against the Indians. As to the Black Hills excitement, there are still a great many going there, and quite a number are coming back disgusted, and say it is all a humbug about the richness of the mines, &c.

So far the farmers with few exceptions have resisted the threatened danger from the grasshoppers, and the prospects are good for a large crop this season. As soon as the grasshoppers can fly it is expected they will all leave here, as that is their custom. All nature has put on the verdant garb of spring, and spring birds are happy and free, judging from their gushing songs of melody. Oh, may we all feel the influencing power of God's love in our hearts that we might continually praise his holy name.

A week ago we had the heaviest rain known here for twelve years. 6 3/4 inches of rain fell in 24 hours' time. The rivers got very high in many places, overflowing their banks and adjacent bottoms. Considerable damage was done to bridges, railroads, &c. While it rained here it snowed in the mountains, and the last few days being very warm, the melting snow has put the waters up higher than they were a week ago. Crops are promising. J. S. FLORY.

Announcements.

We, the brethren of the Berlin congregation, intend to hold a communion meeting on the 2nd of July, commencing at 9 o'clock. A general invitation is extended.

Berlin, Pa.

A communion meeting will be held on the 28th day of June, at Brother Jacob Lint's, three miles north-west of Bourbon, Marshall county, Ind. A hearty invitation is given to all that desire to be with us. DARLON HALL.

Please announce in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN that the Ashland church expect to hold a communion meeting on June 15th, 1876, at the house of sister Witmer, 4 1/2 miles south-east of Ashland, meeting to commence at 10 o'clock.—Those coming on the Broadgauge railroad will stop off at Ashland, where conveyance will be furnished if informed in time, by the undersigned.

D. M. WORKMAN.

Ashland, Ohio.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Cherry Grove congregation, Carroll county, Ill., MARY ETNA, daughter of Bro. Samuel and Sister—Peck, aged one year seven months and 15 days. "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven."—Jesus. May our beloved brother and sister find great comfort in the words of Jesus.

M. M. E.

TOBIAS SPEICHER died on the 26th of May, very suddenly, aged 72 years eight months and 26 days. His sickness was very short—not more than an hour. Funeral services by Rev. Follenberger, to a very large concourse of people. JONATHAN KIMMEL.

In the Big Grove congregation, Tama Co., Iowa, May 20th, 1876, of brain fever, lit le JOHNNY, son of Bro. Wm. and Sister Elizabeth Aschenbrenner, aged three years six months and five days. Funeral discourse by Eld. Forney, from the words, "Suffer little children to come unto me," &c. Boded on earth to bloom in heaven.

 Gso. W. THOMAS.
 (Broderbote please copy.)

In the little Swatara church in Lebanon county, Pa., on the morning of May 7th, our much-loved sister and mother, CATHERINE, wife of Brother David Kline (her maiden name was Reno), aged 66 years 3 months and four days. Disease, dropsy and heart disease, with which she was afflicted for several years. Nearly two years ago she became very much emaciated, so that she thought her time had come. She then called for the elders and was anointed, according to the apostle's command. From that time her health seemed to improve, so much so that she was able to walk about the house, until on the morning of the above-named date, when she suddenly dropped dead while in the act of washing breakfast dishes. She leaves a sorrowing husband and six children, who all belong to the church, and are all married except one. She lived a pious and Christian life, loved by all who knew her, and we hope to meet her on the blissful shore of immortality. Funeral sermon by Abraham Poutz, assisted by Jacob Moyer.

"A Drop of Joy in Every Word."

FLEMINGTON, Hunterdon Co.,
 N. J., June 26, 1874.

Dr. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—It is with a happy heart that I pen these lines to acknowledge that you and your Golden Medical Discovery and Purgative Pellets are blessings to the world. These medicines cannot be too highly praised, for they have almost brought me out of the grave. Three months ago I was broken out with large ulcers and sores on my body, limbs and face. I procured your Golden Medical Discovery and Purgative Pellets, and have taken six bottles, and to-day I am in good health, all those ugly ulcers having healed and left my skin in a natural and healthy condition. I thought at one time I could not be cured. Although I can but poorly express my gratitude to you, yet there is a drop of joy in every word I write. God's blessing rest on you and your wonderful medicines is the prayer of
 Yours truly,
 JAMES O. BELLS.

When a medicine will promptly cure such terrible eating ulcers, and free the blood of the virulent poison causing them, who can longer doubt its wonderful virtues? Dr. Pierce, however, does not wish to place his Golden Medical Discovery in the catalogue of quack patent nostrums by recommending it to cure every disease; nor does he so recommend it.—But what he does claim is this, that there is but one form of blood disease that it will not cure, and that disease is cancer. He does not recommend his Discovery for that disease, yet he knows it to be the most searching blood cleanser yet discovered, and that it will free the blood and system of all other known blood poisons, be they animal, vegetable, or mineral. The Golden Medical Discovery is warranted by him to cure the worst forms of skin diseases, as all forms of Blotches, Pimples, and Eruptions, also all glandular swellings, and the worst form of scrofulous and ulcerated Sores of the Neck, Legs, or other parts, and all Scrofulous Diseases of the Bones, as White Swelling, Fever Sores, Hip Joint and Spinal Diseases, all of which belong to scrofulous diseases.

LIFE, GROWTH, BEAUTY.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

Not a Dye; makes harsh hair soft and silky; cleanses the scalp from all impurities, causing the hair to grow where it has fallen off or become thin.

Can be applied by the hand as it does not stain the hand or soil the finest linen. As a Hair Dressing it is the most perfect the world has ever produced. The hair is renovated and strengthened, and natural color restored without the application of mineral substances.

Since the introduction of this truly valuable preparation into this country, it has been the wonder and admiration of all classes, as it has proved to be the only article that will absolutely without deception, restore gray hair to its original color, health, softness, lustre and beauty, and produce hair on bald heads of its original growth and color.

This beautiful and fragrantly perfumed article is complete within itself, no washing or preparation before or after its use, or accompaniment of any kind being required to obtain these desirable results.

HERE IS THE PROOF OF ITS

SUPERIOR EXCELLENCE.

Read this Home Certificate, testified to by Edward B. Garrigues, one of the most competent Druggists and Chemists of Philadelphia, a man whose veracity none can doubt.

I am happy to add my testimony to the great value of the 'London Hair Color Restorer,' which restored my hair to its original color, and the hue appears to be permanent. I am satisfied that this preparation is nothing like a dye, but operates upon the secretions. It is also a beautiful hair dressing and promotes the growth. I purchased the first bottle from Edward B. Garrigues, druggist, Tenth and Coates streets, who can also testify my hair was quite gray when I commenced its use.

MRS. MILLER,
 No. 730 North Ninth St., Phila.

Dr. Scygne & Son—Respected friends: I have the pleasure to inform you that a lady of my acquaintance, Mrs. Miller, is delighted with the success of your "London Hair Color Restorer." Her hair was falling rapidly and quite gray. The color has been restored, the falling off entirely stopped, and a new growth of hair is the result.

 Druggist, cor. Tenth and Coates, Phila.

BOSTON TESTIMONY.

July 22d, 1871.—Dr. Scygne & Son: Last winter, while in Trenton, N. J., I procured six bottles of London Hair Color Restorer, which I like very much, in fact better than anything I have used in the last nine years. If you please, send me one dozen bottles C. O. D., care of W. S. Fogler & Son, druggists, No. 723 Tremont street, Boston.

Respectfully yours,
 ADA BAKER,
 No. 59 Rutland Square.

"London Hair Color Restorer and Dressing" has completely restored my hair to its original color and youthful beauty, and caused a rapid and luxuriant growth.

MRS. ANNIE MORRIS,
 No. 616 North Seventh street, Phila.

Dr. Dalton of Philadelphia, says of it: The London Hair Color Restorer is used very extensively among my patients and friends, as well as by myself. I therefore speak from experience.

75 CENTS PER BOTTLE. SIX BOTTLES $4.

If not sold by your druggist or storekeeper, we will forward by express, to any address, on receipt of price.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.

Health and Beauty—how to secure them.—Female Irregularities.—Beauty is as indispensable to the happiness of woman, as health is her existence; the loss of charms being regarded as a greater affliction than death itself. Holloway's Pills and Ointment have done more toward preserving it, and relieving the various disorders incidental to the sex, than all other advertised medicines united. Thousands of lovely females have had their constitutions ruined and beauty blighted by drastic aperients, pernicious stimulants, and poisonous lotions. The mild, soothing, and restorative influence of Holloway's great internal and external remedies, in all complaints of women, are now generally admitted, whether in the Spring-time of womanhood, or in the Autumn, or turn of life.

** Sold at the Manufactory of Professor HOLLOWAY & Co., New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicines throughout the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents, and $1 each.

CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the signature of J. HADDOCK, as agent for the United States, surrounds each box of Pills and Ointment. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

A GREAT DISCOVERY!

SPECIFIC REMEDIES

For Dyspepsia, Liver complaint, Constipation, Sick Headache, and for the Destruction of Worms.

The remedies for the above named diseases are put up in the form of Granules, Sugar-coated—pleasant to take as so much sugar, perfectly safe in any case. Sufficient for any recent case will be sent by mail to any part of the United States for 50cts. Chronic cases require more.

The Primitive Christian.

is published every Tuesday at $1.60 a year, postage included.

This Christian journal is devoted to the defense and promotion of Primitive Christianity, as held and practiced by the Church of the Brethren, or German Baptists.

They accept the New Testament as the only proper rule of faith and practice, and hold to the observance of all its commandments and doctrines; among which are Faith, Repentance, Baptism by Trine Immersion, Prayer, the Washing of the Saints' Feet, the Lord's Supper, the Communion, Non-Resistance, Non-Conformity to the world, and the Perfecting of Holiness in the fear of the Lord.

As space will permit, some attention will be given to such secular matters as may be judged instructive to our readers.

Subscriptions may begin at any time. For further particulars send for a specimen number. Address,

THE STAY UNSEEN.

BY CHARLOTTE ELLIOTT.

O Holy Father, Friend unseen!
Since on thine arm thou bidst me lean,
Help me throughout life's varying scene,
By faith to cling to thee.

Blest with the fellowship divine,
Take what thou wilt, I'll ne'er repine,
E'en as the branches to the vine,
My soul would cling to thee.

Far from her home, fatigued, oppressed,
Here she has found a place of rest;
An exile still, yet not uoblest,
While she can cling to thee.

Oh! when I seem to tread alone
Some barren waste with thorns o'ergrown,
Thy voice of love in gentlest tone,
Whispers: "Still cling to me."

Though faith and hope may long be tried,
I ask not, need not, aught beside,
How safe, how calm, how satisfied,
The souls that cling to thee!

Blest is my lot, whate'er befall;
What can disturb me, who appall,
While, as my strength, my rock, my all,
Father, I cling to thee?

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. Self-deception.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

There is nothing more lamentable than the incapacity which sin has wrought in the soul. Misapprehension and perversion of Divine Truth, are as natural under the blighting effects of apostasy, as for a jaundiced eye to give the brain false impressions of color. The sense of right and wrong remains, but the power of distinction is broken. The vilest, most callous wretch on earth has the sense of obligation, however feeble and restricted, and cannot violate it without such a degree of compunction as his callousity allows. But the thing itself to which his conscientiousness relates, may be an abomination in the sight of God. Moloch must have his human sacrifices, maternal hearts must be wrung and lacerated, maternal arms and bosoms emptied of their living jewels, to satisfy the sense of obligation. The monsters of so-called sacred rivers must fill their greedy jaws with new-born babes, and slake their thirst with the blood of innocence, so that the souls of deluded mothers may find rest. Self-inflictions of the most revolting character, such as lying in a state of nudity on a bed of spikes for many years, till the body assumes the insensibility of sole leather, are all so many testimonies to the native sense of right. Such is the power of sin to daiken the understanding, and such the power of conscience under sin to make darkness darker, and sin more sinful, by its overpowering mandates to do right, and its intolerable menaces against wrong.

As regards delusion in spiritual matters, Christendom is not a whit behind heathendom. Self love and the blinding power of sin tend to the misconception of an objective no less than a subjective revelation. The jaundiced soul discolors the Bible as fatally, as it does the prism of nature. The forms of self deception are legion. Devils are transformed into angels of light, and "birds, four-footed, and creeping things" are exalted into objects of adoration; gowns, stoles, candles, and waters are invested with the sacredness of Divine institutions. How many bow down to stones, toads, serpents, and monkeys. How many sit on thousand dollar cushions and receive their ministry from twenty thousand dollar pulpits, weep their emotions into forty dollar napkins, sip the eucharist from ornate silver chalices, and eat the consecrated water from silver charger, and in the sultry season revel in the luxuries of a mammoth fan that costs fifty thousand dollars. Surely this look likes being in a first class train to the Celestial City—something analogous to the Pullman sleeping car. All these are woful misconceptions of the Cross.

The same accursed alchemy that converts reptiles and insects into deities, also turns baptism into sprinkling, the Lord's Supper into a noon-day morsel, feet-washing into a common, unfilthing abitation, the holy kiss into a natural, unsacred salutation, the prayer covering into curls and puffs, braids and beads, self denial into meanness of spirit, humility into ermine, silk and broad-cloth, ribbons and flounces, and all the God insulting paraphernalia of lust. And all this with a good conscience. The sense of right is fully met, but not the right. The feeling of obligation is satisfied, while that which is really obligatory is "not touched with one of their fingers."

The inclinations warp the judgment, and this the faith, and faith the conscience, and this the conduct, and sin the whole, so that avowedly in the name of Jesus people can "be partakers of the table of devils," and "drink the cup of devils." With how many does religion to-day mean Moodyism and Sankeyism. Are you a Lutheran, or Calvinist? would be answered affirmatively not only without hesitation, but with evident pride in bearing the names of the great reformers. While the question, are you a Christian? would be met with a faltering, confused, guilt faced, I hope so. Eloquence unsurpassed, and enthusiasm like the billows of the Ocean, and convictions of right strong and immovable as the Rocky Mountains, are found abundantly on the side of wrong. Our great pulpit orators fascinate the multitudes as by some upper-world magnet, and fill their conversion registers with the names of tens of thousands who announce themselves as disciples of Emmanuel, while both pulpit and pen are leagued in a crusade against the ordinances of Jesus Christ, as fierce and relentless as that of priest and scribe and pharisee against Jesus Himself. The Pastor of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, who has the reputation of being the great "son of thunder" of the present age, who seems to have in his nature all the fire and terror of Sinai, all the pathos of Calvary, and all the bloom and poetry of Carmel, would no more stoop to wash the feet of his parishioners, or enjoin them to do so to one another, than a Jew would offer swine's flesh on the brazen altar, or carry the blood of the wild "boar of the wood" into the Holy of Holies. Ps. 80: 13. And yet this man is counted, and counts himself, as a model minister of the Gospel, and a tip-top modern Christian. What bold claims of celestial citizenship people can make in connection with puerile objections to, and irreverent language of, the institutions of grace, we may learn, for instance, from Brother Miller's opponents in the discussion of feet-washing. Any man who attempts to rebut John 13: 12—16, by saying that he too washes feet when they are dirty, ejects as big a mouthful of disgusting spittle into the face of Jesus as ever came from the throat of Roman soldier, or Jewish blasphemers. And this not from a professed enemy, but one who claims to be a commissioned ambassador of the Majesty on high! To crown the Lord of Glory with thorns, scourge Him naked back with thongs, smite Him on his cheeks, and spit in his face, when He was on trial before an unholy and hostile tribunal, was cruel, enough; but where shall we find language that concentrates the meanness and bitter mockery of those who re-enact these indignities, and hawk up their foulest and most rancorous phlegm, and send it with a relish into the calm, loving countenance of the Godman in the perversion and rejection of his solemn and glorious ordinances, and at the same time call Him Lord, Lord, and usurp the most significant titles of meek, self-renouncing, and obedient worshippers! These are the glaring, unmistakable insignia of "the Mother of Harlots." Such errors spring from her prolific matrix, and are suckled at her breasts.

How to live so as to be a holy offset to such deflection and idolatry, and to gainsay such unchristian christianity, is a question which may well come home with overwhelming power to the hearts of us all. "Keeping the ordinances as they were delivered unto us," what vigilance, what prayerfulness, what searching of heart and Scripture, what self abasing prostration before the Cross is required, in order to be what the ordinances signify. If non baptism is a "rejection of the counsel of God," and the omission of feet-washing an excision of the benefits of the atonement, "what shall the end be of them" whose feet are clean and their conscience defiled, whose "bodies are washed with pure water," and their souls dripping with the mire of the world, and their hearts bursting with greed for mammon? Law means righteousness, and deviation means penalty. If the iota of the letter will not suffer obliteration, how much less may its spirit be infringed. We may as safely cast ourselves with impunity from the pinnacle of the temple, as to tamper with the law of God in "the least commandment." To be wide awake at market, and wriggle for higher prices when they are already exorbitant, and be as dull and lifeless as a mummy at prayer-meeting; to be as smart as Barnum in turning a penny in favor of our purse, and as slow and deaf as Dives in "considering the poor," or contributing to the treasury of the Lord, is a large-lettered placard that our baptism is unbaptism, and our feet washed to fouler stains, and our communion a horrible Deicide. Self deception is a slimy serpent that noiselessly winds its fatal length into the soul, and "hardens the heart through the deceitfulness of sin." Blessed is he who knows himself in Christ Jesus. Blessed are they whose sense of right is so intense, and their perception of right so acute, that with unflinching firmness they can set their feet in the bloody footprints of Gethsemane, and present body, soul, and spirit a living sacrifice unto God.

Be Followers of Christ.

BY JAMES WIRT.

The first disciples followed Christ in his walk amongst the children of men. They left their homes and occupations, and were willing to forsake all and follow him. But in the present age we are to follow our Lord and Master by imitating his examples, and by obeying his commands. He was obedient to his heavenly Father, and in all things entirely subject to his will. If we have the spirit of Christ, it will enable us to exemplify his life and divine character, and also in perfecting holiness in the fear of God. He is our exemplar in all things that pertain to our acceptance by him when he comes again to collect his jewels, the precious ones of earth.

He set us a bright example of humility. He was in possession of the glories of heaven, and was the only begotten Son of the Father; yet he made himself of no reputation, but took upon himself the form of a servant, humbled himself and became obedient in all things, even to be willing to offer up his life upon the cross! and now God has highly exalted him, and has given him a name which is above every name. "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted." Humility now and exaltation afterwards, is promised upon faithful obedience. Pride and vanity are at variance with the elements of Christian character.

His devotedness in the work, in which he was engaged in seeking to save that which was lost, is a worthy example to all those who are called to act as ambassadors for Christ. The work of the ministry is a good work, and great responsibilities are resting upon all evangelists. The apostle Paul intimates that there would be woe upon him had he not preached the gospel but something else besides the word. He instructs believers to be-followers of him, even as he was of Christ, and to follow no man farther than he follows Christ; also that we are to be subject to the higher powers, in rendering tribute to whom tribute is due. We should, as loyal citizens, willingly comply with the requisitions of the civil law in everything that does not require us to violate Christian principles. Obedience to the commands of Christ is imperative upon all his followers.

First faith in God, believing that he exists and is a rewarder of all them that diligently seek him.

Repentance from dead works, or a godly sorrow for sin, which worketh a repentance not to be repented of, is required of every child of God.

Baptism for the remission of sins, is the initiatory rite into the church militant here on earth, by which believers are admitted into the association of saints in this life, and afterwards to an admission into the mansions prepared for them in heaven.

In order to obey from the heart that form of doctrine once delivered to the saints, it is necessary to appreciate the advantages enjoyed by those who are heirs of the promise of the glories of heaven. By obeying the truth as it is in Jesus, it may be said of us, "These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth."

Formality and Hypocrisy Versus True Religion.

BY H. P. BRINKWORTH.

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Matth. 7: 21.

These are the words of Jesus, and are a part of that memorable sermon on the mount, when multitudes had collected to hear him. He plainly brings to their minds the reality of an eternal world; also, that there are two distinct, different and opposite states in that eternal world; and he would fain impress upon their minds that there is a danger of being deceived—that there may be many amongst them professing to be his followers, who would have the form of religion, but deny the power thereof. "The kingdom of God is not in word, but in power." 1 Cor. 4: 20. And again, "For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." 1 Thess. 1: 5. And Paul says in 1 Cor. 2: 4, "My speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit, and in power."

It becomes us, as those who have made a profession, to examine ourselves, and see whether we are in the faith or not. The characters of both saint and sinner are plainly and clearly set forth in the word of God; it is our duty, then, to lay self aside while we enter into an examination of our walk as Christians, followers of the meek and lowly Jesus. Let us take with us the Word by which we must be judged, and prayerfully proceed to detect the leaven ere it leaven the whole lump and we are rocked to sleep in the cradle of carnal security, to awake afterward to find ourselves beyond the shores of time and before the tribunal bar of a Just God.

We see, by the text, that it is not a certain sign of grace for men to pray; for these people referred to by our Lord, seem to have been in earnest, crying, "Lord, Lord." Still they shall not enter, and why not? They have not obeyed "the will of my Father which is in heaven." Disobedience on their part in fulfilling God's law, shuts them out of heaven and shuts them up in hell.

Professing Christian, examine thyself; not merely obeying the ordinances of God's house, complying with baptism, or attending the communion, or washing the saints' feet, will save thee. Ah, no! there must be something deeper than all these. These are the outward forms, but let us look a little closer. The heart of man is deceitful above all things. "Be not deceived, God is not mocked." "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts; and see whether there be any way of wickedness in me, and lead me in the Way Everlasting."

You must have a heart humbled in the sight of God because of your sins and iniquities; a deep conviction of your guilt and your unworthiness as one that has rejected the offers of salvation and mercy; a view of the Savior as the only way of salvation; and that faith in him which purifies the heart and leads you to love him supremely and to obey him in all things, to follow him whithersoever he goes; that love that shall enable you to do "the will of my Father which is in heaven."

It seems that some went further than praying; they prophesied in his name, and did many wonderful works. They offer this as a plea to gain an entrance, but hear the Judge again: "Then will I profess unto them, Depart from me; I never knew you, ye workers of iniquity." Awful sentence! Yet how true.

Dear reader, have you ever thought that there is danger of being deceived. I entreat of you to examine your title, and see if it be clear to mansions in the skies. "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?" Worldling, your state will be no better than the hypocrite, if you treat the Saviour as unworthy of your notice; for while he counterfeits religion you despise or neglect it. How, then, can you expect but that your portion will be with hypocrites and unbelievers, and to be turned into hell, with all those who forget God? God willeth not the death of a sinner, but that all should turn unto him and live. Then "Turn ye, turn ye, why will ye die?"

The mighty God will not despise
The contrite heart for sacrifice;
The deep-fetched sigh, the secret groan,
Rises accepted to the throne.

And now let us, who long have been
The wretched slaves of hell and sin,
Repent—made wiser by the rod—
Come to ourselves—and then to God.

Praise God.

Do not restrain the flow of young, grateful spirits. You were ice-bound some time ago; now your heart is thawed, let the stream gush forth according to the Master's word, for hath he not said out of the midst of thee shall flow rivers of living water? Praise thy God with all thy heart. When thou liest awake in the night and thy soul is happy within thee, offer thy Lord "songs to the night." Praise him when thou goest to thy labor. Worldly men have their songs, why should not the Christian sing the songs of Zion? Praise him in thy silence, with thy heart's music. Let your soul talk sweetly to him with gratitude and love. Speak well of his name to others. We are sometimes slow to utter the goodness of the Lord, but very seldom slow to reveal our troubles. Our griefs we pour into our fellow-creatures' ear all too readily—amend this, and be eager to tell out our joys. A minister calling once upon an aged woman she began to tell him about her rheumatism and her poverty, and as he had heard that story perhaps twenty times before, he said: "My dear sister, every time I call, you tell me of your troubles, and I have no objection to hear about them, for I sympathize with you; but could you not for once tell me of your mercies?" She thanked him for reminding her of that unstrung string of her harp; and may not I remind some of you to dwell more frequently on the Lord's goodness to you? Let men know that the people of God are happy people. Constrain them to inquire what it is that makes you so glad, so calm, so patient. Compel them to desire to know Christ, if for no other reason than this, that their faces may shine with the same cheerfulness that lights up yours. I know I am bringing before you a hard duty for wintry seasons, but when the voice of the turtle is heard it will be easy for you—nay natural. You have lain among the pots, but now that you have the wings of the dove, covered with silver, and your wings with yellow gold, mount, mount, mount, and as your spirit mounts, become like the lark which sings as it rises, and is heard where it is not seen, still pouring down a flood of song from the invisible into which it has ascended. Live near to God, but let your communion with the sons of men be cheerful and joyous. Compel them to hear your praises. This is the duty of this present season and if you neglect it, the voice of the turtle may not be heard in your land any longer, and you may have to sigh, and pine, and cry for the Lord to return.

Oh sing unto the glittering glorious King!
Oh praise his name, let every living thing.
Let heart and voice like bells of silver ring,
The comfort that this day doth bring.

I would to God that this subject were the property of you all. Even in the most select congregations there are some who have no interest in Christian peace and love, and one's heart is grieved to think of that. No joyous voice can reign in hearts where Jesus is not trusted, where sin reigns, where spiritual death binds all the powers in iron bands. May you be led to feel your sad estate. May the rain of repentance fall, and then may the birds of faith and hope begin to sing; for then, and then only, will you understand the inward serenity of the people of God.—Spurgeon.

The Slipshod Way.

Churches that permit their financial matters to become involved are preparing for themselves a variety of misfortunes. First of all, they will fail to pay current expenses, and then likely have trouble with their creditors, while bringing reproach upon the name of religion. After this, they will fail to make necessary repairs and improvements, and the result must be an appearance of dilapidation and thriftlessness utterly discouraging and demoralizing. The habit once formed of conducting the finances of a church in a slipshod way, and there is no telling what will be the unfortunate end—it may be the very destruction of the congregation. Good teaching, diligent pastoral teaching, and every form of conscientious effort is unavailing, if people will be persistently careless in collecting money and settling bills. Many a pastor has more wear from the worry thus caused than from all his labors, and many a soul is lost through the bungling management by church officials of dollars and cents. Let every man see that he pays up promptly and squarely, so that he may not be tempted to take part in the mutiny that is almost sure to grow out of undisturbed delinquencies.—Amboy Gazette.

RANDOM THOUGHTS.

BY JAMES Y. HECKLER.

While the Lord is building Zion
And establishing his throne,
Every stone should be a temple,
And the temple every stone,
Now the heralds on the mountains
Publish peace, good-will to men,
For the Lord has offered pardon
To restore us all again.

I must sing to you, my brethren,
Sing to you a song of love,
Tell you of that loving Savior,
Who forsook the courts above,
And came down to our assistance,
Gave us mandates to obey,
And in all he gave example,
Him to follow in the way.

There he sat in brightest glory,
Sat between the cherubim,
Made to be of higher order
Than the shining seraphim.
From his holy habitation,
He looks down on fallen man,
And in his eternal council,
Laid the great salvation plan.

Long it took to get things ready,
But the shadows went before,
Till he came and brought the substance,
And revealed an open door.
Now the door of heaven is open,
With an Intercessor there,
Who is pleading for our failings,
And accepting earnest prayer.

When I saw the yearly synod,
Saw the thousand brethren there,
Saw the harmony and order,
Heard the very earnest prayer,—
Oh! I thought, what patient labor,
What untiring toil and care!
For the welfare of thy Zion,
Lord thy servants all prepare.

Oh, that all were meek and lowly!
All were wishing others well:
None to speak a word of evil,
None a wilful fault to tell,
None to grudge and none to covet,
None to claim what is not his,
None to do or deal unjustly,
— All to live in love and peace:

Then this world would be an Eden,
And the church a holy place,
Needing no such yearly council,
As is usually the case.
But the world is full of evil,
And the church is still impure,
For they will not all be faithful
Their salvation to insure.

When you feel to jump with David
O'er the walls in happiness,
Then be watchful lest the tempter
Overturn your cup of peace.
When you fall into temptation,
Plead with God in your distress:
Better sit in dust and ashes,
Than to boast of righteousness.

Harleysville, Pa.

On Revivals.

[The following sermon on Revivals, was delivered by G. Nelson, a minister of the M. E. church, in New Church chapel, Indianapolis, and was published in the Christian Record by J. M. Mathes. It was copied and sent for publication in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, by J. E. Bryant, of Carleton, Neb. We have read it, and will give it to our readers in the hope that it may accomplish some good. B.]

"From that time Jesus began to say: Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.—Matth. iv. 17. The word here rendered "repent" means to change or amend the life, and the marginal rendering (Matth. iii. 8) more correctly renders, "Bring forth fruits answerable to amendment of life." And this marks the preaching of the Lord and of all his disciples and true ministers, as really what it is called, a "preaching of righteousness" and an actual means of the Lord's "blessing us by turning every one of us away from his iniquities."

The popular idea of these words obscures all their practical power by the supposition that repentance is an emotional rather than a practical work; that it is a work done, not in "ceasing to do evil, learning to do well," at the counter, at the anvil, at the plow, at the bar, in the pulpit, but in a moment's passive emotion on the mourner's bench. There is a word in the original that has an emotional element in it—an element of remorse, the Judas style of repentance. But the word used here, and in all parallel cases, has no such reference. It requires this change of principle to change the practice. A sensation is not a principle, but only a floodtide, whose ebbing leaves the soul stranded where it was. Every one knows that men are every day wrought upon by the professional revivalist's skillful manipulations of their feelings till they are brought down to the depths of sorrowfulness, then up to the heights of rapture, only to come back to the dead level of their unexcited state, without a single change of principle or practice. But a change of principle, which can be truly effected only under the calmest and most rational and deliberate purpose, will affect the practice. The true conviction is a conviction of the truth, and that not in the sensibilities, but in the understanding. It is a conviction that the Lord is the only Savior, and that his commands are the only true and right things to be done, and all else ought to be shunned as sin. And when it is practically carried out it brings the repentance, that is, the amendment of life. John the Baptist, as the model preacher, showed how this is practically to be done, in his instructions to the people that flocked to his "Baptism of amendment of life."—Luke third chapter. He made it a much more practical matter than the modern momentary and sensational affair that so often usurps its place. The true repentance that involves amendment of life must go on, day by day, as the amendment of life goes on—on till the life is amended. What can only be done by living, cannot be compressed into one immense throop of feeling, and all be done, all be over, as is expected by the popular plan of getting religion all in a lump, for once and forever. Of course it is impossible that the summary process of the revival plan can involve the actual amendment of life, the actual resistance of its evils till they are suppressed, and the actual choice and practice of goodness from the Lord till it is acquired, as the actual amendment of life must involve, for evidently no actual work is done or is contemplated in the popular process. It depends not on practice, but the theory of the matter—that is, not on an actual knowing and shunning of evils as sins, as they come up to be known and resisted in real life, but a sort of wholesale dispatching of them under a sensation of guiltiness; and that that guiltiness is cancelled on the ledger of heaven by substitution. This is the chief mistake in the popular plan. It leads men to trust in a substituted instead of a real religious work; to put a summary emotional substitute in place of the perpetual practical life itself "doing justly, loving mercy, walking humbly." It encourages men to think that if they go through the prescribed emotional exercise and get a substitutional washing from the guilt of sin, they are saved from the sin itself—they are pure and saved from hell and made fit for heaven, all by feeling instead of living. They are in fact not saved from hell and made heavenly, as they expected to be, as their subsequent experience in fighting against its power in themselves and vain efforts to obtain the hoped for heavenliness clearly prove. If they were really saved from hell they would not find its life so strong in them that if resisted at all, it must be done by a perpetual life-battle. If they were really transformed to a state of heavenliness, they would not find themselves so far from its reality, and so unable to attain it by the best efforts of their life.

There would be less of fiction in this, and the fiction would be less harmful, if no more was claimed for it than there could possibly be in it; that is, nothing but a simple start in the right direction.

A conversion, turning around, it may be a regeneration; a re-birth into the heavenly life it cannot possibly be. One may take a step and reverse the direction in which he is going, but he cannot thus do the going all the way from hell to heaven. Between these two states "there is a great gulf fixed," and not one step, but the daily work of life can span the gulf. It is a long way from the love of self to the love of the Lord; from the love of the world to the love of the neighbor.

Life's changes are not lightning shocks, but regular progressive processes. They do not very well accord with the idea of instantaneous regeneration. We would not expect an invalid to recover his health instantaneously. It is the same physically or spiritually. No birth is accomplished except as the result of a growth. The heavenly is no exception. Ignorance is not flashed out and wisdom flashed into any mind instantaneously. Neither is goodness in the heart. Conversion is not regeneration any more than the crisis in disease is recovery; than the germination of life is birth, than the first glimpse of truth, is wisdom. And what is more, the sensational work of a common revival is often not even conversion, nothing, indeed, at all, but an excited feeling, which passes away without leaving a trace behind. It is a most unfortunate and disastrous mistake that has led to the so general impression that the only way to get religion is through this prescribed state of emotional excitement; that one cannot begin the Christian life except by being broken on the revival wheel; that this is the only hope of heaven.

Multitudes who, if taught the truth, would without delay make a quiet, rational and well-advised beginning of a better life; it deters from ever making an attempt till a professional revivalist comes around, and they go through the prescribed "experience" to come out after all, perhaps, only with the delusion that sins are washed away that never have been even once seen, much less resisted; that to feel very sorrowfully, and then very shoutingly, is the whole of the work of putting away sin and receiving heavenliness that fits the soul for heaven.

This is discovered to be the delusion that it is by so many of the unfortunate victims of the popular revival machinery, who learn to their disgust and discouragement, as soon as the excitement is over, that instead of being the whole work, it has been nothing at all to them.

This wholesale way of balancing sin accounts, never disposed of an actual sin in the world. It all can never make a worldly man less worldly, as he is unconscious that he is worldly, and that worldliness is a sin. Otherwise, why does it breed so many of exactly this kind of Christians, that are in particular very worldly or grasping, or dishonest, or hard-hearted, or passionate, and yet have never known and shunned these evils once, perhaps, in all their lives, but trusting in this wholesale disposition of their general sinfulness, have gone most confidently and shoutingly down to their deaths?

Their particular evils of actual life get no recognition, no resistance. They never dream of its necessity. Under the washing they have had, what need? Such men never perform an actual work of repentance, nor have an actual sin washed away in all their life, and the delusion that they do is most deadly, and the idea that fosters it, the most fearful mistake in all the world. Its effect is hardening in the extreme.

An example in our own city: A girl had been in the habit of telling untruths; was, in fact, famous for it. She went through a popular revival, and experienced the popular substitutional religion. Reminded of her fault one day, she said: "O, that is nothing any more; it is all washed away in Jesus' blood." A fact that no one could see but herself. All that this fearful delusion had done for her was to make it nearly impossible ever more to convince her of the necessity of actual repentance and amendment of life in regard to this particular evil, since a general dispatch had been made of all. The only true and safe religion is one that teaches that no other repentance is of any avail but that of each individual actual sin as it comes up in the daily life; or that no other will give remission or as the word means, sending away—removal—of sins. Remission of sins, like repentance, is not fiction, but a fact.

Sins are not remitted, removed, while they are still in the life, while their power is still unbroken and their practice unrestrained, and the falsity that says they are, is deep-dyed—dyed almost too often in the blood of souls encouraged to think themselves washed and saved, while in reality not a reigning evil has been known or shunned, or ever will be, under the delusion that is deceiving them.

These are not imaginary cases, but real and common ones, and perpetually fostered by the false idea that underlies the whole present revival system. It all is an evil, and demands abatement. And it will be abated as men are taught the truth that the right and sure and effectual way to get religion is to begin and live it, calmly, rationally, intelligently, faithfully in the daily life. Any one can begin it who can think simply, "This and this is wrong—a sin against the Lord. This and this is right, and from the Lord. He is my help, I will shun this; I will do this." And then after the thought shall have been repeated till it grows to purpose, purpose to practice, practice to love, then the work is done, then hell is escaped and heaven attained.

Experiencing religion is living it; living it is doing it; doing it is possessing it, and in the end, the heavenliness it brings.

When the church comes to teach these truths it will have a perpetual revival that is a fact, not a fiction, that will save men and not delude them.

The Popular Drift.

By C. F. DETWEILER.

"For the bed is shorter than a man can stretch himself on it; and the covering is narrower than he can wrap himself in it."—ISA. 28: 20.

In all the present religious stir it appears doubtful whether true devotion and genuine faith are on the increase. God knows. One of the evidences of man's tendency to digress, from the great centre of TRUTH in every degree of culture and learning is the disposition of continually revolutionizing in the Christian world, while the plain and simple gospel is, as he who gave it, the same yesterday, to-day and forever. Implicit faith and fervent love are the only centripetal forces of religion. It is a fixed fact that learning, in the absence of these, is incapable of any better momentum than that of a "wandering star."

"The student in search of finite knowledge may realize and read in every department of nature that there is a God; but all the literary Clumps Elysees that man has ever trod do not give any more definite revelations of the Divine Being than did the Seminaries of the ancient Athenians, who made confession of their ignorance by the superscription upon the image of their devotions—"To the UNKNOWN GOD." All that can be realized beyond this must be addressed to the heart; and therefore "The world in its wisdom knew not God;" and if we look at the general drift of mankind in this enlightened age, it is but justice to the truth of God to confess that the world in its wisdom knows not God to-day.

Some so called evangelists, representing a class of people who do not claim identity with any religious denomination, have been quite enthusiastic in these parts, and created considerable sensation. But while they advocate some sober truth, much of their doctrine seems, according to my weak judgment, like "profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so-called, which some professing, have erred concerning the faith."

Among the prominent features of this doctrine are human depravity, salvation by faith without works, open communion and anti-sectarianism (so-called). They consider all formal ordinances and observances non-essential (except the sacrament, which they observe every Sabbath day), and baptism optional. They depict the depravity of man in his lost condition with excellency of speech, but when they would come to the point of what is to be done about it, their voice sounds like "the voice of strangers."—John x. 5. To understand their position on the doctrine of being saved without works, we must bear in mind that they claim that a man is saved as soon as he believes and accepts Christ, before he can do any works, that we have not, nor can have, anything to do in the way of obtaining salvation, that the conditions are complied with, that "EVERYTHING IS DONE;" another has done it—one who went into the whole question of sin and guilt, and met it all.

It would be a weariness to the reader to cite all the Scripture that refutes the doctrine of being saved literally at the outset, but we will notice a little of the way in which Paul treats the subject in his epistle to the Corinthians (1 Cor. ix. 24), where he makes his illustration by allusion to the Olympian games. In these games no one was to obtain the prize until the race was ended, and Paul, applying it to the church said, "So run, that ye may obtain"—not, "run because ye have obtained"—and in the last verse he undeniably implies the possibility of not obtaining, when he says, "But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection; lest that by any means when I have preached to others I myself should be a castaway."

On another occasion he admonished the Philippians to work out their own salvation with fear and trembling. Now it would be quite an anomaly to work out what we have got,—as the Evangelist has it (Jan. No., page 8),—the fear and trembling are absolutely inseparable from the possibility of not getting it. To save a man and then set him to working it out, to give him the prize and then start him to running, would indeed relieve us of responsibility, which would seem very desirable to a pleasure-seeking Christendom. After being perfectly safe, having obtained the prize never to lose it, we could run awhile and then afford to sit down and rest. If the day grew hot in our field of labor, we could go to the shade, resting assured that everything essential is done! But the facts of eternal truth are quite otherwise. My brethren, salvation does not mean temptation, sin, shame, oppression, sickness, affliction, reproach and toil. It means happiness and rest. "There remaineth therefore a rest for the people of God." We are not saved in the beginning of our journey, but "We are made partakers of Christ if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end." Heb. iii. 14. And Paul further says "Let us therefore fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it." Heb. iv. 1. The Evangelist further reasons upon our inability to do anything in this wise: "Do you say, I think there is something I can do—I can seek?" God says, "None seek after him." Do you say, "I can love God?" Christ told the most religious people in the world, "I know you that ye have not the love of God in you." No; the heart is utterly corrupt, the conduct altogether selfish, and contrary to God, and I may add the whole nature is incorrigible. What can you do, then? NOTHING! Own it, dear friend, that you are nothing and can do nothing, for I have a third nothing to speak of to you; THERE IS NOTHING TO DO."

Now let us see exactly what these Scriptures say and establish in regard to this case. In the first place while I am not successful in finding the sentence in the Scriptures that says, "None seek after God," we come pretty near it in Psalm liii; but the Scripture was applied to a particular time, and in a particular extremity of human depravity, and that long before anyone knew anything about redemption, excepting the few such as the Psalmist, who looked forward in faith to the time when "the salvation of Israel" should "come out of Zion." To make the Scripture, "None seek after him," apply to all space of time would be to contradict a host of Scriptures too numerous to mention. Then in regard to those "most religious people in the world," their case will not establish anything either, for of those same "most religious people it is written: "He came to his own, and his own received him not; but as many as received him, to them gave he"—what? Salvation by faith without works? No; he gave them power to become the sons of God, even to them that believed in his name. Of those "most religious people," of whom he said, "I know you that ye have not the love of God in you," he also said, "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees [and righteousness is religion] ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." Our works can never save us, neither can works without faith save us. Paul says, "Grace was given to him that worketh not but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly." As long as the ungodly sinner has not obtained grace, he is on the great broad downward road. As soon as he has received grace to believe, he is at the fork of two roads. The one is justification unto salvation, and the other I need not describe; but as soon as he has traveled every step of the road of justification and crossed the river's brink, he is saved. Therefore blessed is he that fainteth not by the way. Thousands in this evil day of non-essentialism receive the talents with gladness, use the Lord's money as though it were their own; and while they shout the song of Miriam, their works call our Lord and Master an austere man. In the last words of the Savior's last commission to his disciples, he said, "Teach them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you," and this is what is called sectarianism or Judaism. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have a right to the tree of life and may enter in through the gates into the city."

All blood stains but the blood of Christ; that purifies and makes white.

Almsgiving.

BY EMMA C BREDERICK.

"Take heed that you do not your alms before men, to be seen of them: otherwise ye have no reward of your Father which is in heaven." Matth. 6. 1.

These are the words that fell from the lips of our dear Saviour, who bore our sins upon the cross. How many Christians are there who obey this commandment? It is just as binding as any that he has given us. Why not obey it? We sometimes hear persons say, "I gave to such and such a person." Indeed, I do not think it is right to boast of what we give to the needy; for he says, "Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth." According to this, we ought to give in secret, and we will be rewarded openly.

Again, how many rich are there who turn the needy away empty! A Christian should obey what our Saviour has taught us in this chapter; and if we are able, and have the comforts of life, which God the giver of all good gifts has given us, why not share it with the poor and needy who have not. Indeed, when we think of the pitiful cries of the distressed, we feel that those who have even one more garment than they just need, ought to give to those that have none; for he says, "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." How blessed to lend to the Lord! but how few of us think of it! What a reward we will have in heaven! Moreover, our Saviour said, "Lay not up treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven." Matth. 6: 19, 20. We ought also to be contented with what he has given us. Who is it that would not rather have treasure in heaven? I would rather have a reward in heaven than to have an abundance of riches here; for this life is but a vapor, that appeareth for awhile then vanisheth away. So I ask the question, What is this life in all its happiness and pleasures compared with an eternal life beyond this vale of tears? For if we see pleasure here and enjoy earthly pleasure, we are dead while we live. Our Saviour said, "Woe unto you that are rich; for ye have received your consolation." Luke 6: 24. The rich ought to be mindful of this passage of Scripture, and give cheerfully of their riches to the poor and needy. The Lord "loveth a cheerful giver." 2 Cor. 9: 7.

We hear some persons saying, "We will not give to such and such persons, for they can work and eat.

their own bread. True enough, they can work and eat their own bread, but some poor persons work as hard as their constitution will allow them, and then can scarcely make a comfortable living; and we are not to judge who is worthy. God sends "rain on the just and on the unjust." Matth. 5: 45. Therefore it is not for us to judge. God is our righteous Judge, and he will give to every one according to his works. But a great many of the rich are like the young man who came to Jesus and asked what he should do to inherit eternal life. Our Saviour told him to sell what he had, and give to the poor, and he would have treasure in heaven. And what did he do? "He went away sorrowful; for he had great possessions." Matth. 19: 16,—22. What a blessed thought for the poor, when they read how Jesus pitied the poor. He promises a home in heaven to all who trust in him. Why not give up the pleasures of this life for a home beyond this vale of tears and sorrow? Why not rather share our comforts with the poor, even if we discommoded ourselves a little? Why not lend to the Lord? We would get it back four fold. "Give to every man that asketh of thee; and of him that taketh away thy goods ask them not again." Luke 6: 30. He further says that we shall lend, hoping for nothing in return. These are commandments, and if we would obey one, we ought also to obey all.

Dear reader, do you ever think of giving to the poor and needy? If you have anything to give, give it to the needy, whose cries are continually entering into the ears of the Most High. Think how prompt we ought to be in doing God's will! His will must be done. How careful and prayerful we ought to be, to enter in at the strait gate. "Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat." Matth. 7: 13. Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. How few of us watch and pray without ceasing! Our Saviour says, in his holy word, that we shall pray without ceasing. Let us think of it, and try to obey this command. If we watch and pray, we will receive blessings from above; for he says, "Whatsoever ye shall ask, believing, it shall be given you."

What a blessed Saviour we have! He says: "I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." John 10: 11. "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me" (27th verse); "and I give them eternal life" (28th verse). What consoling words for the Christian. Christian, watch and pray; let us not sow to the flesh to reap corruption, but sow to the Spirit and reap life everlasting—a home prepared for the children of light. God is a Spirit, and we must worship him in deed and in truth. Brethren and sisters in the Lord, let us pray for each other, and try to love and serve God, and live nearer to him. If we have anything to give, let us give it with a cheerful heart, and also let us not covet more than God has given us. Paul said in writing to first Timothy (6: 7, 8,) "For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can take nothing out. And having food and raiment, let us therewith be content." So let us try to please God in everything.

Mt. Jackson, Va.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

All for Good.

BY J. H. PECK.

"All things work together for good to them that love God."—Rom. 8: 28.

Not some things; not a few things; not even many things, but ALL things. Oh, what depth of consolation in these words! What a staff of comfort to the weary and afflicted ones who are truly consecrated to the service of the Master! How full of meaning to those whose all is centered in him who brought life and immortality to light through the gospel!

If these words are true (and who will dare to question their veracity), then no evil can befall the humble and devoted followers of Jesus—those who love God, not in word only, but in deed and in truth.

"But," says one, "do we not see professors of religion subjected to the same evils that cross the pathway of the rankest infidel?" True, we do; but here let me say that professors of religion are not all Christians. All is not gold that looks yellow; and a man may display a very humble outward appearance, yet this is no criterion by which to judge his piety. There is such a thing as being arrayed in sheep's clothing and inwardly being ravenous wolves; and these are the ones who bring the greater reproach upon the church.

But I sincerely believe that the apostle meant what he said when he declared that "all things work together for good to them that love God." True they are exposed to about all the evils, and sometimes, it seems a great many more than those who love not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. They may have misfortunes, losses and bereavements; but is that any reason that all these will not work together for their eternal good? They may have sorrow, pain, and death attending them, but no one can prove that these light afflictions which are but for a moment, will not, if patiently borne, work out for them a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

Dear christian professor, did you ever take it to heart that, if you are what you profess to be, if you really love God, no evil can befall you? If you are not, then hasten to make your calling and election sure; for it is indeed a treasure worth striving for to be always safe in the hands of Him whose power is unlimited.

But how can we know that we love Him? Jesus says: "If a man love me he will keep my words." John xiv. 23. Then if we reject any of his sayings, or if we insist upon a figurative construction of the plain and simple teachings of our beloved Lord, to suit our carnal appetites, how dwelleth the love of God in us? Then let us manifest our love towards God by keeping his sayings. Then we can have implicit confidence in Him that though we suffer afflictions, sorrows, trials, and temptations, all these things will work together for our eternal welfare.

Lanark, Ill.

What the World Wants.

Not sluggards; of them there are quite enough. Not complainers, for of them there is at least a sufficient number,—no increase wanted, for the world is very tired of what it now has. Not busybodies in other men's matters, for the world is almost on a tilt with the present quantity. Numbers, now, are far better at attending to other people's business than that of their own. They are worrying themselves to but little purpose, and they are not likely to be of any advantage; in fact, the world would like to dispose, cheaply, of all now on hand. The extinction of the entire race is looked forward to with longing desire and fervent hope. Not mere suggesters, who never try experiments themselves but who think their calling consists in laying out plans and work for others to do. It is an easy matter to propose schemes for some one else to carry out, but it is not so easy to perform the labor ourselves. There are plans enough in the world, suggestions without number; and now what is wanted is persons to carry them on and out to perfection. Not mere float and froth, in which there is no substance no food,—nothing permanent and lasting. Of these there are plenty and to spare. The world would live and prosper all the better if the mere foam of society had all been forever extinguished.

Not sweatmeats and jellies are wanted. These go little toward making the bones, sinews, and muscles of the frame of human society. They may please for a time, but they add nothing to the strength and manhood of real life, or life in earnest, and in devotion. Not more science unless it be the science of common facts—facts for the masses of plain, plodding people. The science of good living, of holy breathings after God, of lives so pure and so powerful as to shake the whole fabric of corrupted society and mould it into a better fashion and place it on a better foundation,—higher, nobler, grander. Of this best of sciences the world wants a large increase, and must have it in order to preserve it from putrefaction and death. If the entire scientific world were engaged upon the problem of the wants of common humanity, and were to secure a leverage by which society could and would be lifted up to a better moral and social condition, their labors would be more highly appreciated and the race would be much better off than it now is.

Not mental misers, or those who make no more use of their knowledge than the miser does of his gold and silver which he has hid away in bags, are wanted. There are those who are well informed, who study, read, and are wise, but who, notwithstanding, are of no special benefit to the world simply because they do not circulate their information and thereby do good to society. Of such as this the world has enough, and no advantage could accrue from their increase. We want those who seek after wisdom in order to help the world on as well as to secure their own comfort and joy.

Not more style, surely. Of this the world has a superabundance. Primp, mince, and flirt is the fashion now. Greedy aping is everywhere apparent. Merely to be in the style is the highest thought and inspiration of multitudes. They labor all the day, and sit up and fret and stew all night, and ask no allurement but the giddy approval of style, or to have it said that they are fashionable—always in the latest cut of dress or coat. Certainly the world needs no more of such nonsense. It is ready, now, to vomit, from its excessive accumulation of bile; and if it would cast forth a little it would certainly breathe easier and find great relief from the results. It is a Herculean task to keep up with style, and requires great perseverance and careful watching. It changes so often and so quickly that it requires the individual who would be in the first rank to keep his eyes and ears open at all times and in all places. The world needs no more silliness and imbecility, such as is manifested by those who know no god but fashion, and bow at no shrine but that of style, to which they bring all their offerings.

Not a greater number of pleasure-seekers, who seem to have been born for no other purpose than to suck the honey which others have gathered and to live in wantonness and luxury without regard to the toils and hardships of others as good and even far better than themselves, are wanted. A few more of these characters and the world would soon become bankrupt—would not be worth a single farthing. The kernel of the world would be consumed and its resources exhausted. No more pleasure-seekers are needed, unless it is such as seek pleasure in hard toil and in doing some good to all within their reach.

Not more time servers are wanted—those who simply work for the present rewards. Neither Church nor State needs any more men to fill offices and places of trust merely for the bread they afford or the honors they are supposed to confer. Of such the world has now altogether too many. A decrease in their number would show a convalescing condition of political and religious life. There are plenty who will fill all the good places, whether here or there, provided they can get the chance. So there is no lack in this.

Then no more mere dough-faces are needed, who can turn any way to suit the tide. The world could get along without any of these, and certainly would get a good bargain in selling what it has at any price whatever: They are merely "dead-beating" it through the world at the expense of some one else. Men of steel, with a purpose and a principle, are in high demand everywhere,—men whom the world knows where to find and are sure will never sell out or yield to influences by they ever so popular, but are always at the helm in storms as well as when it is calm, and who work with a consciousness of pure purposes, with unflinching zeal and energy,—men who do not stop to ask which will be the most popular but which is the right side, and then work, against all odds, with a full determination to win or die in the effort, to stick to the ship, and if it must go down, go grandly down with it.

Not more are needed who can only fuss and splutter, who make a great noise, but to very little purpose and effect. There are not a few who, if you would judge from their motions, you would conclude that the world was run wholly by them, and that it was no small affair to keep it in motion. But the fuss they make is all that is of them. The world's machinery does not need any more friction; it needs a few more washers on the axles and more oil on the spindles to keep down the noise and fuss and make it run smoothly. It is not talking-people that the world wants, but men of few words and valiant, noble deeds,—men whose deeds speak for themselves clearly and distinctly.

Show is not needed. It is plain, humble, kind work, work which will lift up the masses to a better life, to a nobler manhood. Men who prove the divinity of their mission among men by deeds of moral valor, which the world is forced to approve and acknowledge as worthy and commendable, are needed,—deeds which stand out as monuments in the cold, bleak world, and need no epitaphs thereon.

The world wants men and women of pure character and stainless record; valiant for every good deed; bold and invincible in truth; clear forcible in matters of fact; plain, earnest people, not above doing whatever is needed to be done cheerfully, faithfully,—those who are willing to work anywhere without reference to high or low positions.

The world wants men who are devoted to the right regardless of fear or favor or the judgment of men; preachers who forget mere niceties in the pulpit and pour out the soul in burning words to the people; men who outleap dry manuscripts and preach Christ (not read) until the people tremble, believe, and are saved; who go about doing good to all men as far as in them lies; professors who are living epistles, read and known of all men; who walk together in all honesty and sincerity; who walk and speak for Jesus every day and who are careful to maintain good works profitable to men; men to wrestle for great truths against armies of opposition; valiant for truth and justice, whether, like Jacob, wrestling with an angel, or, like Luther, with devils,—men who will prevail in the end. More good people in heart and life are wanted, rather than people whom the giddy call smart. The world wants hard, trusty, diligent workers, those who never falter but hold out to the end; men who may die but cannot surrender. In a word, the world wants men and women of pure hearts and lives, who are ministering angels, under all circumstances, to mortals in want and misery,—good exemplars, guide-boards, way-marks, always pointing to heaven. The Lord give us more of these, and the world's wants will all be supplied.—B. F. Booth, in Relig. Tel.

For The Young.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Botany,—No. 8.

BY HOWARD MILLER.

There are some other ways of producing plants than by planting the seeds and waiting for their development. In fact, it is far easier to develop some plants by artificial methods, and some very curious results may sometimes be brought about. We never plant the seeds of the potato, though we might easily do so, and get potatoes the third year; but there would be as many varieties of the tubers as there were seeds. This is the way men produce the new varieties. They plant the seed, from the ripened balls, and then out of thousands of hills one good variety may possibly result. This is the way the early rose was produced. When we want potatoes we plant the tubers, which is the correct name of the potato, when we consider it scientifically. The eyes are underground buds; and correspond to the bud on a graft which we put on apple trees.

When we consider that the young plant must live on the starch, etc., in the parent seed, or piece, we see all the good that results from cutting large pieces when planting potatoes. In the case of a small piece all the plant food might be eaten up by the young sprout before the roots started. To plant a whole potato with fifty eyes in it would do no more good than putting on a graft having fifty buds; for the eyes of the tuber and the buds on the limb are one thing, only the one is above ground and the other underneath.

The grape-vine is easier multiplied by cuttings than by seed, and new fancy varieties come from seedlings.

Roses can be made to take root by just bending down a limb and, after breaking it half in two, covering in the earth, a few inches deep, the broken part, and it will form an independent plant.

The strawberry multiplies itself by rooting at the points of contact with the earth.

The pumpkin sends down a root at every joint that touches the ground, and in the case of a large vine, well rooted at the joints, the roots proper may be torn up and the plant still live and fruit.

Something may be learned about the length of these roots. At an Eastern college the men who investigated these matters took up the roots of a squash vine, and, after carefully washing these out with a garden hose, they found, by calculation, that if all the roots were put together, in length, they would make about fifteen miles. When they barbed the growing squash, and weighted it down to see what it could lift by growing, it was discovered that four thousand pounds was what it could move when growing in its frame with which they had surrounded it.

"Lovest thou Me? Feed my Lambs?"

Are you a lover of Jesus? Prove it by your works.

Do you desire to do something for the cause of God? Feed his lambs.

Do you desire to increase in faith? Labor for Jesus.

Do you wish to enjoy the comforts of religion? Work for Christ. In proportion as you work will be your enjoyment.

Do you desire a field of usefulness? The Sunday-schools are open, and the lambs say "Come."

Do you wish to be useful in the world? Teach in the Sunday-school.

Do you long for temporal blessings? Work while the day lasts, and God will reward you.

Have you faith in God? Obey his commands and work.

Do you wish the morals of our community improved? Train a child in the Sunday-school.

Do you believe in eternity? Strive that yours may be happy hereafter.

Do you realize that there is a heaven and a hell? Work to gain one and escape the other, and to lead others in the same way.

Are you a teacher, and desire the conversion of your class? Speak to them of Jesus.

Do you desire them to know and love the Saviour? Teach Jesus in every lesson.

"Paul may plant, and Appollos may water, but God must give the increase."

The Echo.

FROM THE GERMAN.

Little George did not yet know what the echo was.

Once when he was in the woods he called out, "Ho! ho!" Directly the echo answered him, "Ho! ho!"

He called out, wondering, "Where art thou?"

The voice called out, "Where art thou?"

He said, "You are a stupid fellow!" "Stupid fellow!" the woods took up the echo again.

Then George became vexed, and kept on calling out all sorts of nicknames in the woods.

All was repeated to him again.

He looked about for the meddling boy all over the woods; but he searched in vain, he could find no one.

Then George ran home, and told his mother that a bad boy, hidden in the woods, had mocked him, and called him names.

The mother said, "This time you are rightly served, and have made laughing-stock of yourself. Be assured, you have heard nothing but your own words. Just as you have often seen your face in the water, now you have heard your voice in the woods. If you had called out a friendly word, you would have received a friendly word in return.

So it generally happens that the conduct of others is mostly only the echo of our own. If we treat them kindly they will be friendly towards us; but if we are rough and ill-mannered towards them, so must we expect nothing better from them.

Kind Words.

They never blister the tongue nor lips; and we have never heard of any mental trouble arising from this quarter. Though they do not cost much, yet they accomplish much. They help one's own good will. Soft words soften our own soul. Angry words are fuel to the flames of wrath, and make it blaze more fiercely.

Kind words make other people good natured. Cold words freeze people, and hot words scorch them, and bitter words make them bitter, and wrathful words make them wrathful. There is such a rush for all other kind of words in our days, that it seems desirable to give kind words a chance among them. There are vain words, and idle words, and hasty words, and spiteful words, and silly words, and boisterous words, and warlike words,

Kind words also produce their own image in men's souls. And a beautiful image it is. They soothe, and quiet, and comfort the hearer. They make him out of his sour, morose, unkind feelings. We have not yet begun to use kind words in such abundance as they ought to be used.

Father Knows.

"Johnny, don't you think that you have got as much as you can carry?", said Frank to his brother, who was standing with open arms, receiving the bundles his father placed upon them. "You've got more than you can carry now."

"Never mind," said Johnny, in a sweet, happy voice, "My father knows how much I can carry."

How long it takes many of us to learn the lesson little Johnny had by heart! "Father knows how much I can carry." No grumbling, no discontentment, but sweet trust in our Father's love and that we will not be overburdened. Our heavenly Father never lays burdens upon us that we cannot bear. So we will trust him as little Johnny did his father.

The longer the storm, the sweeter the calm; the longer the winter nights, the sweeter the summer days; long afflictions will much set off the glory of heaven.

2. Write the name and give the full address of every subscriber you send, as legibly as you can.
3. Write "New" before the names of all new subscribers.
4. In ordering a change of address, give the post-office, county, and State, to which the paper is sent, as well as the post-office, county, and State to which it is to be sent.
5. Do not mix up different items of business; but take up and finish one item before you take up another.
6. Write items intended for publication on a separate slip.
7. Make every lawful effort to obtain subscribers, and to do good in whatever way you can.
8. Send money by drafts, post-office money orders, or registered letters.
9. Observe the above rules, and you will expedite business, save us from much trouble, and yourself and our subscribers from disappointments and vexation.

OUR LATE ANNUAL MEETING.

Our Annual Meeting for 1876 is among the things that are past. And it passed off without anything occurring to give it any material difference of character to what such meetings usually have.

THE LOCATION

was a favorable one, something over two miles from the railroad. Hacks were on the ground affording conveyance to the different places in the vicinity of the meeting. And although there were not many families of the Brethren living near to the place of meeting, the roads being good, and provisions being made for conveying the old brethren and sisters to lodging places, those from a distance found sufficient accommodations.

THE ACCOMMODATIONS ON THE GROUND, for accommodating the multitude were very satisfactory. A large tent 185 feet long and 80 feet wide was built with the end against the side of the meeting-house. One end of the tent was used for the Council room, and the other for a dining hall. It was estimated that the Council room had a capacity of seating 3,000 people, and the dining hall, 800.—The meeting-house was used for a baggage-room and other purposes. On the first and last day of the Meeting the multitude was pretty well seated. But on the second day the multitude present was considerably larger than it was on either of the other days, and there was not room to accommodate all that were present. There was also a heavy rain on the afternoon of this day causing the people to seek shelter within the tent, and thus producing some disorder. The order, however, upon the whole, was very good, considering the number of people present. The brethren upon whom the management of the meeting devolved, as well as those whose duty it was to perform the various departments of labor, did their work well, and things moved along harmoniously, pleasantly, and successfully.

THE AMOUNT OF BUSINESS

before the meeting was considerable. It was known that there would be questions before the meeting that might give it some trouble, and there was more than ordinary anxiety felt in regard to the disposition the meeting would make of those questions, and the manner in which that disposition would affect the brotherhood.—The reporting question was one of this kind. It having been before the Annual Council for the last few years, it was clearly to be seen that there was not only a difference of opinion among the brethren concerning the propriety or utility of a report, but that there was also a good deal of feeling upon the subject. Hence there was a good deal of interest felt in regard to it. But it was met and disposed of in a manner that we think gave very general satisfaction. The subject of feet-washing was also expected to come before the meeting, and some fears were entertained by some that it might give us some trouble. It, however, did not, as there was a willingness to defer it, this being judged the best way of disposing of it at the time. Our own impression was that the answer framed by the Standing Committee and submitted to the meeting might with safety have been accepted by it, but the brethren thought differently, and hence it was deferred. The peculiar condition of a few of our churches was another cause of anxiety to many of our brethren. And though the action of the meeting was decided upon these cases, the way is yet open for a reconciliation, and we hope, by a wise and judicious course on the part of all concerned, harmony and union will be restored, and what may be wanting supplied, and that we all may "stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel."

THE SPIRIT OF THE MEETING

was commendable. But little occurred inconsistent with the spirit of brotherly love. There was evidently a conciliatory spirit manifested, and to some extent an appreciation of the situation of things in the brotherhood. While there is a strong attachment to the brotherhood, and an ardent love to gospel truth and primitive Christianity in the brethren generally, some little difference of opinion obtains among us, not so much in regard to the doing of the commandments of the Lord, as the manner of doing them. This being the case, forbearance, meekness, and love should be cultivated, and if this should be successful in this, we hope it will lead to greater unanimity of opinion and feeling where these are desirable.

MEETINGS FOR WORSHIP

were held in many places in the neighborhood in which the Annual Meeting was held. Meeting houses were freely and kindly offered by those who own them and worship in them, and they were thankfully accepted and used by our brethren, who thus preached the word in many places, on the Lord's day, and at night during the continuance of the meeting. According to previous arrangements we stopped in Bellefontaine. On Saturday evening we preached in the house of the Disciples; on Sunday morning in that of the Christians; on Sunday afternoon in that of the Methodists; and in the evening Bro. Beer preached in that of the Presbyterians. On Thursday evening on our return, brethren Wise and Hetrick, conducted services in the Lutheran church.

We were very kindly received and entertained by the friends in Bellefontaine. We formed a very pleasant acquaintance with the families of Amos and David Miller. These are two partners of a firm of four brothers who are engaged in a very extensive and successful manufactory of buggies. They have in their employment about sixty hands. Amos and David Miller, and their wives are of parents who were members of our fraternity. And although they have departed from the faith of their fathers, they evidently retain a warm feeling for the Brethren. In becoming acquainted with them, we regretted, both for their sake and for the sake of the Brethren, that they are not members of our fraternity. For their sake, because we are fearful they may sustain some spiritual loss by failing to observe some of the commandments of our Lord, since it is said, 'Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven; for our sake or the sake of our fraternity, because we believe people of their generous natures, if imbued with the spirit of Jesus, would make excellent Christian workers in the church. But their hospitality could not have been more freely offered to the brethren had they been of our faith and practice. And their kindness will be remembered with pleasure and gratitude by their guests.

CONCLUDING REMARKS.

Upon the whole we think we had a very pleasant Annual Meeting, and we feel like thanking God, and taking encouragement from his grace vouchsafed to us in the past, and especially at our recent Council, to labor patiently and hopefully in the future, though things may at times seem dark. His promises "are yea," and in Christ, "amen," and "he hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." Such are our feelings upon closing our late A. M. Our heart is relieved of a considerable burden, and the future looks more promising. We are happy to believe that many others share with us in the same sweet truth and hope in Christ. We hope as God vouchsafes his grace to us, we all will become more humble before him. There are two prominent considerations that should humble Christians before God. They are God's mercies to us, and our own sins.

Beloved brethren and sisters, do you not feel that God has been very good to us, and will we not try to be more thankful and more faithful to him? And will not each one of us say, in view of God's gracious dealings with us,

"And, since words can never measure,
Let my life show forth thy praise!"

BROTHER FLORY'S RETURN TO THE BRETHREN.

The following address by Bro. J. Flory to the readers of The Gospel Trumpet, appears in the May number of that paper. Bro. Flory became involved in the troubles of Wm. C. Thurman, and was separated from the Brethren for eight years. It will be seen by his address that he became very much dissatisfied with his course, and very wisely returned to the fold of the Brethren, believing this is the fold of Christ. His notes of warning give no uncertain sound, and his appeal to his brethren, who had become involved in the same troubles he had, is plain, though given in the spirit of apparent kindness. Bro. Flory seems to be very humble in his confession, as it is right he should, and we hope he will ever retain much of this grace, which is so characteristic of the true Christian character.—

We hope our brother will enjoy much peace in fellowship with his former Christian brethren, and that he will be enabled to labor successfully to promote the cause of Gospel Christianity.

OUR CHANGE; OR, BURYING THE HATCHET.

Dear Readers of the Gospel Trumpet:

I take the liberty herein to say to you that I now stand connected with the church from which I was cut off over eight years ago. The reason for the change I will give in a few words as I can that I may be understood. I am satisfied that I can worship God according to his word in the church that I am now a member of. So there is no truth sacrificed. We were separated from the Brethren because we differed with them in regard to church government. We tried it without, and by sad experience see the result of it. While the Brethren had the word and a good order or system, they went steadily on building up the church that still stands as a living monument, we confess that we had no order or system by which to govern the church. And now, let me say right here: We were told time after time to exercise patience and forbearance before we were disowned. But we turned a deaf ear to all and rebelled, as we were told by the elder who has the oversight of this arm of the church, on the day we were cut off. We thought it a hard saying then, but it was not us as men that he was fighting against, but principle, and I am ready to say he was right in taking the position he did. But during the time we stood off from the church, he never stooped so low as to assail our character, but was courteous and kind to me as a neighbor and friend. This I shall never forget while I live. As soon as we were ready to bury the hatchet, all was right on his part.—So we came before the church on the 16th of May, 1876, being stripped as it were, of all self, making a full surrender, as did the prodigal son, resolved to go back to the church that we had made our choice in October, 1854. I believed then it was the true church, and I have every reason to believe so now, and why? Because, after more than eight raising, as it were, arms against the church or her government, all were ready to forgive us and take us into their confidence as soon as we were ready to bury the hatchet. We threw ourselves on the mercy of the church, and they certainly have shown mercy in that they forgive so much. I know there was a great deal of prejudice, but when the love of God gets into the heart there is no room for hatred or evil of any kind, and I verily believe that God's finger of love was in ardent work among the members the day we were received, for all seemed so very affectionate to us, who had grieved them so often. Oh, dear brethren and sisters, how sorry I have often felt when calling to mind the hasty steps we took before our separation, and now, let this be a warning to us and brethren everywhere, that stand under censure. Some whom I know that are just about ready to take a stand as we did, and rush madly on as does the unthinking horse into the battle, and even never stop to count the cost. Let me, as one who has had eight years of experience in the matter, warn you to stop and think before you further go, for as sure as you suffer yourselves to be cut off you will regret it, as I did time and again.

I admit that I had seasons of rejoicing at times, but as I traveled some fifteen or twenty thousand miles in the last eight years, I met with all kinds of brethren. What do I mean by this? I want to show you that you are really divided in the start. My last trip to Ohio proved this to me as clear as the noonday sun, that when it comes to the test, self-will raises its odious head. Brethren, put down self and you will be ready with me to bury the hatchet.

Elder George Wolf, of California, wrote me some eight months ago, saying "John, if you can get back into the church without sacrificing truth, do so at once." I have taken your advice, my dear brother, and also the advice of many others at home and abroad, and I now believe that all will work well if we do our duty, our whole duty, and nothing but our duty. Yes, prove ourselves by our acts, conduct and conversation. If so the broken down confidence will be restored again.

Before I close, I will yet give the same advice that Eld. Wolf gave me. If you can get back without sacrificing truth, do so at once. Don't let the church government keep you back. And those who are threatened and are yet with the church, do not suffer a separation, but bear yet awhile and all will come right after you cool off.

Now in conclusion, I will say that in the future I will throw my influence, if I have any, with the church that I am now identified with, work for the good of the cause I have espoused, and ever strive to keep down anything that may have a tendency to stir up strife or division among us, and go on and help build up the church, and thus honor and glorify our Father who art in heaven.

So, farewell to one and all of the readers of THE GOSPEL TRUMPET, if this proves to be the last from my pen. Bury the hatchet, live for God, so that if we never meet on earth, we can meet in our Father's Kingdom, where there will be no more separation of those that love and obey the Lord. May the grace of God attend us while we live, is my ardent prayer. Amen.

JOHN FLORY.

MINUTES OF A. M.—FULL REPORT IN PAMPHLET FORM.

The Minutes of our late A. M. will be published in both the English and the German language, but separately, and will be sold as heretofore, at 10 cents a copy, 40 cents for 6 copies, 75 cents per dozen, or 17 copies for $1 00.

We also will publish a Full Report of the Proceedings of A. M. in pamphlet form. We are now ready to receive orders for the Report, but will not be able to fill them for a month or so. Single copies, 25 cents; 12 copies, $2.50. We hope that our brethren who manifested such an interest in having a full report, will now do all they can to have it extensively circulated.

Brethren Editors :

If you will allow me space, I will give your readers an account of our lovefeast. The time appointed was the 27th of May. On coming together, to our joy we found one precious soul ready and willing to follow Jesus. Accordingly she was received into the church by the holy ordinance of baptism. We pray that she may prove faithful. The evening services were conducted in their usual order in the presence of a large assembly. This was the largest meeting of the kind we have ever had. The ministering brethren present were Elders Grabill Myers, John W. Brumbaugh, and Samuel Cox. There was a meeting appointed for next day, at which time Elder Grabill Myers addressed a large congregation from the words of the Apostle Paul, found in Rom. viii. 1. He was followed by brethren Brumbaugh and Cox, who spoke very feelingly of the importance of walking after the Spirit, or becoming members of Christ's body. Some of those who are without God or Christ in the world were caused to shed tears. We think that some were made to feel as was King Agrippa, almost persuaded to be Christians. We had a good meeting, one that we enjoyed very much. I formed the acquaintance of some very exemplary young members of the household of faith. I think we could all say as Peter said, at the transfiguration of our Lord on the mount, that it was good for us to be there.

Now, brethren and sisters, a few words to us. We have enjoyed another feast together in each others' society, and we have been built up and edified.—Now, as we go out into the busy hive of life, let us not grow cold, but let us ever strive onward and upward. Let us not forget to pray for each other that we may be kept together in the spirit of love; that we may ever be kept in the line and pathway of duty, that when we are done with this life we can have a hope to meet over yonder; beyond the hills and valleys of time, as one common family in the kingdom of immortal glory, where no farewell tears are shed, and where parting is known no more. This is the prayer of your weak but well wishing brother.

Brother Quinter :

As church news is always read with interest, we give this from our little arm: Our lovefeast was held on the 26th inst., and was truly a feast of love. Brethren David Frantz and Jacob Kindig came to our help, and did the speaking. Good impressions were made, and no doubt good resolves, that will grow and ripen and manifest themselves in fruit ere long. Five precious souls were received into the church by baptism during the meeting, four of them being young persons. Oh, what a beautiful sight to see! such tender virgins consecrating their lives to Jesus in the prime of life, while the world has such strong claims upon them. Go on, dear souls, and may Jesus go with you; and in company with Jesus, Oh, what harvesters in the field of the Lord! O Satan, you need not raise your hydra-head in these ranks. Jesus is with them, and will be with them to the end. "Bless the Lord, of my soul, and all that is within me, bless his holy name.

Yours fraternally,

THOS. D. LYON.

NEOSHO, Mo., May 16, 1876.

Dear Brother James :

I had intended giving you a short sketch of my trip after getting home, but my correspondence and other pressing engagements have hindered.

Our little church is persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed. Some of our opposers had hoped I would quit this field if I visited the East, but disappointed in the prospect of my stay at Neosho, they have renewed their attacks with mashed guns. We wait and labor patiently and prayerfully with hopes and promises for good. I am glad to say that the immediate members of my former church here manifest that personal kindness which distinguishes them as ladies and gentlemen; but we sometimes have to sustain the most malicious opposition where the truth begins to make inroads upon the members of society.—We need much the prayers, sympathy, and co-operation of our dear brethren and sisters in Christ. My "Christianity vs. War" I have reduced to 25 cents per copy, considering the deficiency in material and workmanship from my printer, which I could not help, owing to my absence from home. Brethren who will assist in the distribution of this edition will assist me much. J. W. STEIN.

A Call.

My Dear Brother :

As church news seems desirable I will give you a few words from this part of God's moral heritage if in place for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, although I seldom get to read it. If any brethren are willing to spend and be spent for the gospel's sake, here is where you are needed very much, as I am lone handed in a large territory, and can not possibly fill all the calls made by waiting and anxious people.

The ark of the Lord is slowly moving on. Some additions and prospects for more. A fine country and good openings. The brethren are settled in three neighborhoods 20 miles apart. Would say as did the vision to Paul: "Come over and help us."

Yours in hope of eternal life.

In Memory of Our Father.

Tobias Musser was born April 13th, 1829, and departed this life April 30th, 1876, aged 47 years and 17 days. He had been suffering more or less for years with pain in the stomach, which some physicians called a tumor, while others claimed it was not; but be it what it was, his sufferings, at times, were very intense, and his disease was one that baffled the skill of all human aid. About a month previous to his death, he became seriously ill, and a part of the time was confined to his bed. Medical aid was rendered, but all to no avail. On Thursday before he died he came to the table and ate his dinner, remarking that he felt better than he had for some time, and thought in a few days he would be well again. But alas! that night he suffered severely.—The physician was called in, but said his case was a hopeless one. On Saturday he called us all to his bedside, and gave us all good bye remarking that he did not know how soon he would die, and adding resignedly, "The Lord's will be done."—On Sunday he closed his eyes peacefully to all earthly things, we trust, to open them in heaven. It is true our father left us with but little of this world's goods; but he left with us that which is of more comfort to us than much wealth—the soul-comforting assurance that our great loss was his eternal gain. Dear brethren and sisters, remember us in our sad bereavement, and pray for us that we may live such a life that when we come to die we may all be so happy as to meet our dear father where parting is no more, and where we can enjoy the sweet society of all the redeemed at God's right hand.

Beneath you mound our father lies

Who once was with us here,
God sent a summons from the skies
And claimed our father dear.

Our father now has gone to rest
With those who've gone before,
And in his angel garment dressed
He stands on Zion's shore.

By faith we can him yonder see
Upon the father's shore,
And there he waits for you and me,
And many, many more.

Though hard it was for us to part
(For parting gives us pain),
Yet this shall cheer the aching heart:
Our loss is his great gain.

We will not weep for father, then,
Whose troubles all are o'er,
But trust in God to meet again
Where parting is no more.

From Washington County, Md.

Dear Primitive Christian :

For a little diversion and perhaps entertainment for the common brotherhood, who may be aspiring after general intelligence in reference to the welfare and progression of the church, whose interests are mutually held in common, I will endeavor in my weakness to indite a short epistle.

Our communion meeting, which occurred at the Manor church, Washington county, Md., on the 1st of June, was what we may term a success, if not in point of accessions, it was really a spiritual feast to the soul. Upon assembling at noon and awaiting the arrival of the ministerial staff, we soon enjoyed the pleasure of seeing Meyersdale's representative in the person of Brother Lint marching to the front and taking up the position assigned him, followed closely by brethren Trossel, Rupp, Stitely, Stover, Slifer, Oller, Utz, Meyers, Yearty, Emmert, Stouffer, and perhaps others whom I have forgotten. Hence you will discover we had quite a formidable array of ministerial assistance—enough, at least, as Sankey would sing, to "hold the fort." Being what we might justly term a magnificent afternoon, the attendance was large and attention good. At precisely 2 o'clock, the preparatory services being concluded, Bro. Lint arose in the majesty of his power, and, through the directing agency of the Holy Spirit, held the large audience spell-bound for over an hour, many of whom must have been spiritually refreshed, and sensibly felt the stately steppings of the Prince of Peace through his lively oracle, refreshing their hearts with holy unction from on high. Whilst the family of God were richly admonished, sinners were directed heavenward—Godward.

Bro. Jesse Rupp in his usual happy style of logical reasoning and philosophical deductions, in conclusion brought into requisition his battering ram of confirmation, establishing the word.

After a short recess, we were reminded by vocal announcement that the time had arrived for that important service of examination, which was characterized by the usual mode of procedure, which was participated in by different of the brethren, after which the ordinances of the Lord's house were happily commemorated as we claim they were delivered unto us. The services were concluded the same evening, leaving a day intervening between the Manor and the Beaver Creek lovefeasts.

In company with our father we wended our way on the following day to that locality, being quite a luxury from close confinement, and by Saturday noon we found ourselves ready for the Beaver Creek entertainment. We were soon pleased to see brethren Lint, Stutely, Stover, Oller, etc., in position ready to defend the truth as it is in Christ. The time having arrived for the opening service, Bro. Lint—having recuperated his physical and spiritual strength by a day's rest—arose, to the gratification, I presume, of all present, both ministers and laymen. Having selected the 1st chapter of Mark, from the 1st to the 11th verse inclusive, he entertained us in his usual happy and forcible style, proving beyond the possibility of a doubt that the beginning of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ dates from the beginning of John the Baptist's administration under the control and supervision of God and Christ, and that John and Christ were the great actors in establishing the kingdom of Christ, since which time it has been preached and made susceptible of entrance by all who desire favor and fellowship with the God of our salvation.—The time having expired by limitation, the first service was brought to a close in order to make the necessary arrangement for our more extended service of the evening, which I may say was indeed a feast of mutual fellowship, harmony and love, having our spiritual strength renewed in onco more commemorating the suffering and death of our blessed Redeemer. On the following morning, being the Lord's day, we again convened for service, when we had a fervent exhortatory address from Bro. Oler, of Waynesboro', succinctly reminding us of our renewed obligations to the Lord for his continued mercies, and the necessary preparation of heart and mind for the service before us. After a fervent appeal to the throne of grace by Bro. Snyder, Meyersdale again came to the front to do battle for the glorious cause of the liberty of the gospel, basing his remarks upon that most significant interrogatory of the Lord Jesus Christ, as recorded by St. Matthew, xvi. 13—18: "Whom do men say that I, the Son of man am," &c., from which he produced the most profound and elaborate argument, proving beyond the shadow of a doubt that the erroneous answers and conclusions of the men of that day, were just upon a parallel with some of the conclusions, deductions, and practices of the present day, virtually denying that he is the Christ the Son of the living God, at least so far as they reject very many of the essential counsels of his divine will by inserting the interpolations and wisdom of men—Creeds, catechisms, and confessions of faith, suffered violently at his hands, being placed in a false and undesirable attitude before the people. He especially solicited the charity of infant sprinklers in allowing us the practice of baptism by immersion, as in compiling their catechisms, confessions of faith, &c., they so completely erased it from the Bible that not one vestige of it has been left, and hence we are compelled to practice just what we do find, together with all other things which they did not completely obliterate. Forcible expression was given throughout his able effort, the concluding portion of which was especially affecting in admonishing the brethren and sisters in reference to the early training of our children for God, heaven, and happiness, which no doubt was appreciated by not a few of the large audience present, and should be treasured up as good, wholesome counsel, worthy of our most profound deliberation.

We feel to express our earnest gratitude to him, as well as the other brethren from a distance, who came up so manfully and energetically to the work before them. May God bless them, sustain, comfort and strengthen them in all that pertains to their spiritual, physical, and temporal comfort in this life, and in the world to come, may they all be the sanctified recipients of the gift of eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Our Lovefeast.

The communion meeting of the Bush Creek congregation was held in the Pleasant Hill meeting-house near Monrovia, Frederick county, Md., June 3rd. A good sermon was preached in the afternoon on the subject of Faith, in which the ground was taken and ably maintained that the only way man can show or prove that he has faith in his rulers is by obeying them. When soldiers have faith or confidence in their general, they will carry out his orders to the letter, knowing that the secret of military success lies in strict obedience to all commands, from the greatest to the smallest; and in the salvation of the soul we have no reason to suppose that because the commands seem trifling, or disobedience slight, that punishment from a merciful and just God will be slight or not amount to much.—Eating a little of the forbidden fruit banished man as effectually from Paradise as if he had eaten a great deal; striking the rock instead of speaking to it, as effectually shut out Moses from Canaan as if he had led a whole life of disobedience instead of one of remarkable meekness.—The Apostle James speaks very plainly (as he always does throughout his epistle) on this subject: "For whosoever shall keep the whole law and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all."

After the examination in the evening, the regular services were gone through with. I don't know why it was, but the spirit of love seemed to manifest itself in a greater degree at these exercises than at any of a like nature I had previously attended. It shone in the sober, peaceful countenances of the assemblage; it was breathed in happy tones from the speaker's desk; and was out doors in the pattering, "sobbing" rain, satisfying the cravings of thirsty vegetation.

There was one applicant for baptism—an invalid girl. Those that have good health and are strong in the battle of life, are often almost, if not quite, overcome by the trials and troubles, temptations and petty annoyances of the world. How much harder must it be, then, to resist these trials when one is weak and sick, and the body is racked with continual pain; and the nerves reveling, as it were, in a drunken agony. The invalid suffering patiently the ills of a diseased body, and at the same time living a contented, happy Christian, exhibits one of the greatest spectacles of moral heroism to be shown by man. When Christ was upon earth he spent most, if not all, his time among the sick and suffering, and we delight to picture him healing all manner of diseases, showing so much kindness to them, and taking their infirmities upon himself. And he has not stopped working for them yet, but last Sunday drew to himself by the tenderest cords of love and sympathy another one of the sick, that she might enjoy the soothing rest, that sweet sense of consolation from the great Comforter, and that she might have something to lean upon, something to live for, in this great world of nothingness. How good our Savior is to the poor in spirit! Oh, how can we be ungrateful to God for the gift of such a Son—a Son who has done so much to relieve human misery and redeem fallen man! May the influence of the lovefeast bind together the hearts of this congregation and make them one in serving and rendering praise to a loving, merciful God.

Shenandoah Valley.

During the past few months the Seventh Day Sabbath question has been agitated in the Shenandoah Valley, growing out of the mission of the Seventh Day Adventists, in the person of two gentlemen—Lune and Corliss—from Michigan. The persistency with which they advocated their views aroused the public mind to a more thorough investigation of the subject, and elicited from ministers of different persuasions a defense of the Lord's day as the Christian Sabbath.—The Brethren, too, had their share of the controversy, both public and private, and your correspondent would say, as one that knows, We have had the lion by the mane and there is nothing to fear.

The principal points of labor of the "Adventists" being New Market and the vicinity of the Brethren's meeting-house known as Cedar Grove, resulted in a few public discourses on the Sabbath by Parson Henkel of New Market, and by Eld. Jacob Wine and the writer in vindication of the Lord's day. The agitation of the question so involved a branch of the "Christian church," near Cedar Grove that it culminated in a public debate in Edinburg, a few miles below Mt. Jackson, conducted on the part of the "Christian church," by Lucas, of Lynchburg, Va., and by Lane, of the Adventist church.—As usual in such cases, both parties claim the victory; but according to a correspondence of the Shenandoah Democrat, "Lane failed to show when the Seventh day Sabbath was ever directly commanded, or observed from Adam to Moses, or enjoined by precept or example by Christ or his apostles," while Lucas said that "if he could show that the First day of the week was enjoined upon Christians as a holy rest day, by precept or precedent, his affirmation stood secure beyond the shadow of a doubt. He showed plainly that prophecy spoke of a change of rest day as well as a change of law, and that the early churches were ordered by Paul to meet on the first day of the week for religious service."

The Seventh and First day were both affirmed and negated in the discussion, which lasted four days, two days each being allotted to the affirmative respectively. So much for the debate.

Upon a careful examination of the position and arguments of the Sabbatarian, his position is without a Scriptural basis, and his arguments are fallacious. He claims that the Sabbath was instituted in the creation, whereas the fact that the Lord rested is given as the reason it was enjoined upon Israel. Exod. xxxi. 17.

He claims that God's law is unchangeable, and the ancient rest-day is still binding,—whereas God has the power to change. Heb. vii. 12. He declared that he would give a new law, Jer. xxxi. 31, and it is recorded that he take away the first that he may establish the second.—Heb. x. 9. He claims that the ten commandment form no part of the Old Covenant—that as moral principles they are eternal—that God gave the ten commandments only, and Moses gave the "law," which passed away; whereas, the ten commandments are called "the covenant." Ex. xxxiv. 28, and Moses wrote all the words of "the covenant" in the book of "the covenant," which, with the tables of "the covenant," in the ark of "the covenant," formed but parts of one covenant. The ten commandments do not contain all the moral principles of the old covenant, neither will morality save us, hence Christ raises us into a higher, holier atmosphere, forbidding even the thought (Matth. v. 28) of sins once prohibited in the law.—That God gave the whole law is evident throughout. See Deut. xxviii. 58. Jer. xxxi. 31, 32 completely upsets the Sabbatarian idea on this point; for he claims that God did not give the "law" or covenant with the fathers that has been abolished, when it positively says: "Not according to the covenant that I made with the fathers." If it read, Not according to the covenant that Moses made with the fathers, he would have some ground to occupy.

He claims that the New Testament is incomplete without the old, when James i. 25, tells us it is the "perfect law of liberty."

He claims that we shall be judged by the ten commandments in the day of judgment; when Christ, the Lord, says, "The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day," John xii. 48, and the "word" of Jesus is the gospel, while it remains to be proven that the Decalogue, as a code of laws, forms a part of the gospel.

The Sabbatarian views involve a number of inconsistencies, among which may be mentioned the following: He confounds the law and the gospel, which the Scripture prohibits. Matth. ix. 16, 17; Luke xvi. 16; 2 Cor. iii. 11; Rev. xxii. 18, 19. He goes to the law for authority in the observance of the Seventh day and fails to keep it according to the rule which made it "holy" under the old covenant. Num. xxviii. 9, 10. He goes to the old covenant to establish the literal Seventh day, and stands opposed to the pedobaptists, who seek refuge under the rite of circumcision in the old covenant for the practice of infant baptism in the new. He produces circumstantial evidence to show that the rest-day was changed from the seventh to the first day in the time of Constantine, when it is a Scriptural as well as historic fact that the First day was religiously observed by the apostles and primitive churches centuries before.

The Church of the Brethren has ever observed the Lord's day as the Christian Sabbath, as did the primitive churches. We observe the Sabbath as an institution, not in the oldness of the letter, but in the newness of the spirit. The First day of the week as the Christian Sabbath was prefigured, Lev. xxiii. 15—21. It was foretold, Ps. cxviii. 24, and Paul in Heb. iv. 7, 8, speaking of the rest-day states that "he limiteth a certain day." "For if Joshua had given them rest (then would he not afterwards have given them another day.)" Hence the Scriptural fact: "He taketh away the first that he may establish the second," may apply to the day of rest as well as to the old covenant, the priesthood, or the law. D. HAYS.

NETTLE CREEK ARM OF THE CHURCH,

Wayne Co., Ind., May 27, 1867.

Brother James Quinter, Greeting:

Bro. S. H. Bashore, late of Missouri, has been holding a series of meetings in this arm of the church. Sixty-five have been added to the church by baptism, and many more, like Agrippa of old, almost persuaded to become Christians.

The extraordinary large congregations, the good order, and the marked attention were evidences that the good seed was being sown in good ground, and that indelible impressions were being made.—Such a religious waking up among all classes of people was never known here before. Many were made to weep for joy at seeing sinners flocking home to the fold of Christ. The larger part of these were young persons.

Yours in love, B. F. KOONS.

Announcements.

There will be a lovefeast in the Howard congregation, Howard county, Ind., on the 28th of Sept. next. Those coming by railroad will stop at Kokomo, where their will be conveyance, if timely notice be given. BIEL HAMILTON.

CORRECTION.—The lovefeast of the Berlin congregation, Somerset county, Pa., on the 2nd of July, will commence at 4 o'clock, p. m., instead of 9 o'clock as was announced in the last week's issue.

There will be a lovefeast in the Elk Lick congregation, Somerset county, Pa., on the 27th of June, commencing at 2 o'clock, p. m.

We, the brethren of the Quemahoning congregation, Somerset Co., Pa., expect, the Lord willing, to have a communion meeting in our meeting house in Conemaugh township, on the 24th of June, commencing at 3 o'clock p. m. By order of the church. TOBIAS BLOUGH.

There will be a lovefeast in the Brethren's meeting-house, near Benton station, Benton county, Iowa, on the 24th and 25th of June. E. TROXEL.

MARRIAGES.

By the undersigned, at the residence of the bride's parents, on the 23rd day of May, 1876, Mr. J. W. SMOUSE, of Henrietta, Blair county, Pa., and Miss MARY JANE SMITH, of Sulzburg, Armstrong county, Pa.

J. B. WAMPLER.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Glade Run congregation, Armstrong county, Pa., JAMES WESLEY LACKEE, son of Jacob and Elizabeth Jane Lackee, aged 4 years and 21 days. Services on the 4th of June, 1876, by the writer, from Matth. xviii. 3. J. B. WAMPLER.

In the Fourmile congregation, Preble Co., Ohio, April 28th, 1876, Sister SARAH BROWER, wife of Elder Daniel Brower, aged 65 years and 13 days. She leaves a husband and four children and twenty grandchildren to mourn the loss of a loving wife and a kind mother. But their grief is consoled with the hope that she now rests in Paradise, awaiting the first and great call of her divine Master. She was a consistent member of the church about 41 years, much-loved by all who knew her both in and out of the church. Sister Brower died very suddenly. She was attending to her work as usual, when she fell as if she was going to have a chill. She told her hired girl that she would lie down a while. She did so. Then she told her to cover her up. When she laid the cover over her, she saw there was something wrong with her. She stepped to the door and called Bro. Erower, who was not more than two rods from the house. He came in as quick as he could, and when he got to the bed she drew two breaths and was gone without a struggle or even opening her eyes.—Another solemn warning to us all, and especially to her children who have not yet made their peace with God. Funeral services by the Brethren, from Luke xx. 35, 36, to a very large concourse of sympathizing friends and neighbors. JACOB RIFE.

Symptoms of Catarrh.

Dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharge falling into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, acrid, thick and tenacious mucous, purulent, muco-purulent, bloody, putrid, offensive, etc. In others a dryness, dry, watery, weak, or inflamed eyes, ringing in ears, deafness, hawking and coughing to clear the throat, ulcerations, scabs from ulcers, voice altered, nasal twang, offensive breath, impaired smell and taste, dizziness, mental depression, tickling cough, etc. Only a few of the above symptoms are likely to be present in any case at one time.

When applied with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche, and accompanied with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery as constitutional treatment, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy produces cures of the worst cases of Catarrh and Ozæna of many years' standing. This thorough course of medication constitutes the only scientific, rational, safe, and successful manner of treating this odious disease that has ever been offered to the afflicted.

SPECIAL NOTICE TO OUR READERS.
SPECIAL CALL.
Agents Wanted

To sell the New Patent Improved EYE CUPS. Guaranteed to be the best selling business offered to Agents by any House. An easy and pleasant employment.

The value of the celebrated new Patent Improved Eye Cups for the restoration of sight breaks out and shines in the evidences of over 6,000 genuine testimonials of cures, and recommended by more than one thousand of our best physicians in their practice.

The Patent Eye Cups are a scientific and philosophical discovery, and as ALEX. R. WYETH, M. D., and WM. BEATLEY, M. D. writes, they are certainly the greatest invention of the age.

Read the following certificates:
FERGUSON STATION, LOGAN CO., KY., June 6th, 1872. DR. J. BALL & Co., Oculists—
GENTLEMEN: Your Patent Eye Cups are, in my judgment, the most splendid triumph which optical science has ever achieved, but, like all other great and important truths, in this or in any other branch of science and philosophy, which tend to contend with the ignorance and prejudice of a too sceptical public; but truth is mighty and will prevail, and it is only a question of time as regards their general acceptance and adoption by all. I have in my hands certificates of persons testifying in unequivocal terms to their merits. The most prominent physicians of my county recommend your Eye Cups.

L.A.S., respectively, J. A. L. BURDETTE.
WILLIAM BEATLEY, M. D., SAULTS, KY., writes: "Thanks to you for the greatest of all inventions. My sight is fully restored by the use of your Patent Eye Cups after being almost entirely blind for twenty years."

ALEX. R. WYETH, M. D. ARCHISON, PA., writes: "After total blindness of my left eye for four years, the paralysis of the optic nerve, to my great astonishment your Patent Eye Cups restored my eyesight permanently in three minutes."

Rev. S. B. FALKENBURG, Minister of the M. E. Church, writes: "Your Patent Eye Cups have restored my sight, for which I am most thankful to the Father of Mercies. By your advertisement I saw at a glance that your invaluable Eye Cups performed their work perfectly in accordance with physiological laws; that they literally fed the eye that were starving for nutrition; may God greatly bless you, and may your name be engrained in the affectionate memories of multiplied thousands as one of the benefactors of your kind."

HORACE B. DURANT, M. D., 813 : "I sold, and effected future sales liberally. The Patent Eye Cups, will make money, and make it fast, too; no small catch-words, but a sure, a simple, a number one, tip-top business, promises, as far as I can see, to be life-long."

Mayor E. C. ELLE wrote us, November 16th, 1869 : "I have tested the Patent Ivory Eye Cups, and am satisfied they are good. I am pleased with them. They are certainly the greatest invention of the age."

WM. HONORE GREENE, late Editor of the New York Home, writes: "Dr. J. BALL, of our city, is a conscientious and responsible man, who is incapable of intentional deception or imposition."

Prof. W. MERRICK writes: "Truly I am grateful to you for your noble invention. My sight is restored by your Patent Eye Cups. May heaven bless and preserve you. I have been using spectacles twenty years. I am seventy-one years old. I do all my writing without glasses, and I bless the inventor of the Patent Eye Cups every time I take up my old stool pen."

ADOLPH BIORNBERG, M. D., physician to Emperor Napoleon, wrote, after having his sight restored by our Patent Eye Cups: "With gratitude to God, and thankfulness to the inventors, Dr. J. BALL & Co., I hereby recommend the trial of the Eye Cups (in full faith) to all and every one that has any impaired eyesight, behelvis, as I do, that since the experiment with this wonderful discovery has proved successful on me, at my advanced period of life—80 years of age—I believe they will restore the vision to any individual if they are properly applied."

ADOLPH BIORNBERG, M. D.
Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Essex, ss.
I, H. B. personally appeared Adolph Biornberg, made oath to the following certificate, and by him subscribed and sworn before me.

WM. STEVENS, J. P.
LAWRENCE CITY, MASS., June 6th, 1873.
We, the undersigned, having personally known Dr. Adolph Biornberg for years, believe him to be an honest, moral man, trustworthy, and in truth and veracity unimpeached. His character is without reproach.
M. BONNEY, Ex-Mayor.
S. B. W. DAVIS, Ex-Mayor.

GEORGE S. MERRILL, P. M.
ROSE H. TWEED, SECRETARY, City Treas.
Reader, there are a few certificates out of thousands we receive, and to the aged we will guarantee your old and diseased eyes can be made new; your impaired sight, blindness of vision and overworked eyes can be restored; weak, watery and sore eyes cured; the blind may see; spectacles be discarded; sight restored, and vision preserved. Spectacles after surgical operations useless.

SWAYNE'S OINTMENT.

HOME TESTIMONY.
I was sorely afflicted with one of the most distressing of all diseases, Puritus or Prurigo, or more commonly known as Itching Piles. The itching at times was almost intolerable, increased by scratching, and not unfrequently becoming quite sore. I bought a box of Swayne's Ointment; its use gave quick relief, and in a short time made a perfect cure. I can now sleep undisturbed, and I would advise all who are suffering with this distressing complaint to procure Swayne's Ointment at once. I had tried prescriptions almost innumerable, without finding any permanent relief.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.

Health and Beauty—how to secure them.—Female Irregularities.—Beauty is as indispensable to the happiness of woman as health to her existence; the loss of charms being regarded as a greater affliction than death itself. Holloway's Pills and Ointment have done more toward preserving it, and relieving the various disorders incidental to the sex, than all other advertised medicines united. Thousands of lovely females have had their constitutions ruined and beauty blighted by drastic aperients, pernicious stimulants, and poisonous lotions. The mild, soothing, and restorative influence of Holloway's great internal and external remedies, in all complaints of women, are now generally admitted, whether in the Spring-time of womanhood, or in the Autumn, or turn of life.

* * * Sold at the Manufactory of Professor Holloway & Co., New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents, and $1 each.

CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the signature of J. HADDOCK, as agent for the United States, surrounds each box of Pills and Ointment. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

The Primitive Christian.

is published every Tuesday at $1.60 a year, postage included.

This Christian journal is devoted to the defense and promotion of Primitive Christianity, as held and practiced by the Church of the Brethren, or German Baptists.

They accept the New Testament as the only proper rule of faith and practice, and hold to the observance of all its commandments and doctrines; among which are Faith, Repentance, Baptism by Trine Immersion, Prayer, the Washing of the Saints' Feet, the Lord's Supper, the Communion, Non-Resistance, Non-Conformity to the world, and the Perfecting of Holiness in the fear of the Lord.

As space will permit, some attention will be given to such secular matters as may be judged instructive to our readers.

Subscriptions may begin at any time. For further particulars send for a specimen number. Address,

"I will bless the Lord at all times."

O Thou whose bounty fills my cup
With every blessing meet;
I give Thee thanks for every drop,
The bitter and the sweet.

I thank Thee for the desert road,
And for the river side;
For all Thy goodness has bestowed,
And all Thy grace denied.

I thank Thee for the smile and frown,
And for the gain and loss;
I bless Thee for the future crown,
And for the present cross.

I praise Thee for the wing of love
Which stirred my worldly nest;
And for the stormy cloud which drove
The flutterer to Thy breast.

I bless Thee for the glad increase—
For the exceeding joy;
And for this calm and settled peace,
Which nothing can destroy.

A Crumb for a Backslidden Member.

By C. H. BALSBAUGH.

All is not lost that is in jeopardy. But what is put in jeopardy voluntarily, is "nigh unto cursing; whose end is to be burned," unless we "repent, and do the first works." Heb. 6: 8. Rev. 2: 5. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God" as the sin-Avenger; as it is a most blessed thing to be there as the sin-Atoner. Heb. 10: 31. 1 John 2: 1, 2. To turn the back to the Father's house, and steel the heart to the Father's appeals, and return indifference and indignity for the Father's love, is to court eternal poverty, degradation, and "a mighty famine." But while the prodigal is "wasting his substance in riotous living," and dishonoring his pedigree, and destroying body and soul in the foulest vices, the Father's door is still open, the Father's heart still yearning for the home coming of the self-exiled wanderer. The kindest greeting, the best robe, and the most delicious fare await his restoration to filial love and obedience. If he ever returns, it will be with such self loathing and self-renunciation, as to make his re-instatement and exaltation the joy of God and the glory of Christ.

You have done wickedly in forsaking so good a Father and gracious a Saviour, and trampling on the blood He shed for your sins. But however ruthlessly you may have set your heel on His heart, you have not crushed out His everlasting love. You deemed the brethren too narrow-minded, too whimsical in their views of non-conformity to the world, and so you violated your baptismal vow, and broke the hearts of "saintly, loving parents, brothers and sisters, by uniting with a sect who impose no restraints on "the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life." Pride and the desire of vain display lay at the root of your apostasy, although your ostensible reason for self-excommunication was loss of confidence in the validity of trine-immersion. I knew that falsehood and duplicity were the festering realities that lay beneath your white-wash, and would some day kindle a fearful hell in your soul, and I thank God that the flames have enveloped you this side of perdition. There are others who have deserted Jesus with the same wicked plea, whose hands and feet and souls are red with the contemned blood of the Lamb of God; who strut on the brink of hell in all the nauseous gewgaws of fashion, and approach the so-called table of the Lord at midday, having their bodies bedecked with the devil's trinkets. Some are even now furtively playing the harlot with other denominations, intoxicated with the wine of fornication, fuddled with the hollow flattery of religious kidnappers. Poor, deluded souls, how little do they think that in all this they are but feeding the man of sin out of Beelzebub's pantry, and gathering fuel for the furnace of self-condemnation. O the doom of the renegade! O the double doom of those who, under the mask of superior sanctity, unite with sectarian bodies in order to obtain a larger license for their lusts! "Why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost? Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God." Acts 5: 3, 4. O the bottomless, wrath-walled, sevenfold-heated caldron of woe which the twice-crucified Godman reserves for such wretched defamers of the Cross! May the All Good empty into their conscience a vial of indignation while in the body, and burn them out of their man-made creeds, devil-worship, flounces and ribbons and jewels and chignons, and all the silly et ceteras of soul-destroying fashion. "May God hasten the day "that shall burn as an oven," and consume all the "strubble" of the "proud," and them "that do wickedly," and "leave them neither root nor branch." Mal. 4: 1. But you are penitent. Your sins have found you out. The wrath of God lieth heavy upon you. English Baptists have no longer any charm for you since a true apprehension of sin and judgment have made you honest. Your stack of pride is on fire, and the truth comes out. Dagon lies on his face before the Ark, with hands and head off and back broken. 1 Sam. 5. May the javelin of Phinehas thrust through Zimri and Cozbi, and "the fierce anger of the Lord" burn out of your nature every propensity to commit whoredom with the Moalites. Numbers 25.

"To you is the word of this salvation sent." "Come unto me ALL ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "Him that cometh unto Me, I will in no wise cast out." "Return, ye backsliding children, and I will heal your backslidings." "Return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the Lord, and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you; for I am merciful, saith the Lord, and I will not keep anger forever" "Only acknowledge thine iniquity, that thou hast transgressed against the Lord thy God." Jeremiah 3: 12, 13, 22. "I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely; for mine anger is turned away from him." Hos. 14: 4.

May the Holy Ghost italicize and capitalize these gracious invitations and promises. Lay hold of the great, standing, God-sworn immutabilities of grace. 1 Tim. 1: 15. Heb. 6: 17, 18, and 7: 25 "He is able to save to the UTMOST." May God himself emphasize this to your salvation His ability and willingness are parallel. No sin can overmatch the grace of God, if it be forsaken and abhorred. The unrelenting Judge is also the forgiving Father. No pardon for the least sin out of Christ. Pardon for the "chief of sinners" through the blood of the Cross. No sin so insignificant as not to need a Divine-human expiation. A single tooth print in the forbidden fruit, is as fatal a breach of Divine Law, as to slay the Lord of glory. No sin so great and heinous as to exceed the efficacy of the atonement. The sin against the Holy Ghost is not only an act, but a process, which makes forgiveness subjectively impossible. Only have faith enough to "depart from all iniquity," and struggle after holiness, even if it is not deep and strong enough to bring you comfort and assurance. "Look unto Jesus" Take Him as your Pattern, even if you have not the heart to claim Him as your Propitiation. Only look, continue looking, intensify your gaze, turn every energy and effort and desire and aim Crossward, and He will see to it that your hope and peace grow apace. The faith that leads to a better life, will in due time lead to confidence and joy. The faith that throttles and floors the world, the flesh, and the devil, will eventually heal the gashes and ulcers that sin has caused. If you must walk the streets awhile weeping, sick of love and forsaken, then be it so; only walk on, and weep on, and continue seeking, and you will find Him whom your soul loveth. Sol. Song 3 and 5. The day will break as certainly as you break covenant with darkness. Take God on trust, vow eternal hostility to sin, and let your vow and your life be synonyms.

"Religion"

BY JAMES WIRT.

Religion denotes a system of faith and worship. Faith is a reliance on testimony. Worship is homage; to adore. The christian religion dates its introduction in the world nearly two thousand years ago, and is that system of revealed religion as taught by Christ and his Apostles, and as we find it embodied in the New Testament.

In the earliest age of man's existence, there was then some form of duty required at his hand in homage to his Creator; and there was at that time an inferior degree of light imparted corresponding with his limited understanding; but in successive ages there has been superior light given to enlighten and restore mankind to their pristine glory.

The analogy of the three dispensations may be thus represented: The Patriarchal, by starlight; the Mosaic, by moonlight; and the Christian dispensation by sunlight. There was a gradual unfolding of the light of heaven, and it was completed in Christ, that true Light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world, through the influence of pure and undefiled religion. This system of religion is destined in the future to hold universal sway,

At the name of Jesus every knee shall bow; "every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

At present we are passing through the last era of the world's sinful career. There may not be many annular revolutions of the Earth till a new era will be ushered in—the reign of peace and happiness. The Saviour will then have the central position of his government located upon this globe. The enemy of souls will be chained, rdd in prison, one thousand years.

The influence of the Christian religion produces mighty results in controlling the destinies of nations; wherever its influence is felt, there civilization advances. It has for its object the conversion of the world. The command given by the great Lawgiver to his apostles was for them to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. How many incentives there are for the follower of Christ to live a life of holiness! The pure in heart shall see God; "without holiness no man shall see the Lord."

May we be true and faithful to our Holy religion, and be permitted to see it committed unto those who are willing and able to labor in the word and doctrine, who may, in turn, hand it down, unchanged, to the latest posterity; and may we by its blessed influence be qualified for an ultimate admission into the triumphant kingdom of heaven. The New Testament contains the last will of God to his creatures. In this there is all that is necessary for our present and future well being.

Public Morals.

There are institutions and customs among us, countenanced, patronized, vindicated by Christian men and women, which are, in this respect, essentially heathenish and utterly revolting. Such an institution is the theater. Who would endure to see his own wife, daughter or sister, pacing the public stage to represent, in word or act, the varying phases of a sinful, or even of a lawful love? Yet the interests of nearly every play turns on the working, or the perversion, of this divine passion, whose holy secrets every true woman instinctively veils from common view. But there are still viler features which seem inseparably engrafted on the theater. We need only to glance at the play bills which are posted on our streets, or observe the columns of the daily press, to see that the shameless exposure of the female form is one of the chief attractions of the modern stage. There is not a theater in the land that does not fall under this reproach. The ballet dancer of to day is simply the modern Herodias; her vocation is no higher than that of the dancing girls in an oriental scraglio, and the taste which demands such amusements avows the heathenish principle that the chief end of women is to minister to the gratification of man. Even where there is no immediate design of lowliness, where the only motive is the perfection of the dance and the fuller revelation of the charm of rythmical and graceful motion, where the spectator looks on the moving spectacle before him as he would on figures in wax or marble, still the charge holds good that woman, a rational being with an immortal soul, created to share with man the high responsibilities of life, endowed with beauty as a means of blessed influence over human hearts, is set upon the stage to expose her charms for the gratification of the crowd. Fathers whose heads would bow with shame to see their own daughters in that giddy throng, mothers who would withdraw their girls from the very touch of a stage-dancer, as social pollution, yet carry them to witness, in more or less refined or repulsive aspects, these barbarian spectacles. Do they forget that these girls are somebody's daughters? Do they imagine that any class of women can be degraded, without lowering the respect which is felt for all women? The theater of to-day is the enemy of women. It looks back to heathenism, and, if allowed, would speedily carry us there. The woman who patronizes it or apologizes for it, assists in the degradation, and retards the elevation of her sex. And, for reasons palpable to all well informed persons, the same argument is justly urged, with steadily increasing force as years go by, against the dancing customs in vogue in modern society. Is it strange that the Christian church, whose work is so largely the elevation of woman, and which is dependent so largely on Christian womanhood for her success, lifts up, in all her branches, a uniform and stringent testimony against both the stage-play and the dance? The American Congress, soon after the declaration of Independence, passed the following resolution:—

"Whereas, true religion and good morals are the only solid foundation of public liberty and happiness:

"Resolved, that it be, and hereby is, earnestly recommended to the several States, to take the most effectual measures for the encouragement thereof, and for the suppression of theatrical entertainments, horse-racing, gaming and such other diversions as are productive of idleness, dissipation and a general depravity of principles and manners."

Is it strange that Christian citizens, observing with alarm the growing laxity of morals, are striving to bring back the government to see the principles of that earlier and better time?—Christian Statesman.

The Outward Sign.

A sign is that which represents or shows something else. "The character of a sign," says Dr. Hengstenberg, "is, in general, borne by everything which serves for certifying facts which belong to the territory of faith, and not to that of sight." Life is among the unseen things, but the signs of life, as the buds on the tree, show the life that is hidden within. It is only by these signs that we know the things of faith.

Moreover, a sign is also a proof of the existence of that which it certifies. This use of the word is frequent in the ancient orators. Among the Greeks this meaning of the word is quite common. The Hebrews also used their corresponding word in this sense. Instances of such use may not unfrequently be met with in the Bible.

Man gives outward signs in this two fold sense of what he is in reality. The actions and words of a man are such outward signs. His walk and conversation, as the Bible expresses it, are the index to his soul, his inner life. And man is so constituted that the sign and the thing signified correspond. When it is otherwise a man deceives, acts hypocritically.

But when we refer to these outward signs, we do not mean that which a man does deliberately to represent, manifest or prove what is in him. When men do this they often impose both upon themselves and upon others. Men can act the hypocrite when they make signs. They can speak the words of piety, or friendship, or honesty, or purity when there is impiety, hatred, dishonesty and impurity in the heart. So that under such circumstances their words are neither a sign nor a proof of what is in them. We must look to unconstrained, impromptu, spontaneous words and actions to determine what men are. If these are not the natural signs of piety, purity, veracity, etc., then they are proofs of the contrary.

Now in order that the outward signs in our lives may indicate virtue and piety, it is not needful that we have any special regard to the signs, but to the state of our hearts. The signs will not belie the heart, if left uncontrolled. True, we need instruction in some things as to outward signs, just as we need instruction as to the words to be used to represent our ideas; but in simple morality the heart begets its proper signs. The great concern, then, is with the heart, with the hidden and real men.

Nor is there any final advantage in correcting the mere signs, while the heart is unrenewed. There are those who begin at the signs in their work of reformation. They would put away the outward sin of profanity, of dishonesty, and impurity. It is of no account. Instead of making them any better it only turns them into a walking lie as long as profanity, and dishonesty, and impurity are not rooted out of their being. Neither piety nor impiety consists in that which is on the outside. Social and other influences may make model men on the exterior, but they may be none the better for that in their real character.

It is well for Christian people to remember not only these plain facts, but also to keep in mind that others judge them by these rules. All men know, though they may not understand the secret of it, that what men appear to be in their unrestrained life is what they really are. They know that at such times a wicked heart does not wear the garb of piety. And no amount of protestation can convince a man that his neighbor, who when unrestrained commits sins, is really a pious man. Many men are honest, scrupulously so, when observed; pay their debts when the law and its officers can reach them, but who are lax in these virtues when this compulsion is withdrawn. Such men are not good at heart. So there are thousands and thousands of men that strive to be Christians because of the constraining influence of judgement and perdition. Take these terrible facts from before their eyes and the real man would show itself. Now there is fearful deception here. He that is faithful in paying debts because the law can reach him, because otherwise his character would be stained and his influence destroyed, is not honest in God's sight. The signs which he outwardly displays are hung there for an object; they do not belong there. What should concern a man most of all is that these signs do not lie.

A right heart will always be manifested in the proper signs thereof. It is of the very nature of virtue not to deceive. It never acts the hypocrite; it never dissembles and puts on the form of any vice. It is sin alone that is guilty of these things. Where there is pride in the heart, there may be humility in the mien, the dress, or the speech; where there is avarice there may be a show of liberality. Not so with piety, with any virtue. Humility in the heart never puts on the garb of pride; true piety never is found guilty of wearing any dress of impiety. It is one of the unalterable facts of history that while the devil sometimes appears in the form of an angel of light, an angel of light was never known to assume the form of a devil.

The power of the church lies in the complete correspondence between the outward signs and the heart. Here is, then, a living gospel. Here is a walking ministry. Here is preaching that cannot fail to be heard on the streets, behind the counters, in the shops and everywhere. There are now enough nominal Christians in this country to revolutionize it in a brief time if all had in their hearts that which corresponds to the signs they hang out in their professions. And it is just this that we want to-day. We want a religion that will free a man from the law—from the statute law, from the social law, from the conventional law—a religion that will be a law in the heart more imperative than tons of statutes.—Church Advocate.

Unity.

Look into private life—behold how good and pleasant a thing it is to live together in unity; it is like the precious ointment poured on the head of Aaron, that ran down to his skirts; importing that this balm of life is felt and enjoyed not only by governors of kingdoms, but it is also enjoyed in the lowest rank of life, and tasted in the most private recesses; all, from the king to the peasant, are refreshed with its blessings, without which we can find no comfort in anything this world can give. It is this which gives to every one the blessing to sit quietly under his vine, and reap the fruits of his labor of industry; in one word, which bespeaks who is the bestower of it. It is this only which keeps up the harmony and order of the world, and preserves everything in it from ruin and confusion.—J. S. Gitt.

Do not say you have no convenient place to pray in. Any man can find a place private enough, if he is disposed. Our Lord prayed on a mountain, Peter on the house-top, Isaac in the field, Nathanael under the fig-tree, Jonah in the whale's belly. Any place may become a closet, an oratory, and a Bethel and be to us the presence of God.

AFTER MANY DAYS.

Are the days my foes? Are they subtle thieves stealing my gold from me?
I am poorer now than before they came,
and the marks of their hands I see;
They have taken away my youth and strength and the light that was seldom dim;
They have taught me many a mournful word and many a pensive hymn.

Are the days my foes? Nay, they cannot be,
for though they are often stern,
I think they are teachers sent from God,
and I sit at their feet and learn;
And though the books that I have to read are dark with the lines of woe,
They tell me much of my Father's love and the heaven to which I go.

So the days are friends. They have led me up from the peaceful, pleasant vales,
To the green hill-tops and the mountain sides where I feel the bracing gales;
They have given me vision's of other things than I saw in my childhood's dreams,
And I rest in the lasting light of God instead of earth's fitful gleams.

And the days are friends; for, with all their gifts of sorrow, joy, or loss,
They have drawn me nearer with gentle hands to the foot of the Savior's cross;
And there the bliss that his presence gives is the soothing of all my pain,
And there I learn that not any day has been sent to my life in vain.

So I wait in hope for the coming days. I am not afraid to see

The loads they bear or the tasks they bring from the God whom I love, to me;
For the winter snows and the summer suns,
[in their every flake and ray,]
Do tell of the close of my exile life and the glad home-coming day.

—Marianne Farningham.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Ministering Spirits. Hebrews 1: 14.

BY J. H. ROBERTS.

In many instances, under former dispensations, God communicated his will to persons through the medium of angels. For instance, in the case of Lot, Genesis 19: 1, there came two angels to Sodom. Their mission was to deliver Lot out of that wicked city, in order that it might receive a just recompense of reward for unholy deeds. Again, in Gen. 32 chapter, we learn that Jacob was blessed, and called Israel, by an angel; or, in other words, he was ministered unto. In Daniel 3: 28, we learn that the three Hebrew children were delivered from the fiery furnace by God's angel. Also in Daniel 10: 10, 11, I think we have enough testimony in the above quotations to prove the ministering of angels, to certain persons, in the dispensations alluded to.

That the characters so administered to were righteous in the sight of God, is also easily to be seen by reading the verses immediately preceding and following the above quotations. Lot was led out from the city in order that it might be destroyed; because he was a righteous man. Jacob was blessed because he had found favor with his Creator. The Hebrew children were preserved from even the smell of fire on their garments, because they would not fall down and worship idols, the workmanship of men's hands. They were righteous. A Daniel of old was cast into the lion's den, and was unharmed by the wild beasts, for the reason that he prayed to and worshipped the only true and living God. The prophet Elijah successfully offered up prayer to God, and was answered to the chagrin and dismay of many false prophets, because he was a righteous man. In no case in the Old Testament Scriptures do we find that ministering spirits, or angels, ministered unto any disobedient or wicked person, to his or her temporal or spiritual welfare.

I now come to the New Testament Scriptures, and for proof of ministering spirits shall begin with Math. 18: 10, where Christ, in teaching his disciples, says: "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones, for I say unto you that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven."

Next in evidence is Luke 1: 19, "And the angel answering said unto him, I am Gabriel that stand in the presence of God, and am sent to speak unto thee, and to shew thee glad tidings." This was in answer to a query proposed by Zacharias, he being the person ministered unto by the angel.

Also Luke 2: 6, 9, 10: "And lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them [the shepherds], and the glory of the Lord shone round about them; and they were sore afraid. And the angel said unto them, Fear not; for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people."

Acts 5: 19, "But the angel of the Lord by night opened the prison doors, and brought them forth," &c. Also 27: 12: 7, "And behold the angel of the Lord came upon him, and a light shined in the prison; and he smote Peter on the side," &c. Also 27: 23, "For there stood by me this night the angel of God," &c. And the "many" who were "gathered together praying" plainly indicated their belief in ministering angels, by saying in reply to Rhoda, "It is his angel."

I think the above testimony sufficient to answer a part of Paul's query, yet there is much more that could be produced. Now I will try to prove by the Scriptures to which of the two classes the person above alluded to belong, and will briefly notice them in the order introduced.

The word "ye," made use of by Christ in Math. 18: 10, refers to his disciples; and Christ speaks of them elsewhere as being the ones who had followed him in the "regeneration," and that they had continued with him in his temptations; in short, his followers. Of Zacharias it is written that he, and his wife Elisabeth, "were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless." Luke 2: 20, speaks of the shepherds as men that "glorified and praised God for what they had seen and heard." They had seen the Lord's Christ, and had heard the rejoicing of the angels at the birth of Christ. We know full well that evil spirits would not rejoice at what they knew would eventually be their destruction. There are other instances in the gospel that bear the same kind of testimony as the Scriptures already produced; but are these not enough to convince any one that is inclined to give credit to the written "word" that the good Spirit always, and in all cases, ministered unto them, as Paul says, "who shall be heirs of salvation?" All believers in Christ will answer, "Yes." But the question might be asked, "Do you believe that there are ministering angels, or spirits, that minister unto the children of God in these last days?" Certainly I do; just because I believe that God has a people on earth, and that people are "heirs of salvation." "Seeing that the Bible speaks of two kinds of spirits, how do you know which kind is operating upon you?" By the following evidence I think we can determine that matter. The apostle John (1 John 4: 1) says, "Believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God." Now if the Spirit leads us to believe in Christ, that he is the Son of God, and has come in the flesh, and that he is "precious to those that believe"—"forgiving the sins of those that repent, and exercise a living faith in him, by obeying from the heart all things whatsoever he has commanded us, this spirit's teaching is safe to follow; for it is written in the gospel, that "he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God." More, if we are whiskered to in our hearts, by the "still small voice," to hear him by whom God in these last days hath spoken unto us, we will be quite safe to follow the leadings of such a spirit. We see by the above that the spirits referred to are of God.

But there is another class of spirits spoken of in the Bible; and as we are commanded to "try the spirits," I will endeavor to do so in the fear of the Lord, and to show the class of persons they operate upon. The lines of demarcation are first drawn in the Old Testament Scriptures. In the third chapter of Genesis we learn the origin of lying spirits, for the serpent, or evil spirit, told our mother Eve that they should not die, when God had told her, that they should die. This we all know, by the fulfillment of the decree that has gone forth unto all living creatures, "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." How true the expression of Jesus on a certain occasion, when he said that the devil was a liar from the beginning; hence we believe that all the attendant evils that followed upon the human family, are the result of yielding to the influence of wicked spirits. It is unnecessary for me to dwell at length here upon what kind of a spirit actuated Cain to slay his brother; or of the spiritual abominations of Sodom and Gomorrah, or of the antediluvian world, or of the lying spirits that the false prophets possessed, and the idol worshipping part of the old world generally.

But as reference is made to the case of Saul, by modern spiritualists (evil), to justify their calling up of the spirits, I will notice the circumstance in a few words. It is recorded in 1st Samuel 28th chapter, and we learn from it these facts: After the Lord had refused to answer Saul in the usual manner (see 6th verse), because he had sinned against the Lord, and the Lord departing from him, he turned to those that had familiar spirits, for counsel. Having learned by his servant whom he sent to hunt him out a familiar spirit, which he finds at Endor, Saul disguises himself and proceeds to a "communication" with the woman. After being sworn to not place her life in danger, and having informed her that he wanted him whom he would name brought up, she enquires, "Whom?" He answers, Samuel. Now Samuel was a true prophet of the Lord, as the sequel will show. It is not said what device the woman used to accomplish Saul's desire; but it is said that Samuel appeared to her. Then she knew that Saul was her patron on this occasion. Saul quiets her tears, and wants to know the forms of the gods, and by her answer Saul knows Samuel. Samuel wants to know why he was disquieted. Saul informs him that he is sore distressed, and that the Lord had refused to answer him and tell him what he should do. Then Samuel gives Saul to understand that he cannot help him; and that what he had prophesied relative to his case must stand, according to the word of the Lord. In 1 Sam. 15: 28, Saul was told that the kingdom should be rent out of his hand, and given to a better than he.

In all this, I see no comfort for evil spiritualists; but we may learn the following facts from the narrative:

1. That an evil spirit could not turn aside the judgment of God, and that good spirit would not.

2. It clearly proves that after the Lord had departed from Saul he sought the company of spirits that in his better days he sought to have destroyed out of the land.

3. That if a good spirit could be called up, it, like in the case of Saul, will refer its disturber back to the word of the Lord. Saul got a "revelation" that was undoubtedly new to him, for he "was sore distressed" at receiving it; and I think if our modern evil spiritualists could call up a good spirit, that they would soon find out the difference between the two kinds of spirits by receiving a distressing "revelation."

Can it be said that an evil spirit ever fully corroborated the Lord's word? We will go to the gospel to see about the matter. In the 4th chapter of Matthew, the Father of all wicked and lying spirits under took to quote the Lord's word to our Savior; and this is the way he did it: "He shall give his angels charge concerning thee, and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone." In Psalms 91: 11, 12, we have it, "For he shall give his angels charge over thee to keep thee in all thy ways; they shall bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone." The Devil was about as successful in "ministering" the truth on this occasion as he was when he gave Eve advice, in the garden of Eden. I mean to say that he lied on both occasions; but in the case of Christ was not successful in having his revision believed.

In Matthew 12th chapter we read that "when the unclean spirit is gone out of a man he walketh in dry places, seeking rest," &c., &c (I fear this is the condition of those that refuse to go "down into the water" as Christ did, to take up the cross and follow him—afraid of getting wet, &c.) Then it is said that after not finding rest he returns to his house, and finding it in a certain condition, takes with him seven other spirits more wicked than himself." Lesson—those that refuse to walk after the "Holy Pattern," have evil spirits to minister to them.

But there is so much recorded in the gospel concerning evil spirits, and the class of persons influenced by them, that I fear a notice of them all would make this article too lengthy, though I must mention one more case—the seven sons of Sceva, a Jew. Acts 19th chapter. Here I find that the evil spirits "ministered" unto them in a way that was not very comforting, though they enjoyed about as much peace of mind on that occasion as many others have that were possessed of evil spirits. It seems as though the evil spirits became insulted at their possessors for calling over them the name of "Jesus whom Paul preached;" and said, "Jesus I know and Paul I know, but who are ye?" as much as to say, you being in our service, have no business to be trying to cast out our brother spirits; for we know that our power is gone, if we become divided. The lesson here taught for evil disposed persons is:

1. That they should not meddle with holy things, either for speculation or to create a sensation.

2. As Jesus said a "kingdom divided against itself cannot stand," therefore, both parties must operate in their respective kingdoms. This circumstance also illustrates the bad effect of trying to overcome evil with evil. Christ and the apostles taught that evil must be overcome with good; and we find all through the gospel the doctrine very beautifully illustrated. Thus we see, that we are fully sustained in the position that we have taken relative to there being two distinct classes of persons on the earth: the one known as the righteous, and the other the wicked; the former being "ministered" unto by good spirits, and the latter by evil spirits.

I further believe that Satan has his ministering spirits, who do, in these last days, minister unto them who do wickedly adhere to false doctrine, which I will try to show by the "word of truth;" but I will first contrast the two kingdoms a little. Christ's kingdom is composed of that class of persons that Paul in the text says shall be "heirs of salvation," which salvation is promised in the gospel, and is obtained by all those that are obedient to all things which are commanded. God has a particular order of things. His children are required to be a separate people from the world, abstaining from the very appearance of evil; doing good unto "all men, especially those that are of the household of faith;" the fruit of which is "joy and peace in the Holy Ghost," and in the end "eternal life." See R.v. 22: 14 In Satan's kingdom I fail to find any particular order of things; but the main point with him seems to be to have the people to fall down and worship him; then, they are at liberty to disregard God's laws in part or in toto. And he has his ministers, who, "transforming themselves into angels of light," teach to take the lives of our fellow-men, and to plunder and steal, in time of war, is right. Also, to gamble, either in the house of God or out of it—reveling in "spiritual wickedness in high places." Some give their approval to drunkenness, idolatry, and dancing, others professing a spurious religion, go about trying to establish their own righteousness by proclaiming that they can work miracles, while, at the same time, they are deceitful workers, advocating and practicing free love. Also the enacting of "seances,"—the forming of circles around tables, for the professed purpose of holding converse with the spirits of the dead, with many other evils too numerous to enumerate here, belong to Satan's kingdom.

Paul in the second chapter to the Ephesians plainly tells his brethren that before they were "quickened," &c., they were under the influence of "the spirit, that now worketh in the children of disobedience;" and, in the 5th chapter he says, that we should "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness; but rather reprove them;" for, says he, "it is a shame even to speak of those things, which are done of them in secret." So I pass the "secret things" by without comment; for there is enough made manifest of the "works of darkness" in our day to speak of. It is a fact, only too well known, that many persons are by the ministration of evil spirits, doing some strange things, or "wonderful works;" and I believe there is a reality about it, for Paul says, that "ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and the tables of devils." 1 Cor. 10: 21. Now if devils have a table, is it not reasonable to conclude that they make some use of it? I believe they do, and, really, Paul's language seems prophetic of these last days, for we find that the devil's children now do gather around a table to hold communion with evil spirits. Evil, because they plainly testify against God; for God said that he had "spoken unto us in these last days by his Son," but devils and evil spirits generally contradict the saying by preaching "another gospel."

I have seen some of the performances of wicked spirits, and do think that there is a great mystery about the matter; but I am not astonished at the "wonderful works" they perform; for the apostle Paul in 2 Thess. 2nd chapter speaks of the "mystery of iniquity" already working, and, by the expression "now letteth" intimates that it will be permitted to continue for a time. More, Paul speaks of the destruction of that "wicked" by the Spirit of the Lord, and adds that remarkable passage of Scripture: "Even him whose coming is after the working of Satan; with all power, and signs, and lying wonders." Now I ask, do we not see and hear of these things on almost every part of the globe? Why are not these "seances," "spiritual rappings," and Satan-influenced, God-dishonoring polygamous, miracle workers foretold in the gospel? I think they are; and these characters have certainly received the promised delusion, to "believe a lie that they all might be damned." Matthew 24: 24, Christ said, "that there should arise false prophets and false Christs, and shall shew great signs and wonders, insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." For a further picture of these sign and wonder-workers, I will go to John the Revelator, 13th chapter, where he in speaking of the beast that he saw coming up out of the earth, says, that "he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire to come down from heaven, on the earth in the sight of men, and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do." Look out, brethren and sisters, for those "rappers" and "miracle workers;" and see that they "keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus," before we credit them with any good designs. Deception is abroad in the land; but thankful are we for the light of heaven's revelation delivered unto us by Jesus our "High Priest." Hear this revelation a little further. In the 16th chapter 13, 14 verses, "Spirits of devils working miracles" are represented by three unclean spirits like frogs, coming out of the mouth of the dragon, and the beast, and the false prophet. Just see how closely the three are related to each other! I cannot imagine what better illustration could have been used to represent the working of these parties than that of a frog—almost always on the move, very noisy, and when taken to task by the word, generally go jumping from one passage of Scripture to another; wresting the Scriptures to their own destruction. Oh, let us, dear pilgrim, not be deceived by these wicked ministering spirits; for truly they are "deceitful workers," transforming themselves into angels of light. But, the gospel detects the whole iniquity working crew, by testifying that "he that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." "He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son. But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." Rev. 21: 7, 8. To know the tree by its fruits is a privilege we all can enjoy.

Beauty.

BY O. P. MOSIER.

The presence of beauty is all-pervading. It unfolds in the flowers of spring. It waves in the branches of the trees, and in the grass at our feet. Indeed it is difficult to conceive of an object that does not possess beauty in some degree. And not only does it permeate small things, but the oceans, the clouds, the falling rain, the gentle dewdrop, the rising and the setting sun, all overflow with beauty.

Color is perhaps the simplest expression of beauty. The eye is so constructed as to delight in the appearance of color. Association has much to do with beauty in color. Thus green is more pleasing to the sense when we associate with it the green pastures and blooming forests. Blue has a stronger expression when compared with the dome of heaven, or the waters of the great deep.

Figure is another expression of beauty. Different forms of figure give different degrees of beauty. A square figure is not so pleasing as a circular or an elliptical, from the fact that the eye is wont to see in circles. The sky seems to be circular when really it is not. The hoary mountain seems to rise in graceful curves and lofty cones, yet it is marred and gashed by ridges and valleys. Motion is also an occasion for the sense of beauty; but where color, figure, and motion combine we have the finest expression of beauty.

The human countenance is the most complex form of beauty. The color is the fair complexion; the lines that note the form of expression is the figure; but there is a third something which we do not clearly understand, that interprets the world of mind, and reflects, like a mirror, the delineations of the immortal soul.

The failing to cultivate a sense of beauty deprives man of his highest enjoyments. If then beauty is so refining in its influences, so exalted in character, so akin to worship, is it not painful to know that so few realize what nature intended they should adore, but live as though earth in all her glory was but a dungeon?

But we have been speaking particularly of beauties in nature; we now turn to notice another kind of beauty; I mean such as is found in the natural arts, and especially in literature. The best books have most beauty. A subject however logical is no subject at all if not set forth in beauty of expression. The first step toward this end is having an agreeable subject. We cannot expect to please if we have nothing but what is calculated to displease. The second step toward securing beauty of expression is to use no word or phrase that has a displeasing effect, but use those that are easy of pronunciation and harmonious in all the bearings.

God's Way and Our Way.

A sincere believer in the truth of the gospel must needs have trouble of mind so long as the question of his own salvation is still undecided. And, at times, this anxiety becomes very painful. He would give his right hand to be assured that he has passed from death unto life. And in order to obtain this assurance he offers prayers, he sheds tears, he consults his Bible, reads good books, seeks the society of the godliest persons he knows, and adds to all this such amendment of life as he can. Still, to his surprise, the blessing does not come. Why? Because he begins at the wrong end, and pursues a wrong method. He is really trying to help God as it were, to do God's own work, and all time so spent is, of course, lost time. While he is thus bemoaning himself, and striving to be accepted, and wondering, perhaps, what more he can do to make himself acceptable, he is answered "never a word." By this awful silence, God is virtually saying to him, "You are ready to do everything else, but you are not ready to take me at my word. You are not willing to be saved in my way."

"But Lord," is the reply, "I am waiting to know that I am accepted."

"And I," is the divine answer, "am waiting to be believed."

Is it not as clear as day where the difficulty lies? Our Father in heaven, having sent Jesus Christ into the world to be our Savior, has also appointed a way of coming to Christ, so plain and simple that the footsteps of a child may run therein. This way is a narrow bridge, and its name is faith. The sinner is told that if he will only cross this little bridge it shall at once bring him to his Savior and insure him everlasting life. He shakes his head and falters. He looks at the waves beneath the bridge, and shudders lest he should fall into them. He says he is laden with sins, whose weight might break down the bridge. Well, does he get rid of those sins by waiting? He hopes he may, and so he goes off and tries to "become better."

After a time he returns to the gulf that separates him from God, but of all the good works and good resolutions he has piled into that flood he sees not one; the bridge he has himself been trying to build, and over which he hoped to pass into the kingdom, has been swept away. Once more he undertakes to parley with his Maker. He tells him that he is "not fit to be accepted." Of course he is not fit. Nobody ever was or ever will be. When did God require him to be fit in order to be accepted?

At this point the reader may object, "But I do not feel enough." When, where has it ever been said, "Feel for Christ, and feeling will find him?" The bridge to be crossed is faith, not feeling. God does not bid you bring to him a certain set of emotions as the reason of his accepting you, nor does he ask you to come full of good works, or to spend weeks and months testing the strength of his bridge by putting one foot on it and then shrinking back. What he requires of you is simply to believe on his only begotten Son, Jesus Christ, as one who died for our sins and rose again for our justification. Christ himself is the eternal rock of our salvation, and trusting in him is the way to be saved.

"In my hand no price I bring, Simply to thy cross I cling."

This is the very essence of the gospel. And while God invites you to put your whole trust in Christ, and to embrace him as your Redeemer at once, without any delay, he also offers to give his Holy Spirit to enable you to do so. What more could you desire?

Oftimes, it is true, there is a series of vain struggles and defeats before the bewildered, troubled soul finds rest in Christ. God does not require them. They are not of his making, or rather, they are the effect of self-love, self-will and unbelief. Those who seek to enter the kingdom of heaven in the spirit of little children have no such conflicts. The jailor passed through no such long struggles and defeats, nor did the eunuch nor did Lydia, nor did Saul of Tarsus. See Acts viii. 26-39; ix. 1-20; xvi 14-40.

But it may be objected that no room is left for repentance, if the moment a man owns himself in the wrong and looks to Christ for salvation he may expect to be forgiven. Is it, then, the amount of penitence that saves a soul, or is it the depth of love in God's heart and faith in that love as manifested in Jesus Christ? Ah, the sinner has nothing, absolutely nothing, to give in exchange for what he receives. He may spend a lifetime in repenting and know not God for want of one moment's believing. And the penitence of one regenerate soul will be a hundred fold deeper, tenderer, than one who knows God only at a distance, and is ignorant of the spiritual beauty and glory of the character that makes sin so exceeding sinful by contrast with itself.

If these few words, then, meet the eye of one who yearns to be reconciled to God, let him not wait an hour in the hope of becoming better, of feeling more, of having a very penitent heart to exhibit as the price of pardon, but do forthwith the one only thing he is asked to do, Believe. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." No immediate token that his faith has saved him may appear, the current of existence may apparently bow on as before, but sooner or later, and according to his faith, it shall be unto him; the new life implanted by divine grace will begin to declare itself. An infant for the season, it will, in due time, grow up into spiritual manhood, and become "perfect in Christ Jesus."—Christian Weekly.

Cheerfulness and a festival spirit fill the soul full of harmony; it composes music for churches and hearts; it makes and publishes glorifications of God; it produces thankfulness and serves the end of charity; and when the oil of gladness runs over, it makes tall and bright emissions of light and holy fires, reaching up a cloud and making joy round about; and therefore, since it is so innocent, and may be so pious and so full of holy advantage, whatsoever can minister to this holy joy, does but forward the work of religion and charity.—Jeremy Taylor.

BY HOWARD MILLER

A letter from Va. asks if there is anything in the custom of planting in the "sign." This being a question of general interest, it may as well form one of the closing articles on this subject. Planting in the sign is a very harmless delusion, a belief in which will hurt no one, nor will it do anyone any good.

If good cultivation and a proper soil are present, the almanac and the moon have nothing whatever to do with the result. It is astonishing to regard this widespread delusion! Without wondering why or how the changes of the moon affect vegetation, people go to an almanac to ascertain when the proper time has come around to plant onions or tomatoes. Many very excellent people believe in it; and now let us reason about it.

If there is anything in the signo business, then those who comply with the almanac's reading ought to have better vegetables than those who do not. But this is not true. Those who raise the earliest and best garden produce, the market gardeners, pay no attention whatever to it. How does it come that they succeed? The vast majority of people who cultivate vegetables never think of an almanac, but consider manure and complete subjection of weeds. The remark has often been made that farmers gardens are poorer supplied than any others. If the sign had anything to do with it they ought to surpass the production of the gardener who neglects it; but a walk through a city market will dispel the illusion.

The same almanac, say Ayer's, goes to many places, and the fact that the sign is one thing at one place and another at a distant point, proves its utter fallacy. In Australia the weather at Christmas is intensely hot. In March garden vegetables are well up in parts of California; and in Florida, below the frost line, vegetables can be grown all the year around.

So, of what use is the sign? The picture of the man on the almanac cover is a purely fanciful invention; and the whole book bears the same relation to plants that the multiplication table does. There is an estimable lady who plants when the "sign is up," whatever that is, to make the plants "reach up;" another plants when the sign is down to make them root and grow well. Both succeed, and the sign gets the credit. There is a time to butcher, a time to shingle roofs, to build fence, and to do nearly everything. What a terrible state of affairs would be entailed upon the country if some stupid almanac maker should get it wrong in his book, and in a half million of families everything should go wrong for a whole year. I wonder if the almanac makers and the printers are alive to the mi-chief they can do and their immense responsibility?

Five Flosses.

Dear reader; as pride is on the increase, and is nourished in many of the different religious denominations of the day, and some of our own members are, we think, a little too fashionable with flosses, curls, laces and ribbons, I have selected the following. It may be of some benefit, at least, to them that are halting between two opinions, and are almost persuaded to come out on the Lord's side and make a full surrender. I will now give it as it is recorded in the (Warrentown, Va) Index.

"I made a call the other day, and found Anna Harper, Mrs. Harper's little daughter, ten years old, looking very sad. She had been crying hard and was still frowning, and pouting, so I could not help asking, 'What is the matter with Anna?'

"'I am ashamed to tell you,' said her mother.

"'You may tell,' cried Anna, in an injured tone.

"'She is crying because she cannot have five flosses on her new dress.'

"'Yes,' added the little girl, 'when Emma Paul has five, and Eva and Jane Dearborn, and'

"'Five flosses!' I exclaimed. 'Children often have good reason to cry, but I never heard of a complaint like this.'

"'We shall have to give our little daughter to some rich woman,' said her mother gravely. 'Her papa and I shall hardly be able to keep her.'

"'But do you think the five flosses can make up for the papa and mamma which she will lose?' I asked.

"'I am afraid so,' said her mother, 'since she is not willing to be guided by our tastes and wishes. We think it wrong to spend so much time and money in dressing up a dress. We want her to be neatly and prettily dressed; but dressing up dresses, that is quite another matter. We have no time or money to spare for that.'

"'Besides, making children look like dolls and rag-babies, peacocks and frights!' I said.

"Anna began to wipe her eyes.

"'Neatness, Simplicity and Good Taste are the best dress-makers, and these I always consult in making Anna's clothes,' said her mother.

"'Which is the reason her dresses are so becoming to her,' I added.

'People turn away with disgust from children loaded with finery and flosses. They should rather be pitied, I suppose, poor things.'

Afterward when I saw Anna in her new dress it had not a single floss on it and she looked as fair and as sweet as a lily. Our bodies should be nicely cared for, our clothing should be tasteful neat and becoming; but any dressing which shows it has taken a great deal of time pains and money to prepare, shows we set a greater value on display than becomes modest and Christian People.

Friendly reader, I have written this piece for the youths department: it is intended for the young folks; but older ones may learn a good lesson from it and be benefited thereby, for we think it harmonizes with the plain teachings of the Bible.

Couldn't Stop.

This is the way a great many get into difficulty—"they get a-going and they can't stop." The boy who tells lies began at first to stretch the truth a little—to tell a large story—till he came out a full grown liar.

Two boys began by battering each other, till they got a-going and couldn't stop. They separated with black eyes and bloody noses!

Did you hear about the young man stealing from his master's drawer?—He came from the country a promising boy. But the rest of the clerks went to the theatre and smoked, and he thought he must do so too. He began thinking he would try it once or twice. He got a-going and could not resist the temptation when he knew there was money in the drawer. He got a-going—he will stop in prison.

Some young men were, some years ago, in the habit of meeting together in a room at the public house, to "enjoy themselves"—to drink and smoke. One of them, as he was going there one evening, began to think there might be danger in the way. He stopped and considered a moment, and then said to himself, "Right about face!" He dropped his cigar, went back to his room and was never seen at the public house again. Six of the young men followed his example. The rest got a-going, and could not stop till they landed most of them, in drunkards' graves. Beware, boys, of the first cigar or chew of tobacco. Be sure, before you start, that you are in the right way, for when you are going down hill it is hard to stop!

GOD does not graduate his love by our moods, but rather by our conditions, and our wants recommend us most urgently to him. The child cannot understand why pain should come to its little body, nor can the mother even explain it; but over it, in its suffering, the mother leans yearningly and pityingly, and the sight of the dear face is a help to the sufferer. And so we conceive, over all sick souls, over all be-ware hearts, over all distracted minds, the face bends pityingly, lovingly; and this thought has given comfort to us many times, and may, peradventure, help you.—Golden Rule.

A PICTURE OF A SINNER AND OF A SAINT.

"Ye are like unto whited sepulchres."—MATT. xxiii. 27.

"Ye are the temple of the living God."—2 COR. vi. 16.

Remarkably bold and striking were many of the figures of our Lord. Such is the character of the one heading our article, chosen by him to represent the hypocrisy and depravity of the wicked Jews. "Ye are like unto whited sepulchres." While they were strict in observing such rules and precepts as gave them a fair moral character with the people, they were like the beautified and white-washed sepulchres of the Jews, which were full of dead men's bones and of all uncleanness."

The apostle's figure to represent the holy character of Christians who are re-veined in heart, and dedicated to the service of God, is appropriate and expressive.

It is drawn from, and suggested by the glorious building that bore the name of Solomon's temple, whose internal glory, beauty, and holiness, when the presence of the Lord was manifested in it, far surpassed the beauty of its external appearance. "Ye are the temple of the living God."

These expressive figures describing men as sepulchres and temples, present us with the extremes of good and evil, of what is attractive and repulsive, of blessedness and wretchedness, which are found in human nature. Man's capacity for goodness and meanness, for holiness and sin, for happiness and misery, are such as make him occupy a very peculiar position in the creation of God. We are destined to shine as moral stars in the dwelling-place of God, or to be "wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever." Such being our destiny, and such the variety of moral character that obtains among men, the contrast indicated in the striking figures of Jesus and Paul, between saints and sinners, is just and suggestive.

The sepulchre is dark. Job describes death as "a land of darkness, as darkness itself; and of the shadow of death, with out any order, and where the light is as darkness." Job x. 22. No light enters the massive sepulchres, or the dismal grave. And why should it? It cannot impart life to those dead forms though they once moved and breathed. How dreary and dull are the mansions of the dead!

And what is the state of the unconverted heart? Is it not as dark as the grave? "He that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes." 1 John i. 11. The office of the preacher is to turn people "from darkness to light."—Acts xxvi. 18. Darkness is a term that is frequently used in the Scriptures to represent the unregenerate heart. Ignorance is one of the ideas associated with the word. Darkness is a striking emblem of ignorance and error. As the curtain of night falls, all the beauties of the landscape become obscure, or, at least, indistinct. And as sin and error possess the soul, moral blindness and darkness follow, and all that is beautiful and good and pure disappears, and the mental world, like the natural when deprived of light, becomes enshrouded with darkness. The apostle when describing the effects of sin upon the ancient Gentile world, says, "Their foolish heart was darkened."

But there is corruption as well as darkness in the sepulchre. "It is sown in corruption," says the apostle, when representing the burying of the dead, preparatory to the resurrection. How offensive is the body in the sepulchre when passing through the process of decay and dissolution! "By this time he is offensive, for he has been dead four days," said Martha to our Lord, in regard to her brother.

And how exceedingly corrupt does sin render the human character! "The whole head is sick and the whole heart is faint. From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it; but wounds, and bruises, and putrefying sores." Isa. i. 5, 6. "For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies: these are the things that defile the man." Matth. xv. 19, 20. Here is moral corruption, indeed.—"And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." Gen. vi. 5. The ante-diluvian world in its moral aspect was as one great sepulchre filled with the moral carcases of "men of corrupt minds." The moral purity of God could no longer endure such provocations, and having given ample opportunities for reformation, he said, "I will destroy man whom I have created, from the face of the earth." And it accordingly was done.

Death reigns in the sepulchre. Here is his power manifested. From these desolate regions life is excluded. Here the sun never shines. While there is life everywhere else, here there is only death. There is no spring to plant, no summer to mature, no autumn to gather. Winter, cold and dreary, breathes his icy breath, and in the absence of the sun's invigorating rays, no signs of life appear. Oh, how dreary is the grave!

And the heart of the sinner is as void of spiritual life as the sepulchre is of natural life. There is no spiritual foliage to ornament the spirit of the sinner, no flowers to give it fragrance, and no fruits of righteousness to give it value or candor it to the heavenly Husbandman who has spent so much labor upon it to make it fruitful. It is barren, withered and dead. There is no life of God in it—no germ of immortality to expand into eternal life.—Oh, how deplorable is the state of the soul that is dead in "trespasses and sins!"

But we will turn from the dreary sepulchre to a more beautiful aspect of our subject. "Ye are the temple of the living God." Beautiful and grand is the imagery selected to represent the character of the saints. And the contrast between the sepulchre, the figure used to represent the sinner, and the temple, that made use of to represent the saints, is remarkable.

We have seen that there is darkness in the sepulchre, but there is light in the temple. "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all." 1 John i. 5. And if we are the temple of God, he will dwell in us, and diffuse abroad in us the light of his glorious presence. In the account we have of the dedication of the temple, it is said, "And it came to pass when the priests were come out of the holy place, that the cloud filled the house of the Lord, so that the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud: for the glory of the Lord filled the house of the Lord." 1 Kings viii. 10, 11. And the apostle Peter in speaking to Christians, and in reminding them of their privileges, says, "The spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you." 1 Pet. iv. 14. As the glory of the Lord came down and filled the ancient temple, so will that glory rest upon every genuine believer, who is a "temple of the living God." "This honor have all the saints." Psa. clix. 9.

We have seen that in the sepulchre there is corruption, and in the sinner there is moral impurity. In the ancient temple there was purity. Everything belonging to the house of the Lord was holy. The dress and person of the priest and all the furniture of the temple were to be holy. And how holy should Christians be, who are "the temple of the living God." "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth," Eph. iv. 29; "Be ye holy in all manner of conversation," 1 Peter i. 15; "Bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ," 2 Cor. x. 5. Such are the admonitions to holiness, to such as bear the name and character of the "temple of the living God."

We have seen that death reigns in the sepulchre, and hence it is the symbol of death, pain, and wretchedness. But as Christians are "the temple of the living God," that temple with the living God in it, symbolizes the highest type of life—of immortality—of life in Christ, and with Christ.

Reader, to which class do you belong, to that represented by the "whited sepulchre," or by the "temple of the living God"? Which class is the preferable one, you can readily decide. If you belong to the class represented by the "temple" keep the sanctuary pure. And in it God will meet you, and hold communion with you. -Are you in darkness and death? If so, you surely do not want to remain there. And you need not. The Savior has said, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live." John v. 25. He can change a tomb to a temple, a life of fear and wretchedness to one of hope and joy, and a sinner into a saint. And if application is made to him, he will do it. We would give no liberty that might subserve the cause of error.

WERE WE BLAMABLE?

In our issue of June 6th, we published two articles on "Secrecy," one in favor of secret societies, and one against such societies. As a number of articles against secret societies had appeared in our paper, a Mr. Whitmire, of Virginia, who acknowledges himself a member of one of those societies, wrote an article in their defense, or more particularly in defense of Odd Fellowship. This article was called out by one against secret societies, written by Bro. S. Thomas, of Philadelphia, and published in the second number of the present volume of our paper.

As Mr. Whitmire wished to be heard, and we, having the utmost confidence in the ability of the truth to maintain its ground in regard to secret societies, as well as to every other organization having error in it, we felt like yielding to our generous feelings, and giving him an opportunity to be heard in defense of Odd Fellowship. But wishing to guard the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN against the errors contained in Mr. Whitmire's well written article, and to avail ourselves of the suitable opportunity of presenting to our readers the "more excellent way" of anti-secretness, we took the precaution to publish a reply by Bro. R. H. Miller, to Mr. Whitmire's article, in the same number of our paper, that his article was published in. By this course, we thought truth would lose nothing, and that the chance for gaining would be decidedly in its favor.

But it seems that either our design was not understood, or that at least one of our subscribers differs with us in regard to the propriety of our course. For we received a letter a few days ago disapproving of the publication of Mr. Whitmire's article, and giving us a pretty severe reprimand for permitting it to appear in our paper. We feel pretty well assured that the brother who reproved us for our course in regard to the matter under consideration, did not fully comprehend the situation of things, or he would not have been quite so positive in his remarks, or so severe in his censure. We therefore would look at some principles which should not be lost sight of, and which we think deserve our consideration.

Controversy in our Christian papers should be judiciously restricted. Much of it, whether between brethren or between brethren and others, is not likely to be profitable. But a wise and candid comparison upon subjects upon which a difference of judgment obtains, may sometimes result in good. And for us, as a conductor of a Christian journal, whose mission it is to "bear testimony to the truth," which can be done to best advantage by having the error which is antagonistic to the truth which we are laboring to promote, present and in immediate contrast with the truth, to exclude every thing from our paper that conflicts with our own views, or with those of our brotherhood, does not seem to be in harmony with the free and generous spirit of the truth.

It was said by Jefferson, the great American statesman, that error may be tolerated, if truth is left free to oppose it. Truth is powerful, for it is divine.—And those who appreciate truth and have faith in its divine origin and in its great power, will hopefully watch its course, and confidently expect its victory in every conflict. The Lord has said, "The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell his dream, and he that hath my word let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord." Jer. xxiii. 28. This seems to imply that those who have the dreamy errors of superstition and idolatry, should have liberty to tell them, but then those errors should be faithfully met by a just and faithful application of the words of God; and this being done, the result need not be feared, for it will be good. For since the truth is as much more valuable than error as the wheat is more valuable than the chaff, its value will be likely to be appreciated, and its superior claims acknowledged. God had confidence in the success of his own word, and so should we. Upon this principle we think a prudential freedom may be given to those who differ from us to state their views, if it is done in a respectful manner. Discretion should be used, or our "good may be evil spoken of" and our liberty be made a "cloak for maliciousness."

In our humble judgment a course somewhat like the foregoing is not objectionable, and with such a view of the case, we admitted Mr. Whitmire's article. As to show how differently brethren view things, we state the following fact: The mail that brought the letter of censure from one brother, also brought one from another brother, containing money for several extra copies of the number of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN which contained Mr. Whitmire's article and brother Miller's examination of it. The brother who sent the money, remarked that he wanted his neighbors who were members of secret societies to read Bro. Miller's reply to Mr. Whitmire's article. He believed that the arguments in favor of secret societies had been successfully met, and that both articles might be read without causing the truth to sustain any loss. So we thought, and published both articles.

We have given the reasons to some length for doing as we did, believing that our position as editor, and the difficulties connected with that position are not understood and appreciated by many, and that if they were, the censure that is often passed upon our course would be withheld, or if not withheld, greatly softened. We can assure our brethren that we are very desirous that the influence of our position, and that of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, may not be abused, but applied in the best manner for the promotion of Christian truth.

MINUTES OF OUR DISTRICT MEETING.

At the close of our District Meeting of Western Pennsylvania, a desire was expressed by several of the brethren to have the Minutes of the meeting. But as there was some doubt of the propriety of publishing them, the matter was left undecided. As the Annual Meeting has now granted the privilege to the District Meetings to publish or print their minutes for the use of the District, we shall publish the minutes of our meeting as soon as we can do so. We have had a good deal of work to do since A. M. in getting the Minutes of A. M. ready for publication, and in doing some work on the Report, that we had to do, and we have not found time yet to publish the Minutes of our D. M. But we will publish them as soon as possible, and when published, our brethren in the District will be informed of the circumstance.

THE REPORT OF A. M.

Our reporter, Mr. Baker, is writing out his report and preparing it for the press, and as soon as it is ready, we will have it printed, and send it out to those ordering it. Some time is required to get it ready, but we will hasten the work as rapidly as possible. In the meanwhile we should be pleased to receive orders for the work. Single copies, 25 cents; 12 copies, $2 50.

BEWARE OF IMPOSITION.

At our late A. M. we were told by different brethren that one of our agents,—who, by the way, is not a brother,—has been selling our book, THE JEWISH PASS-OVER AND THE LORD'S SUPPER, for as high as $1 65 per copy. His name was given and we have struck it from our list of Agents. He can sell no more for us until we have satisfactory evidence that he has made restitution to the parties whom he has swindled, and also of a thorough reformation. We want it to be understood that none of our agents are allowed to sell the book for more than one dollar.

While on this subject we will say to our agents everywhere, that hereafter they shall sell the book at 85 cents per copy. We make this deduction because of the general complaint of hard times, and not because we think the book is not worth $1 00. We want to do all we can to give it an extensive circulation; because we feel that we hold the truth on this subject, and also that our defense is of such a nature as to convince every honest seeker after truth. Get your friends thoroughly aroused on this subject; be sure they earnestly desire to know the truth, and the whole truth, on this subject, and then give them this book to help them in their investigations, and you need not fear the result. Having now reduced the price, and offering the book, as we do, for the small sum of 85 cents, may we not hope that very many of the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN will embrace this opportunity to secure the book. We would like to fill one thousand orders next week. B.

TO OUR CONTRIBUTORS.

Although our manuscript box is not empty, we find that it is in such a condition that it is very difficult, and, in our present throng, utterly impossible, to select from it matter to make up an interesting paper. With this fact before us, we invite our contributors to come to our aid; and not only to our aid, but to "the help of the Lord." Let us have good stirring articles on vital subjects. We should also have a better supply of church news than we have had for several weeks past. This is the season of lovefeasts, when our members are refreshed, our churches strengthened, and many souls are born again. Let us have the good tidings for the benefit and comfort of our readers. BRO. Wm. Bucklew has changed his address from Brushy Run W. Va., to Pleasant Dale, Hampshire Co., W. Va.

BRO. G. W. Sellers of Watson Station, Seneca Co., Ohio, says there was a Pocket Bible left at his father's, at the time of the District Meeting on the 6th of May. As there is no name in it, this way is taken to find its owner.

BRO. S. H. Bashore, formerly of Missouri, and late of Antioch, Ind., will spend some little time with us. His correspondents will, accordingly, address him until the 12th of July, Meyersdale, Somerset Co., Pa.

SISTER Lovina M. Smith, of Mound Valley, Kan., after sending two dollars for the Danish Mission Fund, and seventy-five cents to pay for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN for a poor niece, says: "I would love to send more, and will try to send more when I can; but I am a widow, with a little daughter six years old and a rather limited income: have poor health and no home."

This recalls to our mind a question asked by a brother not a great while ago. He wondered whether we knew why the Danish and Stein Funds were not more liberally contributed to. We confess that we were a little puzzled for an answer. We looked at the causes, at the ends to be accomplished, from every side, and they invariably appeared to us as being worthy of the support and encouragement of every brother and sister. The question was asked by who one seemed to be conscientiously opposed to the movements, and this beguiled us into an illusory atmosphere and path to seek an answer. If this poor widow who "hath cast more in than all they who have cast into the treasury" (Mark 12; 43), had asked the question, the answer would have been ready in a moment. If the brother had, as God hath prospered him, contributed $10 00 to these funds, and had then asked his question, we could have answered at once. We are ready now to answer such questions in a few words. B.

CERTIFICATES OF MEMBERSHIP.—For some time past we have been out of Certificates of Membership. We have quite a number of orders on hand, which we will endeavor to fill in a few days. Then, too, we shall be prepared to fill orders promptly, and will try to do so. B.

POOR FUND.

Under this head we acknowledge what is donated to assist in sending the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN to the poor.

Correspondence.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood.

In Memory of Our Departed Mother.

Upon receiving the sad intelligence of the death of our dear old mother, the mind has been drawn forcibly to the past, and hence we feel pressed to pen a few thoughts, or solemn reflections, intended more particularly for our relations and friends who are scattered through different parts of the country.

Frances Witwer was the youngest of the family of Jacob and Barbara Sensenig (pronounced Sensenay) deceased. She was born December 15th, 1789, in Lancaster Co., Pa., and died April 30th, 1876, at her residence near her birth-place; hence, aged 86 years 4 months and 14 days. Her ancestors were principally all Mennonites. She, however, never united with the church, although she always held her Mennonite connections and friends in high esteem and much respect. Her parents were respectable members, and grand father Witwer was a prominent minister in said church; and as mother was brought up in that faith, it was thought rather strange in her never uniting as a member of the Mennonite church. She, however, was inclined to piety, warmth and zeal in making the Christian profession, and contending that there was a decline in those traits of the Christian character, to a great extent, in their fraternity, she commenced attending the meetings of the Brethren, who occasionally held meetings in the vicinity where she resided, then known as the extreme north east part the old Conestoga church. The leading ministers then were Jacob Pfautz, Christian Bomberger, and Samuel Myers. In the year 1836 and 1837, as near as memory serves me, there was quite a revival in the Conestoga congregation. Brother John Price, from Coventry, William Price, from Indian Creek, J. H. Umstad and John Sprogle, from Greentree, and others, were invited to hold meetings in this neighborhood. We remember well the time when our esteemed brother James Quinter (then quite young) accompanied some of those brethren and assisted in the services; also sister Sarah Major, (then sister Riter) visited this settlement. The result was a great awakening, and during this time our mother united with the church, and was baptized by elder John Price, of Coventry, I think in the year 1836, and continued a consistent and warm member and friend to the cause of Christ until the time of her death, making her membership about forty years. She never was a Sectarian. Her mantle of charity was large; although a strong believer and advocate of the principles and doctrines of the German Baptist Brethren, she nevertheless still leant bound with the ties of Christian affection to all God-fearing friends. She loved the pious, the good, the holy. Well do we remember of her often making the remark, "The fruits, yea, the walk conduct and conversation, are the true marks and traits of the Christian character."

She died resigned to the will of the Lord, and seemed to retain her good mind until her death, and we hope shall arise with the sanctified in the first resurrection to reign with the saints in glory. Three sons and three daughters survive her. The oldest of the sons (Dan.) and the youngest (Isaac) reside near her late residence, at New Holland, Lancaster Co., Pa.; two daughters (Leah and Barbara) still reside at the old homestead, and sister Susanna, wife of brother William Burkholder, in Asbland Co., Ohio. The sisters are all members. The writer lives at Hamilton, Mo.

Thus has our dear mother passed away, full of years, and the comfort to us is that we sorrow not as those who have no hope.

Funeral services by brethren Christian Roop, Joseph Meyers, and Samuel Harley, from Rev. 22:14, to a large collection of relatives and friends.

Our Sabbath Schools.

My Dear Brother:

I feel that our church is behind the times on this subject. We are commanded to bring up our children in the fear and admonition of the Lord; and how can we better do it than by teaching them the word of divine inspiration? "The gospel is good for the Adult, but it does not meet the wants of the youth and children!" Let us remove the stigma from our church that is cast at us that we are against Sabbath-schools. Other churches know that their members are multiplied from their Sabbath-schools. This the brethren have to learn yet. I speak of the western churches. We pay no salary to the ministers of our churches, others do and support their Sabbath schools too. Then let us have our schools in every church. Let us gather our loved ones together, and teach them the word of God in its original purity; and when they grow up they will join in with us, and become pilgrims, and will journey with us to that land above. Brethren, is this your wish? Do you want your sons to meet you where parting is no more? Sisters, where are many of your daughters to-day? Are they in the church with you, or are they out in the world, surrounded by temptation? Gather all your children into the Sunday-school, and teach them the word of God, and the meditorial power of Jesus Christ; for he is the chief corner stone. Brethren, take this matter to heart and study on it, and be up and doing while it is called to day, for to-morrow with you may never come. Go to work and organize your schools. Thou art the man. Do this thing, and the Lord will bless thee in thy work; and report to our editors with statistics for next year's almanac.

A Few Reasons Why I Left the Universalists and Became a German Baptist.

First, I will state that I was a Universalist for a number of years, and really believed it to be true. Now I believe it to be false, and I will try to tell why I believe it false. God's holy truth is against it; for we read in Matth. 5:20, "For I say unto you, that except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." Matth. 6:19, 20, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." See also Matth. 7:13, 14, and in connection with this I will cite you to its parallel, Luke 13:23, 29. Also, 1 Tim. 6:17, 19. Another passage of Scripture bearing on the same point, reads as follows: "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." Col. 3:1. The apostle is here speaking to his brethren in Christ, who consequently were in the enjoyment of all the blessings pertaining to Christians in this life. These persons he commands to seek those things which are above. But, as if this were not sufficiently definite, he specifies where the things are, by saying, "where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." Did the apostle command them to seek for those things knowing that they could be had without seeking as well as with it? See Jas 4:4, and its parallel in 1 John 2:15, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." Can any person be saved or happy when the love of God is not in him? Many more passages might be quoted; and by referring to those already quoted, and commenting upon them, it will appear to any reasonable person that they are arrayed against the Universalist.

But not only are the Scriptures opposed to such a doctrine, but sound reasoning. I shall lay before you some objections for not believing in Universal salvation.

I cannot account for that deep solicitude which Christ and his apostles manifested for the salvation of immortal souls. That they were deeply solicitous for the salvation of their hearers, admits not of doubt or dispute. But why should they have been so if all were sure of heaven?

On this ground, I cannot account for the bitter opposition which the wicked exhibited to the preaching of Christ and his apostles. If in their preaching they advocated the doctrine that all will be saved, why did they meet with persecution and distress from wicked men? Who can tell?

The preaching of Christ and his apostles often excited deep anxiety in the impenitent to secure the salvation of their souls. How can we account for this fact, if their preaching made them sure of heaven? But let us hear the Divine Spirit of Prophecy at the close of the Holy Book. "If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book; and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book." Rev. 22: 18, 19. Now is it possible for any man to be saved after the plagues spoken of in this book are added to him, and his part is taken out of the book of life, and the things written therein, and out of the holy city? Surely not. And is it possible for any man to be saved who has refused to lay up treasures in heaven—refused to "seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God"—utterly failed to lay up a good foundation against the time to come, that he may lay hold on eternal life? This is all that I will say on this subject.

As I have given some of the reasons for leaving the Universalists, I will now give some reasons why I am a German Baptist.

First, I suppose that it is admitted that the New Testament is the revealed will of God, which Jesus Christ brought down from heaven; and I take it for the man of my counsel. It may be asked why I am not a Regular Baptist. Well, I do not understand the New Testament Scriptures as they do. The word of God teaches me, "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of God through faith. When Christ gave the commission, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," I believe in order to fulfill that part of the commission it requires three actions; and as Donnegan says, "To immerse repeatedly into a liquid." I do not believe that it can be done by one action any more than Pilate could write the superscription or the accusation of Christ by one action. It was written in Hebrew and Greek and Latin. And now suppose that Pilate should have said unto the Jews, I will write the accusation in Hebrew and Greek and Latin, and then commenced in the Latin, I do not suppose that he could have made the Jews believe that he wrote in Hebrew and Greek at the same time that he wrote the Latin, and that by one action. Neither do I believe that a minister can baptize in the name of the Father, and in the name of the Son, and in the name of the Holy Ghost by giving a person a dip at the time or naming of the Holy Ghost. Sometimes they say amen and then give a dip. That looks a little like baptizing into the amen and not according to the commission.

I have already quoted a part of the commission, and I will now quote the balance; "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen." In this part of the commission I believe that feet-washing is implied, from the fact that the washing of feet took place before Christ was crucified, and of course the commission was given after he arose from the grave. He commanded feet washing in the 13th chapter of John, commencing at the 13th verse: "Ye call me Master and Lord; and ye say well, for so I am. If I, then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." The object of this washing by the Savior himself was to set his disciples an example of humility and love. He also uses it to set forth a spiritual cleansing which they must receive from him. If the disciples needed cleansing in that day and age of the world, when they were daily with their blessed Master, and under his direct influence, how is it that we do not need that spiritual cleansing by obeying Jesus? I suppose, if some who deny that Jesus instituted feet washing as a church ordinance had been there at that night, and Jesus had approached them with a basin of water to wash their feet, they would have said, "Lord, thou shalt never wash our feet; for there is no need of it. We believe on Jesus Christ, and call on him, and this is sufficient to secure us a home in heaven." Would not Jesus have said unto them as he did to Peter, "If I wash you not, you have no part with me?"

I have now given a few reasons for not believing the Universalist doctrine, and a few for believing as I do. These reasons are submitted in the hope that some good may result.

Editors Primitive Christian:

SIR:—Among the many letters received making inquiry about this country, and the inducements and advantages offered to those who are seeking homes in the west, we find quite a number from members of your denomination; and for their information, I will, by your leave, state some facts and figures in regard to this country.

First, and most interesting to them, is the fact that there are already quite a number of the Brethren settled in this country. William Smith, A. W. Miller and others, being settled near together, these, with others here and those expected, will soon make a strong colony of your people, and thus enjoy the advantages of unity in Christian, social, and business matters.

As to the country, Pawnee county is in south-eastern Nebraska. The lay of the country is gently rolling, having a goodly share of wood land, excellent building stone, abundance of stock water from springs and streams; plenty of coal in the immediate vicinity of the brethren mentioned; good soil, fine climate, very free from malarious and pulmonary complaints; with social advantages fully up to the average, having good school buildings in nearly every district. With these essential advantages, farms and homes can be made at prices which will warrant those wishing to locate in the west to come and see our country; and I can assure them of a cordial reception by their brethren here; and for myself and others, not of your order, I may add, that we will cheerfully give any information and assistance in our power to promote the settlement among us of all who may be represented by your worthy brethren already referred to. I will promptly reply to all correspondence. Address as above.

Waterloo Sabbath School.

Brother Quinter:

According to previous appointment, the Waterloo congregation organized a Sabbath School, immediately after morning worship, March 19th. The following brethren and friends were elected and appointed officers and teachers: Superintendent, L. R. Peifer; Assistant Superintendent, H. Snyder; Secretary, R. B. Leatherman; Treasurer, J. Hildebrand; Teacher of primer Class, J. Speicher; Female Testament Class, Miss Anna Speicher; Male Testament Class, R. B. Leatherman; Female Bible Class, L. R. Peifer; Male Bible Class, J. M. Miller.

A committee consisting of C. P. L. Roberts, Dr. H. C. McKinley and R. B. Leatherman was appointed to draft a constitution. As this is the first Sabbath-school ever conducted in this city by the Brethren, also, the first that brother Peifer ever superintended and the first one I ever attended, I hope the increasing interest manifested will be sufficient encouragement to all to make all of it that can be in a Sabbath School and that its good results may shine as a candle set upon a stand. We will strive earnestly to cultivate the minds of those in our charge to the good cause, and endeavor equally hard to fill my empty mind with the knowledge of the pleasant truths of God's word,

R. B. LEATHERMAN, Secretary.

Waterloo, Iowa, June 7th, 1876.

In Memory of Sister Margarette Ockerman.

Sister Margarette Ockerman departed this life April the 13th, 1876, after a protracted illness of more than seven years, which she bore with Christian fortitude. Her age was 76 years 7 months and 7 days, of which nearly 55 years were spent in the service of our Lord and Master. She lived an exemplary christian life, which was worthy of imitation by us all.

Many who read this notice will remember the happy seasons of worship they have enjoyed in my parents' house, for their house was always open to receive the Brethren, and many have been made welcome and shared the earthly blessings which God so bountifully bestowed upon them.

Sister Ockerman was the mother of ten children, six of whom preceded her to the spirit land; five having died in infancy, and the sixth, Mary Ann Parker, died a few years ago in Preble Co. O, but not without having made that necessary preparation to meet her God. We feel assured that their spirits all rest in peace, awaiting that blessed resurrection morn, when they shall be raised in the likeness of their redeemer. May God grant by his assisting grace, that we, the four children who are yet living, may double our diligence in the making of our election sure in Christ, that we may, as an endless chain, be so connected as to make one unbroken family in heaven; and may the example, advice and counsel of our parents, with the call of the Savior, sound with such distinction that it may continually ring in our ears while we are pilgrims here below, so that, when we are done with the shores of time, and are called, one by one, to eternity, we may share the bliss of the faithful.

The funeral services which took place in Prehle Co., Ohio, were conducted by Eld. Abram Younce and brother Nathan Haywood, after which the body was conveyed to the Sugar-Hill graveyard for burial, there to await the resurrection. How sad it makes us feel to return to the home of our parents, when we can no more take hold of their hands, which have administered so often to our wants, when we could not help ourselves, and no more hear those kind words of warning, which we have so often heard.

JOHN OCKERMAN.

District Meeting of South-Western Missouri.

Our District Meeting was held in the Mineral Creek church, Johnson county, Mo., 14 miles south of Warrensburg.—The congregations comprising said district were generally represented. The meeting passed off as pleasantly as could be expected, as the congregations are made up of members formerly of different States.

To give the brotherhood at large some knowledge of what we are anxious should obtain on different subjects, as a district that is sound in the faith of the gospel as believed and practiced by the Brethren generally, we ask for the publication of the following.

1st. Resolved, by the Southern District of Missouri, That we will labor to hinder and prevent the introducing of musical instruments into the houses of members of this South-western District, taking this as the import of the decisions of A. M. on this subject.

2nd. What is the mind of the meeting in reference to brethren wearing a full beard? and will it approve of publishing our conclusions on this subject in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN?

Ans.—We cannot approve of the brethren wearing a full beard, for such has never been, to our knowledge, the order of the Brethren (or Christian church) at any time; hence gives offense to many orderly, faithful members, and we will labor kindly, yet faithfully to maintain in this respect the order of the brotherhood, and order to have these conclusions printed in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN and copied by Pilgrim and Vindicator.

3rd. What will this District say in reference to members erecting plain buildings (houses and barns or otherwise) as a Christian duty, and explain what is a plain building?

Ans.—Let all the churches be watchful in this duty, against members uselessly spending money in superfluous additions to their buildings (such as bay windows or other unnecessary worldly forms), and in unnecessary finish and gay painting (which we have to bear often that our brethren in Eastern and North-eastern States, who are rich and dress plain, yet go in and out, or live in houses of much unnecessary expense), and we hereby announce to our members that a want a regard to this decision subjects them to complaint and to answer to their respective congregations for said offense.

4th. This District is so anxious for union and oneness of practice that we send up a petition to A. M. asking that the meeting labor to not permit the subject of feet-washing to be agitated so as to allow two modes of said ordinance to be practiced at pleasure as the order of the church, but to have but one order for both Jew and Gentile.

The meeting was organized by appointing John Harshey to keep order, and S. S. Mohler and David L. Williams, clerks.

JOHN HARSHEY.

Announcements.

The brethren of the Monroe county church, Iowa, intend to hold a communion meeting July 1st and 2nd, at the house of Daniel Miller, 2 1/2 miles southeast of Frederick station, to commence at half past three o'clock, p. m.

DANIEL MILLER.

June 12, 1876.

MARRIAGES.

By the undersigned, June 8th, 1876. Mr. JOSEPH G. CARROLL and Sister ELIZABETH J. NEWCOMER, both of Fayette county, Pa.

JOS. I. COVER.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Salimony church, Ind., May 2nd, 1876, Sister LOVINA HOOVER, wife of Bro. Samuel G. Hoover, aged 25 years 5 months and 27 days. Sister Hoover was a daughter of Bro. Jacob Dilling and Sister Elizabeth Hosler. She leaves a husband, two small children, a mother, stepfather, and four sisters, all members of the church. She also had a father, sister, brother, and a little son who preceded her in death. She became a member of the church at the age of 16 years, and lived a faithful sister until death. Disease, lung fever and blot of the heart, which took her off in almost a second of time, Funeral services by the Brethren, from Rev. xiv. 12-13, to a large concourse of sympathizing friends. DANIEL SHIDLER.

[Pilgrim please copy.]

Near Mulberry Grove, Crawford Co., Kansas, May 30th, 1876, Bro. JACOB F. DALE, aged 45 years 7 months and 12 days. Disease, typhoid fever. He leaves a wife and nine children to mourn their loss, but we hope our loss is his eternal gain. He was a member of the Brethren church about 24 years, and served as deacon for the last seven years. He was buried near Girard, Kansas. The funeral sermon is to be preached hereafter. CORNELIUS P. DALE.

[Pilgrim please copy.]

In the Conestoga district, Lancaster Co., Pa., April 30, 1876, FRANCIS WITWER, aged 86 years 4 months and 14 days. She was sick nearly four weeks with erysipelas fever. She suffered in her sickness, but was patient, retaining her senses most of the time and willing to die. She was a sister in the Brethren church over forty years and tried to live a Christian life. She was a widow over forty years, and was the mother of eight children, six of whom are still living. To them she showed a good example, and gave them good advice. She was also a grandmother and great-grandmother. Her maiden name was Sensesing. She lived and died near the place where she was born. Funeral occasion improved by brethren Joseph Myers, Christian Rupp, and Samuel Hartley. Text, Rev. xxii. 14.

In the Grove district, Miami county, Ohio, June 9th, 1876, our beloved sister, SARAH STUDEBAKER, aged 46 years 4 months and 9 days. The deceased was the wife of Bro. Isaac Studemaker, of West Charleston, Miami county, Ohio, who is a minister, and who has been afflicted a great deal in this life, and especially for the last few months, during which time he was not able to go around, but is now better. Our beloved brother lost a kind companion—one who has stood close by his side during his affliction. Funeral discourse from Rev. xiv. 13 by the Brethren, to a large concourse of people. O. F. YOUNT.

About twelve miles south of Grantsville, Garrett county, Md., June 18th, 1876, friend CHRISTIAN BEACHY, aged 52 years, 3 months and 23 days. He was buried on the 14th.—Friend Beachy was a member of the Amish church, but his wife is a member of the Brethren. He gave her liberty to secure whom she would to preach his funeral sermon. She decided to get Bro. S. A. Fike, from W. Va., to preach in English, and one of the Amish ministers to preach in German. The latter refusing, the writer was sent for. The physicians after his death opened and examined him and found a growth in his stomach and also that the gall had grown fast to his stomach. He leaves a wife, children, and many friends to mourn their loss. JOEL GRAGY.

Liver and Blood Diseases.

By R. V. PIERCE, M. D., Author of "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser."

A healthy liver secretes each day about two and a half pounds of bile, which contains a great amount of waste material taken from the blood. When the liver becomes torpid or congested, it fails to eliminate the vast amount of noxious substance, which, therefore, remains to poison the blood, and be conveyed to every part of the system. What must be the condition of the blood when it is receiving and retaining each day two and a half pounds of poison? Nature tries to work off this poison through other channels and organs—the kidneys, lungs, skin, etc., but these organs become overtaxed in performing this labor in addition to their natural functions, and cannot long withstand the pressure, but become variously diseased.

The brain, which is the great electrical center of all vitality, is unduly stimulated by the unhealthy blood which passes to it from the heart, and it fails to perform its office healthily. Hence the symptoms of bile poisoning, which are dullness, headache, incapacity to keep the mind on any subject, impairment of memory, dizzy, sleepy, or nervous feelings, gloomy forebodings, and irritability of temper.—The blood itself being diseased, as it forms the sweat upon the surface of the skin, it is so irritating and poisonous that it produces discolored brown spots, pimples, blotches, and other eruptions, sores, boils, carbuncles, and scrofulous tumors. The stomach, bowels, and other organs cannot escape becoming affected, sooner or later, and we have, as the result, costiveness, piles, dropsy, dyspepsia, diarrhoea. Other symptoms are common, as bitter or bad taste in mouth, internal heat, palpitation, teasing cough, unsteady appetite, choking sensation in throat, bloating of stomach, pain in sides or about shoulders and back, coldness of extremities, etc., etc. Only a few of the above symptoms are likely to be present in any case at one time. The liver being the great depurating, or blood-cleansing organ of the system, set this great "housekeeper of our health" at work, and the foul corruptions which gather in the blood, and rot out, as it were, the machinery of life, are gradually expelled from the system. For this purpose, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, with very small doses daily of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, are pre-eminently the articles needed. They cure every kind of humor, from the worst scrofula to the common pimple, blotch, or eruption. Great, eating ulcers kindly heal under their mighty curative influence. Virulent blood-poisons, such as lurk in the system, are by them robbed of their errors, and by their persevering and somewhat protracted use the most tainted systems may be renovated and built up anew. Enlarged glands, tumors, and swellings, dwindle away and disappear under the influence of these great resolvents.

LIFE, GROWTH, BEAUTY.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

Not a Dye; makes harsh hair soft and silky; cleanses the scalp from all impurities, causing the hair to grow where it has fallen off or become thin.

Can be applied by the hand as it does not stain the hand or soil the finest linen. As a Hair Dressing it is the most perfect the world has ever produced. The hair is renovated and strengthened, and natural color restored without the application of mineral substances.

Since the introduction of this truly valuable preparation into this country, it has been the wonder and admiration of all classes, as it has proved to be the only article that will absolutely without deception, restore gray hair to its original color, health, softness, lustre and beauty, and produce hair on bald heads of its original growth and color.

This beautiful and fragrantly perfumed article is complete within itself, no washing or preparation before or after its use, or accomplishment of any kind being required to obtain these desirable results.

HERB IS THE PROOF OF ITS

SUPERIOR EXCELLENCE.

Read this Home Certificate, testified to by Edward B. Garrigue, one of the most competent Druggists and Chemists of Philadelphia, a man whose veracity none can doubt.

I am happy to add my testimony to the great value of the "London Hair Color Restorer," which restored my hair to its original color, and the lusc appears to be permanent. I am satisfied that this preparation is nothing like a dye, but operates upon the secretions. It is also a beautiful hair dressing and promotes the growth. I purchased the first bottle from Edward B. Garrigue, druggist, Tenth and Coates streets, who can also testify my hair was quite gray when I commenced its use.

MRS. MILLER, No. 730 North Ninth St., Phila.

Dr. Swayne & Son—Respected friends: I have the pleasure to inform you that a lady of my acquaintance, Mrs. Miller, is delighted with the success of your "London Hair Color Restorer." Her hair was falling rapidly and turning gray. The color has been restored, the falling off entirely stopped, and a new growth of hair is the result. E. B. GARRIGUES, Druggist, cor. Tenth and Coates, Phila.

BOSTON TESTIMONY.

July 22d, 1871.—Dr. Swayne & Son: Last winter, while in Trenton, N. J., I procured six bottles of London Hair Color Restorer, which I like very much, in fact better than anything I have used in the last nine years. If you please, send me one dozen bottles C. O. D., care of W. S. Fogler & Son, druggists, No. 723 Tremont street, Boston.

Respectfully yours, ADA BAKER, No. 59 Rutland Square.

"London Hair Color Restorer and Dressing" has completely restored my hair to its original color and youthful beauty, and caused a rapid and luxuriant growth.

MRS. ANNIE MORRIS, No. 616 North Seventh street, Phila.

Dr. Dalton of Philadelphia, says of it: The London Hair Color Restorer is used very extensively among my patients and friends, as well as by myself. I therefore speak from experience.

75 CENTS PER BOTTLE. SIX BOTTLES $4.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.

Health and Beauty.—How to secure them.—Female Irregularities.—Beauty is as indispensable to the happiness of woman, as is health to her existence; the loss of charms being regarded as a greater affliction than death itself. Holloway's Pills and Ointment have done more toward preserving it, and relieving the various disorders incidental to the sex, than all other advertised medicines united. Thousands of lovely females have had their constitutions ruined and beauty blighted by drastic aperients, pernicious stimulants, and poisonous lotions. The mild, soothing, and restorative influence of Holloway's great internal and external remedies, in all complaints of women, are now generally admitted, whether in the Spring-time of womanhood, or in the Autumn, or turn of life.

LIFE.

BY C. M. S.

O, I am so tired of this conflict and strife,
This complete incompleteness we sometimes
call life,

Like a vision that breaks and then passes away,
Like the sun going out at the close of the day,
Like the visits of angels, that come but to go,
Like a great dreamy mystery we shudder to know.

Like the cries of the wing-clipped bird when
't would soar,
Such is life; can it be only this, nothing more?

O, I am so glad of this conflict and strife,
This rounded completeness that others call life.
'T is patterned and fashioned, and measured by Him

Who fills, with his joy, every cup to the brim.
'T is like dawning of day when the night damps are fled,

Like coming of spring when nature is dead,
Like a chord of sweet music, though minor the strain,
This, this is the life that man liveth again.

Not the life that he now lives shall man live again,

Not the sighs and the tumults, the quiverings
and pain,

But a new, perfect life on the heavenly shore,
Where we never shall sin. Can we ask any more?

Just a veil hangs between that rest and this strife;
There's completed completeness, there's fulness of life.

Sin and Suffering.

BY MATTIE E. PENCE.

[The following article, by some means, was overlooked, or passed by, for some time. The writer has left the land of sin, and is freed from suffering and sorrowing.—3]

By the disobedience of our first parents in partaking of the fruit of that forbidden tree which stood in the midst of the garden of Eden, sin was introduced into the world, and death by sin; and ever since the first transgression, grief and sorrow have been the common inheritance of humanity. No method which the philosophy of the human mind ever has devised, or ever can devise, will prove available in changing its character. God, in his divine goodness and mercy, has bestowed innumerable comforts which ameliorate man's condition; but although it is elevated, yet it is not changed. The great first cause of suffering is not yet removed. No man liveth and sinneth not. By an unchangeable law man is a sufferer; yet by suffering, while traveling through this vale of tears, he will in no wise obtain redemption. The decree that fell from the lips of Divine Justice, "in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," has been passed upon all men, because all have sinned. By the disobedience of our first parents sin was introduced into our world, with all of its various forms and hideous aspects, bringing with it sickness, sorrow, pain and death, and converting it into a "vale of tears."

Suffering is the penalty of sin, and "no man liveth and sinneth not." Hence we are forced to the conclusion that all must suffer. Christianity, though rich with comforts and consolations, does not so change either the character or condition of her disciples while they live in this world as to leave them no occasion for weeping, but better prepares them to overcome those difficulties and trials with which they must meet while sailing on the troubled sea of life.

Life is a sea upon which every man must launch his vessel, and take his voyage for another clime. This sea of life is represented as being alternately rough and smooth, with here and there a sand bar or huge rock to be avoided as we glide along. The surface may be apparently smooth and calm, but it is often tossed with angry billows, which, for a time, bury its freightage beneath the waves. Fearfully the tempest may rage for awhile, but suddenly the bright rays of the sun, which has been obscured for a season, break forth in all their glory, dispelling the dark clouds, and calming the violent waves which so recently threatened destruction. Shattered hopes are now collected, and again we are peacefully and quietly borne along, on the placid bosom of the sea of time toward the great ocean of eternity.

To change the figure, as we journey along we are sowing in the hearts of others, and are having sown in our own hearts, seeds of various kinds, which will eventually spring up, bloom, and bear fruit. Now let us consider for a moment what kind of seed we are sowing; for Paul tells us that " whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Gal. 6: 7. "As we have opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." 10th verse. "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law." Gal. 5: 22, 23. "He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully." 2 Cor. 9: 6 "Let all your things be done with charity." 1 Cor. 16: 14. "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." 1 Cor. 15: 58.

Dying to Live.

We die daily, with each new section of our mortal history we give up something that belonged to the section preceding. We are losing continually a portion of our being; we suffer ceaseless dissolutions. Let the mature man compare himself with the budding boy, and see how much of death he has already experienced. How much of what he was has perished in him, never to be restored! Where now is the careless mirth that lit up the boyish eye? Where the sunny peace or gushing joy of the boyish breast? Where the boundless expectation, the implicit faith, the indomitable hope, the buoyant nature, the unshadowed soul, the exuberant life? Is not the loss of these as truly death as the putting off of the fleshy tabernacle? Is it not as much dying to lose the splendor and joys of our young years as it is to be divested of our mortality? The veteran, however, blest with that which should accompany old age, looks back upon his youth as a paradise lost, never in this world to be regained.

O man! that from thy fair and shining youth Age might but take the things youth needed not.

This ceaseless death would make existence intolerable, were it not balanced and compensated by ceaseless new births. The true soul gains as fast or faster than it loses. Life is constant acquisition as well as constant waste, a series of resurrections as well as deaths. If we die daily, we are also renewed daily by day. If we lose buoyancy, we gain in earnestness; if we lose in imagination, we gain in experience; if we lose in freshness, we gain in weight; if we lose in fervor, we gain in wisdom; if we lose in enjoyment, it is to be hoped we more morand live unto God.—G. ### If God be for Us, Who can be against Us.

BY P. S. NEWCOMER.

I will endeavor to jot a few lines for your columns, if worthy of insertion, from the suggestive words of our Master. In these latter days of the nineteenth century, when schisms and dogmatic opinions are prevalent, and questions of doubtful assurance are being agitated, essentials and non-essentials warmly discussed, with all the confused mass of religious instructions being propagated in all their multitudinous forms, suggestive of the many and variety of faiths that obtain among the people, this profound question comes looming up before our mind's eye. Under the heavy hand of persecution and violent charges of contraction, ignorance, and superstition, when we discover ourselves writhing under censure, and, at times, scarcely able to control our equanimity of temper, it would be expedient for us to roll this sweet morsel under our tongues—"If God be for us, who can be against us." But, my brethren and sisters, in the little word "if" is contained a world of meaning. "If God be for us" as an entirety, in the fullest sense this word conveys, and we for God, established by his word, and confirmed by such promises vouchsafed unto us in this life of devotion to him, the question is resolved into an easy solution, and we know that "all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose." Then in order to make our peace, calling and election sure, we must evidently give attention to his peculiar call, and be not carried away by any uncertain sound that may be trumpeted abroad to allure the unwary and catch them in the web woven by the wisdom of the world. His purpose is unchangeable; his redemptive plan of salvation has been unalterably fixed, and stamped with the broad seal of his supreme power, vested in him by God the Father, who gave him all power in heaven and in earth. Illimitable as eternity, King of kings and Lord of lords, high over all, who shall dare to question his authority? who can with impunity attempt to detract from his divine attributes, or pluck one bright jewel from his crown of glory, placed upon him by the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ and enthroned forever at the right hand of his majesty and power in heaven making intercession for us? Obedience to the divine will, and complete submission to his decrees whether in word or epistle, will, as sure as there is a hell to shun and a heaven to secure, place us in communion and fellowship with him, and in the broadest and most comprehensive sense he will be for us, and the very gates of hell shall not prevail against us; all the wicked anathemas and scurrilous attacks of men will fall harmless at our feet, and will only recoil, with redoubled vengeance, on their heads. Whilst the fiery darts of prejudice and persecution are being hurled, he will protect us. Still persist in reproving, rebuking, exhorting, with all long-suffering and doctrine. Let that mind be in us which was in Christ. Under every adverse circumstance, bow, in complete submission, to the divine will, and we will eventually triumph over every obstacle, and by keeping steadily on the highway of holiness, as the law and the gospel direct, will at last attain the altitude of the highest, noblest joys in reservation for his people, where, in nobler, sweeter songs, we'll sing his power to save.

Do we, then, feel a deep consciousness within us that God is for us? Do we, by an exemplary life, attest that we are for him? Are our faces turned Zionward? Are we complete in him? Do any illegitimate designs or desires characterize our lives? Are we bomb-proof against the temptations and allurements of the world? Are we sailing over smooth seas, toward the heavenly port, undisturbed by the turbulent waves of distraction and disintegration? Does our life conform to the teachings and doctrines of Christ? Are we making a strong effort to cultivate the Christian graces, for the spiritual elevation of our souls? If we can elicit a corresponding answer to these questions, our position is a safe one. Then, truly, God is for us, in us, around and about us; our lives are hid with Christ in God. "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God," advocating our claims to the New Jerusalem, where we shall see him as he is, and be made like unto his own glorious image.

Can We be Governed by Our Feelings?

BY SAMUEL LECKRONE.

The popular mode of testing religion in this our day is based upon a good feeling, as it is termed. It is asserted, time after time, "If our hearts, or feelings, tell us we are right, all is right." In this way thousands, and tens of thousands, are led to believe that they are right when they have no Scriptural evidence to prove that their sins are really pardoned. Instead of trying their religion by the Bible, in order to ascertain whether it will bear testimony, they measure themselves by themselves, and finally conclude that they have a positive evidence of the forgiveness of their sins. Thus you see they are entirely dependent upon their conscience to tell them when right and when wrong. Let us investigate the matter and ascertain whether conscience is really a correct guide.

We will first say that the Roman Catholics are conscientious in their way of belief; the Mormons are conscientious in their belief; and many other sects, which I might mention, have "right feelings," as they say, but where is the evidence of their religion to be found in the New Testament? Conscience is not an infallible guide. If we are raised in a community where they embrace a certain religion, let it be right or wrong, we are pretty apt to believe as they do. Saul of Tarsus, while persecuting the church of Christ, from city to city, thought he was doing God's service, and not till he was struck to the ground did he know he was continually sinning against the will of the Lord. Here we can see what his conscience led him to do and believe; and here we can clearly see that if we do not stick to the true and living word in all its requirements, what any of our consciences will lead us to believe. We must try our faith, or belief, which ever you please to call it, by the word of the Lord; and if it does not agree with the word of the Lord, it will profit us nothing. If it only lacks in one point it is no more than sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal.

Tobacco Chewing and Smoking.

BY S E ROOP.

We really cannot conceive how any one who claims the title of a gentleman can indulge in a habit so reprehensible as that of chewing or smoking; although we regret to say that we have seen leading members in the church with their cigars in their mouths and their teeth and lips stained with the juice of that pernicious weed. What a pity! And yet there are those who have allowed themselves to become so habituated to the use of that poisonous drug, that they really regard it as an inefable luxury, and do not think it possible to be dispensed with, but still persist in using it, totally unconscious of the injury it is doing. But let them consider the effect it had when they first partook of it. Surely, if it did not contain that which was poisonous to the nerves, it would not sicken them as it generally does. And why is it that it does not sicken them if they still continue using it? Simply because their system becomes so corrupt, and their nerves so obtuse, that they cease to perform their duty. They are as slumbering guards and can no longer be affected. Therefore the health is injured, and they are entirely ignorant of it.

But even if it is not injurious, as some try to persuade themselves, surely they cannot think it is essential to life. And let us consider what a large sum of money is expended in that way, and what a vast amount of sufferers could be relieved by the appropriation of that money to the poor. But they do not seem to consider that. There are some, we believe, who would really turn a poor beggar off without a penny, and, at the same time, be spending their money munificently for the purpose of chewing and smoking. Perhaps they do not think that will amount to much; but we think if they would, at the end of the year, sum up the amount they spent during that time, for tobacco, the sum would be so great that it would astonish them, and they would relinquish it forever.

What is Prayer?

BY J. M. SNYDER.

Prayer is an offering up of our desires to God for things that are lawful and needful, in order that we may grow in grace while living in the world; having an humble confidence to obtain them through the merits of Christ. We should also remember that it must be with pure and fervent desires of the heart; for we know that there is a great deal more required of the heart than of the tongue; neither does it depend on the abundance of fine thoughts and the order and politeness of the expressions, but the eloquence of prayer, consists in the fervency of desire and the simplicity of faith. We find in holy writ a vast number of passages having reference to prayer, so that we can have no excuse of not knowing what is our duty to God after making a profession of religion. There are a great many of us that pray and a great many that do not pray, at least, we have never heard them. Then, again, we are constrained to believe that even among those of us that do pray, it has become a kind of form, which the lips may utter while the heart may be far from God. He is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and truth. We should live so that whenever we pray, in private or public, we can ask him in as few words as possible, for only what we need. We have our part to do, and that God will not do for us. I am not in favor of these long prayers that we sometimes have to witness. "And why so?" some one may say. Why, because the word plainly tells us that we are not heard for our much speaking, but for the sincerity of the heart. Hence let us be temperate in all things, and try to occupy a middle position in all these things. I would suggest that we pray oftener and not so long at one time.

Hence "Rejoice evermore. Pray without ceasing. In every thing give thanks, for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you." When we consider his subject rightly and we are right ourselves, we should not say, as some do, "We can't pray."

"Prayer is the simplest form of speech

That infant lips can try,"

so that it should be easy for us to approach our Master in a word of thanksgiving.

"When God inclines our hearts to pray

He has an ear to hear.

To him there's music in a groan,

And beauty in a tear."

We are living in an age that it is necessary for us to be watchful as well as prayerful, and earnestly labor and contend for the faith that was once delivered to the saints. It is every Christian's duty to pray, and if we cannot pray like Paul, we can thank the Lord who blesses us and who will save us all.

Christians.

BY A. B. BARNHART.

We learn that when certain disciples were assembled together with the church at Antioch, they were first (as the followers of Christ) called Christians. They were there a whole year, teaching, and preaching the Lord Jesus unto the people; and many believed and were added unto the Lord. They preached unto the people the ways of Christ; and therefore, received the name Christian; whereas if we do not follow him in the way, nor observe his precepts and examples, nor embrace truly the religion of Christ, we cannot claim the name of Christians.

There is a sentiment that prevails, especially in the minds of the young, that a Christian life is inconsistent with the true enjoyments of life, which is wholly a mistake, and a mistake of the most dangerous tendency. The truth is, there is no pleasure like that of a good conscience—no real peace but from obedience, which will pave our way through this life and give us joy and happiness hereafter. A Christian's life will result in a happy eternity; while to live in sin and to reject the counsels of God, will result in destruction and misery.

Surely, no man who is a real friend to virtue, and to the interest of mankind, can ever be an enemy to Christianity. It is the religion of Jesus which ennobles the mind, and can alone support us through all the various uneven scenes and trials of this life. It leads us to our journey's end by the plainest and most secure paths. Let us who live under this last and most gracious dispensation of God to mankind, not suffer ourselves to be led astray by the cavils of deceivers and unbelievers, but let us show that we are Christians in deed and in truth by conforming to its precepts and abounding in those "fruits of righteousness which are, through Christ, to the praise and glory of God," that when our pilgrimage here draws near its close, we can say with confidence, with one of old, "We have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens;" and when that summons comes, our immortal part shall wing its way to the arms of the Redeemer, and find rest with all the sanctified in the heavenly mansions on high.

Cearfoss, Md.

It is easy to keep that armor bright which is daily used, but hanging by the wall till it be rusty, it will take some time and pains to refurbish it over again. If an instrument be daily played upon, it is easily kept in tune; but let it be a while neglected and the strings and frets break, the bridge flies off, and no small labor is required to bring it into order again. And thus also it is in things spiritual in performance of holy duties; if we continue them with a settled constancy they will be easy, familiar and delightful to us; but, if once intermitted, it is a new work to begin again, and the former estate will not be attained but with much endeavor and great difficulty.—Christian at Work.

As the smallest grain of sand carries great pain to the eye, so does the slightest deviation from God's law cause to the wakeful conscience great disquiet.—Starke.

OUT IN THE COLD.

Out of a rum-shop on a dreary night,
Reeled a husband and father in pitiful plight;
His face was baggard, his garments were thin,
And his soul was scorched with the fires of sin;

Weary and hungry his children sat down,
To wait his return from the distant town,
In helpless silence, in grief untold,
They waited for father out in the cold.

Out of the bar-room into the cold,
Money all gone and manhood sold,
The poor man staggered, and face worn with sin,
Breasted the storm with quivering chin:
Only the storm with its spectres was out,
And the eddying snow that went whirling about;

Thousands were happy in the home fold,
Nor thought of the drunkard out in the cold.

The rumseller sat by his fire that night,
Smoking his pipe by his warm firelight,
And he clapped his hands in relishing glee:
The wind and the storm are nothing to me;
I've plenty of coal in my cellar, he said;
My children are hearty, and warm, and well fed;

But his children were warmed by the poor man's gold,
Only the winds heard those moans in the cold.

And when the morn broke, in the twilight gray,

In a white sheet of snow the poor man lay.
And this was the verdict the coroner gave:
Frozen to death, and no one to save.
The wife and the children wept alone,—
But the traffic is king and sits on a throne,
And who are the young and who are the old,
That next may go forth to die in the cold. ?

Dress.

BY ESTHER B. TUTTLE, A MINISTER OF THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

It appears to me that the principles of the gospel are so simple and easy to be understood, that they who have learned in all things to say, "Thy will be done," need not find it difficult to conform their lives, in the details of daily practice, to the truth. If our actions are governed by a true principle, they will be consistent with each other, and with the truth; but if we attempt to regulate our conduct entirely by usages or arbitrary forms, whether of the church or of the world, we shall fall into countless inconsistencies.

I know of no safer motives to guide us in the purchase of material for our clothing, and in the selection of patterns by which it should be made, than propriety, simplicity and utility. If we are the consecrated servants of the Lord Jesus Christ, our time, money and strength belong to him; and we hold them in trust, as his stewards, to use them for his glory. An undue proportion of either may not be given to the clothing of our bodies. True economy will restrain us from the purchase of goods at an expense that is not warranted by their durability. Mere elegance, apart from utility may not be indulged.

Motives of convenience and simplicity will lead us to adopt a style of dress that is easily made, easily kept in order, and that requires but little thought or care in wearing. Propriety will lead us to dress with due reference to our circumstances in life, both of means and position, and always to observe modesty and neatness. If in any other point we are in doubt I am sure the Lord will direct us, if we sincerely pray to be made in both inward experience and outward appearance what persons professing holiness ought to be. I am convinced that honest, earnest prayer on the part of Christian women about their dress, would do more to divest the church of her gayety than any protest of tongue or pen.

We frequently hear it remarked that we should dress in such a way as not to attract attention by our peculiarity. This rule has, for its basis, policy rather than the truth. In this day of open worldliness in the church, when Christian simplicity is almost ignored, it seems to me impossible for a woman to dress as becometh one professing godliness and not be peculiar. Fashion is regulated by motives of carnality: the dress of a holy woman should be regulated by motives of devotion to God. In the nature of the case, the result must be widely different. But let us be careful that our peculiarity can always be clearly traced to a principle consistent with common sense and an enlightened judgment, that so the mouths of gainsayers may be stopped.

An article recently appeared in the Worker written by "a little one," bearing largely on this subject, in which reference is made to the position of the Methodist Church upon this question thirty years ago, and the opposite extreme of the present day. The writer remembered "the day when no Methodist woman was allowed to enter a love-feast with the smallest article of jewelry or flowers, ruffles or feathers adorning her person." That there has been in this beloved denomination a great reaction in this respect is fully granted, and it may be the above quotation contains a hint of one reason, to which we may do well to take heed. Compulsion without conviction, whether it be in families or churches, is almost invariably followed, in time, by license.

The Christian Church has suffered much, and in various ways, by unfaithfulness to principle in the matter of dress—our own Society not the least, I fear, in proportion to our numbers. We have been spared from much apparent gayety, but we have not been preserved from intolerance and harsh judgment, "after the outward appearances." In many instances in the history of our Society, the cut of a man's coat has been allowed to hinder the exercise of his gift in the ministry, or to close the ears of the people against the message the Lord had laid upon anointed lips. How much of blessing we have thus been robbed of, Eternity alone will tell.

Again, our peculiar dress is often spoken of as a "hedge," and perhaps it has, in many instances, prevented our young people from going into unprofitable society, where their singular costume would have been ridiculed; but it appears to me not well to make this motive prominent, inasmuch as God has appointed salvation for walls and bulwarks. The true line of separation between our souls and worldliness must first be drawn upon the affections and desires of our hearts. All teaching that tends to remove our dependence for salvation and preservation in any degree from Christ only, is a positive injury to the church. We will never be a preserved people until we are a saved people, whose only confidence is in the Lord. Conformity to the world is indeed forbidden, and transformation commanded, but let us bear in mind this transformation is not reached from without, but is attained by the renewing of our minds.

We not infrequently hear it said that our dress should be such as that we may be recognized as Friends. I would venture to put the plea on a still broader and higher plan. Let our whole appearance be such "as becometh saints." Let us maintain the precepts of our Divine Master, not in the name of Quakerism, but in the name of Christianity, so that our sister denominations may be admonished by our adherence to a principle that is equally binding upon them as upon us.

Sometimes it is urged that the peculiar dress of Friends is in some degree a protection to our women when they are traveling unattended. I doubt not this has been true to a large extent. I am glad the world understands us to be a moral people, and respects us as such; I would to God its stronghold of sin could be more effectually shaken by our spiritual power, and they will be when our experience becomes such that our dependence will be, at all times, and in all places, and for all things, solely in the living God.

I offer these reflections upon this subject, not in any spirit of fault-finding, surely not in criticism of those who have always adhered to our peculiar dress and see no reason for a change, but I do exceedingly value the testimony we profess to bear, as a people, for Christian simplicity. I believe it is as much a part of God's truth as any doctrine we uphold. As I see the distinguishing dress of the Society that has been so long insisted upon rapidly disappearing, and see that it would be impossible to retain it even if we would, I am brought to desire more deeply than I can express, that all who love the truth may begin at once to teach by precept, and exemplify by practice, plainness regulated by a principle rather than plainness regulated by a form.

Sin, Suffering, Death, Life.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To George W. Annon, of Thornton, West Virginia.

Beloved: Thank you for your expression of sympathy, and your sublime wishes of good will. For such wishes we are indebted to the great event of Bethlehem. If we would learn God's definition of "good-will to men," let us gaze at the swaddled Deity in the manger. How low are nursed in that crib.

Thank you for your remembrance of my bonds. Col 4: 18. But you cannot break them. Every link is law, and the whole chain is God-ruled. All being has a retributive element, and all violation of law calls it forth. Retributive action does not cease when the sin ceases, although it is modified. It holds sway till the original penalty is fulfilled, and will be wholly "swallowed up of life" only when "this mortal shall put on immortality." The simple fact of suffering is a prophecy of salvation; but whether it will be salvation depends upon ourselves. The law of retribution is the law of pain, and pain is the dark, God-shaped index hand pointing to Golgotha, and beyond that to perdition. The law of retribution is the handwriting of God in every tissue of our bodies, and every element of our souls. Suffering is the proclamation of God's self-respect and fidelity to law. The Cross means redemption through retribution. It rectifies our relation to moral government, and infuses mercy into the dislocations and grindings and lacerations and festerings and ravings and cravings and death-struggles which our tampering with righteousness has produced. The law of retribution is not a Divine caprice, and the penalties of wrong are not the arbitrary inflictions of a God who punishes because He will. The law that smites and kills is wrought with our natural constitution, and was Mercy before it brought pain no less than in ordaining pain, and in finally removing it. A moral nature under retribution is not self-recuperative. The least wound will gangrene. The blood of Christ alone heals. One bite into the forbidden apple scoured the whole race, and committed every soul to death. One drop of the Old Serpent's venom poisoned all of woman born. Christ exhausted the venom-bag of the Old Dragon, and all whose lives are hid with Him in God, will finally be re-established in the law before sin. Crucified with Him: this means life. Without this death there will be death forever—a living death. The law of retribution inheres in the essence of God, and the retribution continues as long as the soul lasts, and this will not be destroyed by an arbitrary fiat of Omnipotence. God is governed by law and not by impulse or passion, and deals no otherwise with sin and sinners than He deals with Himself in relation to Righteousness. Man sickens, suffers, dies and is damned because God is true. Hell is God's everlasting protest against sin through the law of retribution. Christ was under that law and therefore there is hope. He died for me. This is the ground of our confidence. I died in Him. This is salvation. A community of penalty lays the basis for community of life; and community of life lifts us above the penalty in due time. Gal 2: 20.

Our "ten days" will soon be over, if so be that we are over our sin, and then for "our light affliction which is but for a moment," we will have a "FAR MORE EXCEEDING AND ETERNAL WEIGHT OF GLORY." Rev. 2: 10. 2 Cor. 4: 17.

Treasures in Heaven.

It seems like investing one's good things a long way off to be "laying up treasures in heaven." But this is a mistake. Heaven is very near to God's children. The leagues thither are few and short—shortening every hour. Heaven as the actual abode of the redeemed is very near; just behind the veil it lies; every moment that veil disappears to one and another, and they are there! They are amid the treasures at God's right hand. A share in those treasures belongs to every true and earnest follower of Jesus.

They are of various kinds and character. The everlasting hopes of the believer belong to these treasures. Paul exclaimed, with holy confidence: "I know whom I have believed, and that he is able to keep that which I have committed to him against that day." The great apostle had made Jesus his trustee. He had lodged his soul's affection and hopes all in Christ's hands, an when he reached heaven he knew that he should find the deposit safe. He had laid up nothing on earth for the moth or the thief! All his investments were spiritual, and Jesus had the charge of them. So may every true Christian—whether in mansion or in lowly hut—congratulate himself that what is dearest to him is in the keeping of his Savior.

The spiritual results of Paul's life were in heaven. The results of my own poor life are there. Brother, yours are there, and they will be found to have increased through earthly losses. Whatever we give up for Jesus' sake, increases our heavenly treasure. The money which is sacrificed in order to keep a good conscience adds to our heavenly wealth. Keeping often impoverishes. Giving up enriches. "He that saveth his life shall lose it; he that loseth his life for my sake and the gospel shall find it"—in heaven. Whatever we lay down here in order to please Jesus, will be "laid up" to our account yonder, God is a faithful trustee. He keeps his book of remembrance. He will reward every one according as his work shall be. The wise employment of the ten talents or the two talents will be fairly recompensed. When we speak of salvation as by grace and not "of works," we must not forget that other truth, that God will judge us all according to our works. They will be laid up there. If a sinner's "wages" are paid in heaven. How rich some of Christ's millionaires will be! Paul will have a magnificent inheritance. All that he gave up of earthly pelf, profit, fame, ease, power, emolument, will stand to his credit there. All the mighty service he wrought for human souls will be to him a shining crown. Agrippa will be glad to change thrones with him then. John Bunyan, when in jail, comforted himself with the thought that he had "rich lordships" in those souls which he had led to Jesus. What a Croesus the old tinker will be when he gets in full possession of his inheritance! How many thousands will come and thank John Bunyan for leading them to heaven!

I love to think of Robert Raikes as surrounded by hosts of Sunday-school children in Paradise. They will be a part of his treasures, as well as Christ's treasures, in heaven. To John Eliot the converted Indian will be a star in his crown. Wilberforce will be enriched by the salvation of liberated bondmen, and Franke be the happier when he finds some of his orphans before the throne. Faithful pastors, who gave up all prospects of worldly emolument in order to spend and be spent for Christ, will discover that they have made wise investments in the "better country." The surrenders made here become rich possessions yonder.

The gains are very steady up there. Poor city missionaries and Bible woman and frontier preachers and godly needle-women have their savings bank at God's right hand. Those banks never break. The only change in heavenly treasures is from their enlargements. There is no corruption within and no consumption from without. The moth never gnaws there and the burglar never breaks in to steal. It is impossible to compute what treasures every faithful Christian may be storing away for his long lifetime in glory. God is a faithful trustee. He keeps his "record on high"; and each good deed of love, each act of self-denial, each surrender of pride or selfishness or human applause for Jesus' sake will find sure remembrance there. They all come up as "a memorial before God." —T. L. Cuyler.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Serving two Masters.

BY WM. H. LICHTY.

God created man in his own image, the image and glory of God, in righteousness and true holiness; and by the authority which he has received from his Maker he is his representative among these creatures, and exhibits him more than any other part of the creation. "Male and female created he them;" and God blessed them, and gave them names in the day in which he created them. And they begat sons and daughters. God created them for his glory. God made them upright and perfect. Thus they were made by their Creator according to his image: not according to the image or likeness of any other being, but according to his own. He created them for his service, for we find that he put them into his garden to dress and to keep it; hence they were to serve their Master who created them. But while in their Master's service in the garden, and not taking heed to his command, they were deceived by hearkening to the serpent, who beguiled them, in order to have their service. Hence God drove them out of the garden from his presence; and from this time the children of men are serving two masters. Until Christ will make his second appearance men will be serving God or Satan; but it is plainly declared, in the word of God, that "no man can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold to the one and despise the other: ye cannot serve God and Mammon." Matth. 6:24, Luke 16:13.

The command of the Lord is, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might." Deut. 5:5. Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God and serve him who is thy Creator, and thy Protector in every time of need. Our hearts should be prepared unto the Lord, and we should serve him only, and he will deliver us out of the hand of the enemy. The Saviour's language was to Satan, "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." Men are inclined to serve that which they love supremely, and despise what they do not love. Their affections and desires are to the beloved object in order to possess and enjoy it. Our blessed Lord shows us plainly the utter impossibility of serving the world, or Satan, and serving God at the same time; or of a servant of Satan to be a servant of God. He who gives his heart to the world robs God of it, and loses eternal blessedness. Let us look for a moment at the Christian world, those who claim to be the servants of God, and at the same time are serving the world in all its evil ways. "Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey his servants ye are to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?" Rom. 6:16. Every person chooses the service of sin and Satan, or of Christ and holiness; one leads to life and the other to death. Both God sets before men, and invites them to choose life, by taking the way which leads to it, and promises that if they do, they shall live. Sin is the service of Satan; righteousness, the service of Christ. The image of God, righteousness and true holiness, should be grafted on every believing soul, and every believer should be redeemed from the slavery of sin and destruction and receive eternal life for his service, which God has promised unto all his servants. Joshua, the servant of the Lord, when he assembled the tribes Israel to Shechem, said unto them, "Fear the Lord, and serve him in sincerity and in truth; * * * and if it seem evil unto you to serve the Lord, choose you this day whom ye will serve, * * * but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." "And the people said unto Joshua, The Lord our God will we serve, and his voice will we obey." Josh. 24:15, 24. How many sinners, when they see their condition, and the reward they will receive in serving Satan, return and enlist under the banner of king Jesus, promise to live faithful until death yet only endure for a while. They are like the seed that fell on stony places; having not root in themselves, they only endure for the time in which there is no difficulty to encounter, no cross to bear, and in the time of temptation fall away again unto their former lusts in servicing Satan. They are without either understanding or counting the cost of Christ's service; they have not the true Christian principle. They think they can be Christians and follow the fashions of the world at the same time, and perhaps think a little more of fashionable dressing or worldly honor than of Christ; and instead of taking the admonitions of the Lord, they will be offended, discouraged, and lose the interest they once felt. They are as the dog turned to his own vomit again, and the sow that was washed to wallowing in the mire; and as a fool who returneth to his folly. The poor sinner, having heard the gospel of Christ, and entering into his service, not taking heed to his teachings, is led astray by the adversary, the devil, who goeth about, not only as a roaring lion, but also as an angel of light, seeking, in various ways, to destroy the souls of men. "Woe to the rebellious children, saith the Lord, that take counsel but not of me, and that cover with a covering but not of my spirit, that they may add sin to sin." Isa. 30:1. "Rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry." Because they have rejected the word of the Lord, and would not retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind to do these things which are not convenient; abhorred of God, and upon whom his curse rests, being given over to iniquity, from whom no good work is to be expected; "being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness, full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whispers, backbiters, haters of God, despiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things," &c. Rom. 1:29, 30, 2 Cor. 12:20. All these things belong to the service of Satan, and, the apostle Paul says, "are worthy of death;" for "the wages of sin is death." The future misery of the wicked will be his reward. Sinners earn this by a painful service. They will toil early and late to get to hell; and their due wages will be in hell; for the word of God says so. By the service of God they will inherit heaven, and by serving the devil, merit hell where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched; where the carcasses of God's enemies are represented as devoured by worms that never die, and fire that is never quenched. This terrible misery of the wicked in hell will be everlasting. Hell is naked before them, and destruction hath no covering. They will now have their reward for serving Satan; but oh, what misery and woe they will have for their reward, for the agreement they made with hell! "But the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" Being made free from sin, its condemning and reigning power, by serving God and obeying his holy word, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life, which shall be protected. We are now the children of God, "and if children, then heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ"—entitled to be with Christ, partakers forever of the blessings of Jehovah's kingdom. Let us therefore be obedient, serving him faithfully, "Not with eye service as men pleasers, but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart;" "then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father."

Some Good Thoughts in Monosyllables.

To do a thing well, one needs to know the words of deeds, large or small. The end may not prove the right aim, but a right aim is to be sought first, and then the deed may be left, in the hands of God. There are folks who do not ask to know if a thing be right or wrong, but if it will do something to please the self, which is first in the thoughts of a bad mind. To put down this self, the love of Christ is meant to be at hand for our help. Love and law are at one. He who loves most what is right and good and true, will prove that law is the chief friend of all. It may be hard to see this so long as sin blinds our eyes. But the light of Christ's love drives black night off, so that with pure rays of God's truth all things may be seen to be as they are, good or bad. Yet as love is life, we must know that where love is not, the law of God is a hard rule, and the heart turns to it as if it were a foe to peace. Now the part of the law may be to drive us to Him who is the end of the law, but the part of love is to hold us by sweet and strong ties to the Rock cleft for us. There we are safe.

The rose is fair, for it draws its life from the sun, which is the source of that wealth of tint and shade which we find in earth and sky; but how much more do our souls need to draw from the Great Sun of our Faith all that can make them bright, and can cause them to throw back the rays they get from on high, so that their light may shine clear and well in the ways by which we go to the house not made with hands. In that fair home of love and rest, no eyes will be held in the dark, for there shall be no light of sun nor moon, for the Lord God shall be the light and the joy of those who dwell by His throne. It were well, then, for all who are here on this edge of time, by the shore of a vast sea, to walk with feet shod with peace, hands full of trust, eyes set on the mark, and hearts drawn by a great cord to the long rest, where shall be no storm, but the full calm; for which we moan and pray, while the waves press and the winds beat on our weak barks.—Sel.

The Secret of Success.

No man now standing on an eminence of influence and power, and doing a great work, has arrived at his position by going up in an elevator. He took the stairway step by step. He climbed the rocks, often with bleeding hands. He prepared himself by the work he is now doing. He never accomplished an inch of his elevation by standing at the foot of the stairway with his mouth open and longing. There is no "royal road" to anything good—not even to wealth. Money that has not been paid for in life is not wealth. It goes as it comes. There is no element of permanence in it. The man who reaches his money in an elevator does not know how to enjoy it; so it is not wealth to him. To get a high position without climbing to it, to win wealth without earning it, to do fine work without the discipline necessary to its performance, to be famous or useful, or ornamental, without preliminary cost, seems to be the universal desire of the young. The children would begin where their fathers left off.

What exactly is the secret of true success in life? It is to do without finching, and with utter faithfulness the duty that stands next to one. When a man has mastered the duties around him he is ready for those of a higher grade, and he naturally takes one step upward. When he has mastered the duties of the new grade, he goes on climbing. There are no surprises to the man who arrives at eminence legitimately. It is as entirely natural that he should be there, as at the foot of the stairs. There are heights above him, and he remains humble and simple.

Preachments are of little avail, perhaps, but when one comes in contact with so many men and women who put yearning for earning, and longing for labor, he is tempted to say to them: "Stop looking up and look around you! Do the work that first comes to your hand and do it well. Take no upward step until you come to it naturally, and have won the power to hold it. The top in this little world is not so very high, and patient climbing will bring you to it.—Sel.

The Minimum Christian.

Let us see if the following definition given by the Presbyterian at Work, of the "Minimum Christian," will apply to ourselves individually:

The minimum Christian! And who is he? The Christian who is going to heaven at the cheapest rate possible. The Christian who intends to get all the world he can, and not meet the world-lion's doom. The Christian who aims to have as little religion as he may without lacking it altogether.

The Minimum Christian goes to church in the morning; and in the afternoon also, unless it rains, or is too warm, or too cold, or he is too sleepy, or has a headache from eating too much dinner. He listens most respectfully to the preacher, and joins in the prayer and praise. He applies the truth very judiciously—sometimes to himself, often to his neighbors.

The minimum Christian is very friendly to all good works. He wishes them well, but it is not in his power to do much for them. The Sabbath school he looks upon as an admirable institution, especially for the neglected and ignorant. It is not convenient, however, for him to take a class. His business engagements are so pressing during the week, that he needs Sunday as a day of rest; nor does he think himself qualified to act as a teacher. There are so many persons better prepared for this important duty, that he must beg to be excused. He is very friendly to home and foreign missions and colportage, and gives his mite. He thinks there are too many appeals, but he gives, if not enough to save his reputation, pretty near it; at all events, he aims at it.

The minimum Christian is not clear on a number of points. The opera and dancing, the theatre and card playing, and large, fashionable parties, giving him much trouble. He can not see the harm in this or that or the other popular amusement. There is nothing in the Bible against it. He does not see but that a man may be a Christian and dance, or go to the opera. He knows several excellent persons who do. Why should not he? He stands so close to the dividing line between the people of God and the world, that it is hard to say on which side of it he is actually to be found.

Ah, my brother, are you making this attempt? Beware, lest you find at last that in trying to get into heaven with a little religion; you miss it altogether; lest, without gaining the whole world, you lose your own soul!

He that lives to no purpose, lives to a bad purpose.

Natural History—Zoology No. 1.

BY HOWARD MILLER

PROCYON LOTOR.—Procyon lotor is the scientific name of a quadruped, or four footed animal, larger than a cat, and found all over the United States. It makes its home in deep woods and prefers a swampy ravine.

It is plantigrade, that is, in walking it uses its whole foot, making a track like the bear which is also plantigrade. Commonly it is said to hibernate, or sleep, in cold weather; but this is a mistake except in the most severely cold days and nights. The reason Procyon lotor is not seen much in winter is because he is not much hunted at that time of year, and is engaged in taking care of his family, which numbers as high as six, sometimes, in a hollow tree.

Procyon gets his other name of lotor from his peculiar habit of rubbing everything he gets in his paws just as a washer woman does a soiled garment in the wash tub. The word lotor means "The washer."

He is carnivorous, that is, he will eat flesh, and is a first class fisherman, going right into the water capturing frogs, fish and crabs with surpassing facility.

He is also herbivorous and granivorous, or, in plainer words, eats vegetables and grains. Sometimes he will travel three or four miles to get to a corn-field, but always gets home before daylight; and as he is a night prowler, we will have to say he is nocturnal in his habits.

Boys sometimes make a pet of him, and keep him about the house, till father gets tired of his taste for chickens and his disposition to go crab-fishing in the spring, and sets him free in the woods, some night, while the boys are dreaming of running him up a tree and hearing him growl when the dog took him.

If there is anything that Procyon lotor likes, it is sugar; and therein he and some of my juvenile naturalists agree. He will eat nearly everything, and some people are extravagantly fond of eating him; and any reader in the South could tell how fond the negroes are of hunting up and killing him for his pelt or skin, and then eating him.

He is not a very fast traveller, but when the dogs get after him, he will go down hill as fast as a dog, and when too closely pursued will climb a tree. He looks very much like a bear, and has been called a little bear with a long tail.

He depends for his living mainly on his skill as a fisherman, and on his qualities as a climber when pursued. When clasping a large limb and looking down at you he presents a very comical appearance, resembling in his markings an old man with a pair of huge spectacles on.

Now, then, the boy or girl who first sends me the common name of Procyon lotor will have his name printed, with his address, in the paper. Of course I could tell you, but I want to teach you to think for yourself. Write a letter or postal card telling the common name, but don't ask some one else to tell you. Do your own thinking.

Girls and Music.

"Thump Thump, Thump! Why, the money wasted upon the attempt to give the American girls a musical education would, in less than five years time, pay off the national debt."

"That was all I chanced to overhear on the subject. The voice of the commentator was a woman's. She asserted what may be a fact; but the most deplorable feature of the business is not its waste of money, but its irreparable waste of opportunities. If there is any one thing more than another that a boy has to be thankful for because he is a boy, it is that by virtue of his birth-right he has a decent chance of escape from learning music. And this means much—it means time and opportunity to make a man of himself." There are two things that any ordinary observer of human affairs in this country must recognize—the uncertainty of fortune, and the need of special application to some one branch of thought or study in order to achieve success.

"I wanted to study engraving ten years ago," said a lady not long since, "but father would not listen to it. He was on the highway of financial prosperity then, and willing to pay $100 a month for my music masters. I had no special aptitude for music, but I practised six hours a day to the utter exclusion of other studies, and became, after three or four years a fair performer, as musical execution is ordinarily measured. Then misfortune came. Father sickened and during a six months attendance upon him I lost my facility in playing, and had no heart to re-acquire what I first only gained at great expense of both time and money, and for which I had never any special predilection. To gratify parental vanity, I gave the best years of my life for the possession of what, at best, was only intended for an accomplishment, and now have nothing left. So I say to all girls about to begin the study of music 'don't'."

Of all the girls in the world, what portion may reasonably be reckoned as being able to afford a musical education extending over a course of three, five, or ten years? A very small one indeed. A girl quite as much as a boy—in this country of changing fortunes —needs to learn something by which she may be able to support her self in time of need. A time which comes to most of us.

If the heavy outlay of money often spent for high priced musical instruments (Pianos &c), was spent in furnishing the family library with useful books, the result would be far better; the children would be brought up with minds stored with useful knowledge, with brighter intellects, and would possess the enterprise to act in almost any emergency.

Going Behindhand.

"They tell me that Farmer H—is going behindhand."

"I guess there's no doubt of it."

"But I don't see how it can be. He has one of the best farms in the country, and he was once considered a good farmer."

"True, but his farm is certainly running out, and I am told that he is running in debt."

"I don't see how that can be."

So conversed two neighboring farmers, and while they conversed Farmer H—was looking for his hoe.

"Dan," he cried, to one of his boys, "where is the hoe? I've been looking for it this half-hour. I might have had my work done by this time. Where is it?"

"I dunno, dad. It's sum'rs, I s'pose"

"Somewhere, you young rascal! Didn't you have it last night?"

"No"

"Didn't I tell you to hoe the cucumbers?"

"Yes—but I couldn't find the hoe."

"The two joined in the search.

"Look here, Dan," said the father, after a fruitless search, "you must have left that hoe somewhere. Why don't you put things in their right places when you've done with them?"

"Well, dad, where is the place for the hoe? Where do you al'rs put it?"

The parent was posed. His tool-house had been used for a wood-house, and though he had often talked of building another, he had not done so.

By and by, before the hoe was found a neighbor dropped in, and after chatting awhile he said, with a smack of the lips, and an expectant rubbing of the hands:

"By the way, H—, have you got a drop in your jug?"

"I guess so. Would you like a bit?"

"Well, yes, if it's handy."

"Of course it is handy."

Ah! he had no difficulty in putting his hand upon his jug at once—and had the two wondering neighbors been there to hear and to see, they would have wondered no more why Farmer H—was running behindhand.

A TIMELY WARNING.

"And what I say unto you I say unto all, Watch."—MARK xiii. 37.

A train of thought, associated in our mind with a council meeting, and some difficulties before that meeting to be settled, and impressing our mind with the idea that the most of our individual, as well as church troubles, would be avoided by Christian watchfulness, reminded us forcibly of the warning words of our Lord, "What I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch." These words are evidently the words of warning, and imply danger. And our Lord was not an alarmist to cause unnecessary fear. He well knew that the number and character of our enemies, and our constant liability to fail in maintaining a Christian life and deportment are such that without watchfulness we cannot expect to live long without falling into some of the many sins to which we are exposed.

1. We should watch against an un-Christian spirit. As our bodies are to be kept healthy, if we would enjoy the comfort of bodily health, so must our spirits be kept healthy if we would enjoy spiritual peace and comfort. When David prayed for a clean heart, he also prayed that God would "renew a right spirit within him." And it may be well to notice that the marginal reading is "constant spirit" instead of right spirit. This implies that he felt the importance of and always desired to have his spirit in a right condition both in regard to God and himself. The want of maintaining a proper Christian spirit led James and John, two of the most prominent apostles of our Lord, into a fearful mistake, which drew upon them the rebuke of our Lord, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of." Luke ix. 55. They had by a want of watchfulness, yielded to a spirit of revenge. The people of the village of Samaria, did not show the respect to the Savior that the disciples thought they should have showed him, and they asked liberty of the Lord to call down fire from heaven to destroy the people that had offended them. Hence the fault which the disciples had committed and the error into which they had fallen were owing to a wrong spirit, and the wrong feelings which that spirit had produced in them, feelings of revenge, instead of forgiveness. Their condition was a sad one. The spirit that they possessed, and which influenced them, was not only wrong, but what made the case more dangerous, was the fact that they were ignorant of the evil character of the spirit which prompted them to destroy the lives of the people that had offended them. How often does this happen with Christians. By a want of watchfulness, and a proper attention to our spirits, or to the state of our own hearts, we are prompted to do things which are very wrong, and we not only do the things that we should not do, but we may fail to see the evil character of them. And what is worse still, we may even think they are right. "The heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked: who can know it?" Jer. xvii. 9. The question, "Who can know it?" is a solemn and suggestive one. To know our hearts, with all their motives and promptings, requires watching and praying, and close searching into their inner workings, and a candid and honest examination of their workings, in the light of the holy principles of the perfect law of God.

We are in great danger of a spirit of selfishness. This is one of the forms that our spirits are likely to assume. And it is no doubt the cause of many of our failings and of much of our trouble. And against this selfish spirit we should watch with the greatest care and diligence. It so often happens that for a small gain of a temporal or secular character we will contend so long and so strenuously, that our own peace of mind is destroyed, and others excited to the same unchristian feelings that we possess, and the church perhaps involved in the trouble. Whereas, had we watched against such a spirit, and cultivated a spirit of benevolence, self-denial and forgiveness, it would have been so much better for ourselves and for all concerned. Let us then watch against a spirit of selfishness, for to be under the influence of such a spirit, we must necessarily be miserable, though we may gain our ends, and the paltry or valuable object that we have contended for. A little self-denial or the sacrifice of our object of small value, may result in, and be followed by, a great spiritual blessing, while the gaining of our point, and with it some secular object of some value, may cause the loss of our Christian character and enjoyment, and finally, the loss of our own souls, and those of others likewise. O, with what jealousy should we watch and search our own hearts to know what manner of spirit we are of! The unholy spirit of revenge, ambition, or selfishness, may be the prompter of our doings, and we in our ignorance of its true character, mistake it for the Christian spirit.

2. We should watch against the decline of our spiritual graces and religious principles. It is to be hoped that all who name the name of Christ in sincerity and truth, have, when they take upon themselves the holy profession of the Christian character, some divine grace, and some renewal of mind by the Holy Spirit of God. The beginning of the work of holiness may be small, but a beginning should be made in all by whom the good confession is made. And while it is hoped that in all cases of a Christian profession, where such a profession is sincerely made, there are some holy feelings and aspirations after God planted in the heart, it is further to be hoped and expected that there will be seasons in the life and experience of all "who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity," in which there will be some of that holy joy and spiritual comfort which are given to those who believe and trust in Christ. These feelings in some may be weak and tender, and such as require great care and tender nursing. And indeed in all cases much cultivation and watchfulness are necessary to promote growth and ripeness or maturity. Many espouse Christ and his holy cause, with good feelings and right intentions, but at length lose those good feelings and their first love, and with these lose their Christian character, or at least it declines, and if they do not become branches separated from the vine, they are withered branches that bring forth no fruit neither for their own enjoyment nor for the promotion of the glory of God, and the church of Christ. And this decline in Christian character, enjoyment, and feeling, is the result of a want of watchfulness, carefulness, and prayerfulness.

The heavenly plant of Christianity will not grow in such moral soil as the human heart affords, without much care and cultivation. It is with the cultivation of our Christian feelings in human nature, as it is in cultivating some kinds of vegetables in soil that is poor, and much inclined to grow up with briars and weeds. In such cases, unless the husbandman farms his land well, and by constant cultivation keeps down the weeds, his crop will be very light. So it will be in the cultivation of the Christian graces, and a Christian character under the disadvantages under which we labor in our barren and perverse nature. The apostle alludes to these difficulties in the following language: "The flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other." Gal. v. 17. And in the parable of the sower it is said, "He also that received seed among the thorns is he that heareth the word; and the care of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, choke the word, and he becometh unfruitful." Matth. xii. 22. The necessity of watchfulness is here very apparent. According to the parable as given by St. Luke, the pleasures of this life, constitute another trouble to be overcome in the maturing of the divine life. And the care, in the life of the person given much to business, and riches in the life of them who are anxious to become rich, and the pleasures of the world in the life of such as had been given much to pleasure before they espoused the cause of Christ, are to be watched against, or these will choke the plant of holiness, and it will not grow and bring forth fruit as it should.

3. But another danger to which we are exposed, and against which we must watch with equal care, and guard against with equal diligence, if we would succeed in living a Christian life, and obtain the prize of immortality, is the neglect of our religious duties. In a world lying in sin, as this is in which we live, and our spirits being connected with bodies prone to evil, a faithful performance of Christian duty will not infrequently meet with opposition both from ourselves and from the world. Hence there will arise a strong temptation often to avoid duty when duty is a cross, or when its performance requires self-denial. Such being the case we are in great danger of neglecting our Christian duties. It requires no great effort to depart from God. And it will not take long to get back to the place we were in before we commenced to serve God. If we stand still and fold our arms, and cease to pray, and cease to watch and labor we shall soon find ourselves as far from God as ever. We cannot be holy without constant watching and praying, since we have the world, the flesh, and the devil against us.

The last consideration upon which we would urge Christian watchfulness is watchfulness against grieving the Holy Spirit. "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption." Eph. iv. 30. Such is an apostolic admonition. The importance of the work of redemption and sanctification, in the believer, is well known to all who have read with care the Christian Scriptures. There is an influence of the Spirit necessary for all men to enable them to do right. And this Spirit is given to all that obey God. Acts v. 32. The Apostle's Language implies that we may grieve the Spirit of God. And when he is grieved, its influence, as a matter of course, will be withdrawn from us. To secure its influence and enjoy all its benefits, we must act in harmony with its dictates as contained in the written word of the Lord. Those, then, who enjoy the various gifts of the Holy Spirit to the extent that it is the privilege of believers to enjoy those gifts, should watch against doing anything contrary to the nature, the will, or the precepts of the Holy Spirit. If we lose its influence and assistance, we shall fail of the Christian character; and if we fail of this, we shall fail of heaven.

"As the sentinel on duty watches for the coming foe; as the sailor on deck watches for the coming danger, from storm, breakers, &c.; as the watchman watches for the thief who seeks to plunder; as Satan watches for opportunities to sow tares and ruin souls; as the worldly watches for 'chances' to make a bargain; as the pleasure-taker watches for seasons, times, and companies for personal enjoyment; as the lover of knowledge watches all the openings for the increasing of his knowledge; so should the Christian watch for the approach of his enemies, and be prepared for a conflict and victory; he should watch for the dangers which beset his passage to the haven of rest, and by the wisdom which cometh from above avoid them." "And what I say unto you I say unto all, Watch."—Let the warning of our Lord be heeded, that the dangers to which we are exposed may be avoided, and the crown of life obtained.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM IN SPAIN.

The new Constitution of Spain guarantees liberty of conscience to worship. In the discussion, Senor Castelar, the Republican leader, a man possessing great oratorical powers, and great courage, a man apparently of honesty and sincerity, and himself a moderate Roman Catholic, made a powerful speech in defense of liberty of conscience, when the Article in the Constitution favoring such liberty was under consideration. The following sentiments occur in the speech:

"From the day when the elements of human matter arose up from the confusion of chaos, arose with them spirit and heart and conscience. That spirit you cannot curb, that conscience you cannot bind by any human law of coercion. Try it; it has been tried; it has ever failed: it ever will fail. And why? Because it is against the will of the great Creator of the Universe. The State has ever—in the pages of Divine or human history gone and seek it—sought to bind down the conscience of men. Pharaoh, who represented the State, sought to force his own form of worship upon Moses and the Jews; Pilate, the State representative, through seeking to do this, wetted his hands in the blood of the Spotless One. Nero, the Cossack of the Don, King Henry VIII. and his harlot Parliament, Charles IV.—all these, powers of the State, committed a like fatal error; and how do their names sound to our ears?—No, brother Deputies, you cannot do it. The State and the conscience are two great powers, but they are separate entities, and each has its own work in the universe; the State is the representative of authority to enforce what is morally and legally clearly right; but the conscience has a higher, finer, keener task to perform.

"I see honored statesmen around me, who wish to bind the conscience of their subjects by the power and force of the State. What, brother Deputies, if the State tells what is the true, what the false religion, would you believe it? If you do, if you will vote for a religious unity of coercion, why you are voting that the power of human law shall be paramount and tyrannize over the divine and moral powers of the human soul. Conscience is uncoercible, is inviolate; you may persuade, but never can you coerce it by force. No, Deputies, you know you cannot. You can move it by inspiring it with a new idea, you cannot move it with a mandate. The persecutor gets his way outwardly, but he does not in reality; outward obedience and consent is all he can obtain, and is such a victory to be called a triumph?"

"Sirs, I charge no one with desiring to bring back the cursed age of torments, the horrors of the Inquisition, the street and altar smeared with innocent blood; nay, but, Sirs, I charge you with trying to coerce men to be hypocrites and liars from fear—fear lest their children should be illegitimate, fear lest their rights of citizenship be taken from them, fear lest when dead their bones should rot on some dung hill, or in the Campo. You say, 'The State undertakes to support the Roman Catholic religion and its ministers.' Well, I give that creed its due honor; I own its beauty, and its force, and its antiquity. And you say, 'This is the true religion.' Sirs, are you so gross as to say, 'This is the true,' because it is imposed by human law and force of arms. Nay, you will surely say, 'This is true because, and only because it recommends itself to your heart and conscience as the true one; and, if so, why do you want a human law to force you to follow that which your conscience tells you is true? Are you afraid of a rival? Sirs, you do an honor to Protestantism if you think it so true as to be able, in a fair race, to outrun Roman Catholicism. But if it be not true, this religion of the State—if it be not true, brother Deputies, what then? Magna est veritas et prevalebit. If the Roman Catholic creed be true, it will prevail by force of truth; if Protestantism be true, it will prevail, and you cannot crush it. If this liberty of conscience be of God, you cannot,—if of man, you need not, crush it."

OUR LOVEFEAST.

OUR lovefeast in the Elk Lick church is now past. We were permitted to enjoy a very pleasant and refreshing season of grace; and we hope that, as a congregation of believers, we feel much revived and encouraged. It is indeed a great privilege to be permitted to meet with hundreds of dear fellow-members, around the table of the Lord, to participate in the observance of the ordinances of the Lord's house. We wash one another's feet, thereby showing our humility and our willingness to serve one another for good in whatever way we can. This is also a means of grace, intended, in its very nature, to cultivate the grace of humility in us. It is not at all likely that a proud or haughty person will stoop so low as to wash the feet of a brother or sister. It is not only an evidence of humility and means to cultivate this grace, but it is symbolic in its character, being an outward and tangible symbol, or sign, of an internal, spiritual work. The feet come, more directly than any other part of the body, into contact with the earth; and their being washed, as though they were to be cleansed from contracted filthment, very aptly represents the washing away of our spiritual filthment, which we have contracted by contract with an impure world.

A close examination of ourselves is necessary to prepare us for a proper and beneficial observance of this ordinance. Such an examination will reveal to us our sinfulness and helplessness—our need of the grace and blessings of God, and of the society and assistance of our fellowmen. This will humble us before God; it will bring us to seek the all-cleansing fountain; it will incline us to be more resigned and obedient; and it will lead us to a willingness to serve our brother for his good at all times. When we are thus prepared, we can observe the ordinance of feet-washing with pleasure and profit, though Jews might stumble or Greeks consider it foolishness.

With this examination and washing and symbolic service we are, or should be, brought into a normal relationship to God and his church and the world, and we are prepared as a humble, faithful, loving, hospitable and charitable family,—as the Lord's people,—to eat the Lord's Supper. This eating together says that we are one family; we are bound together by common duties and interests; we are the children of the same heavenly Father; we are servants of the same Lord; we are sanctified and guided by the same Holy Spirit; we will labor together for the same great purposes; we possess and enjoy the same hope: in all this we are united, as we are sitting down together to partake of this meal which belongs equally to us all, as we are one body—the Lord's body. Breakfast or dinner might represent all this; but the meal we eat is a supper—the evening meal—the last meal of the day. As a supper it seems to say that we have served together in the vineyard of our Lord to-day; the toils, and burdens, and anxieties, the vexations and disappointments, the sorrows and sufferings, the conflicts and victories of the day are over, and we now, are all gathered in from our different spheres of action to feast together and to be satisfied. But this is symbolic, as our lifetime is our to-day, and the true Lord's Supper is the Marriage Supper of the Lamb, which will be celebrated in the evening of this world. Then shall our vineyard—service be over, and we shall be gathered home into our Father's house, to be seated with the Lord's people from every age and nation to participate in the heavenly feast. How our hearts burn within us when we partake of the Lord's Supper, and look forward to that blessed time!

But how can we of a sinful race and a sinful character ever be permitted to enter into the presence of the holy God and to feast upon holy and heavenly delights? Only through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. He is our Redeemer and Savior, and he is our only righteousness. But he will not save sinners unless they believe in him and obey him. To purchase our salvation, he humbled himself and became obedient unto death; so in order that we may realize this salvation, we must also humble ourselves and become obedient unto death. Only his people will be guests at the Marriage Supper. To be his, we must possess his spirit and likeness; and to do this, we must acquaint ourselves with him and learn to know him and love him. To know him and love him we must think of him. The more we think of him the more we love him, because he is lovely; hence we should have him in continual remembrance. Here we have an ordinance designed to assist us in our remembrance of him. Here are the emblems of his broken body, and of his blood shed for us. To remember him in all the relations he sustains to us is our greatest duty and highest privilege on earth. All he did for us is focalized and sealed in his death; hence to show forth his death is to exhibit it in its true relation to his life, his death, and his sufferings. Therefore in the communion of the body and blood of Christ, we are brought into direct contact with him in everything he is to us.

What heavenly and delightful and expressive symbolic observances are these! How we should prize them!

When we started out we did not think of saying what we have said; but we allowed our pen to follow our mind and we leave the result with our readers.

At our lovefeast there were several ministers from other congregations.—Most of the speaking was done by Elder John Wise and Bro. S. H. Bashor. The truth was presented plainly and forcibly; and we hope it may have its proper effect on the hearts and lives of saints and sinners. Brother Bashor came to our congregation on the 24th of June, and preached three discourses before our lovefeast, which was on the 27th. He expects to spend some time with us in different parts of the State. May the Lord second all his efforts in the future as he has done in the past. B.

REPORT of the Annual Meeting, single copy, 25 cents; per dozen, $2 50.

Cleanings and Gittings.

BROTHER Hiel Hamilton, of Ervin, Howard Co., Ind., June 22nd, says:

"Will you be so kind as to state further in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, that our communion on the 28th of Sept. next commences at 2 o'clock P. M.? A hearty invitation is given to all that desire to be with us, especially ministering brethren."

A correspondent of Falls City, Neb. permits us to say that E. F. Thompson, formerly from Pennsylvania, has been added to the church by baptism. He is in the 83rd year of his age.

Bro. M. T. Baer, of Flowerfield, Mich., June 19th, says:—"On my way home from a communion meeting held with the Cass Co., brethren, Mich., I improved the opportunity to solicit subscribers for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. The following is the result. As I understood. The Report of the A. M. will be twenty-five cents and the CHRISTIAN, from the time of the Annual Meeting, to the close of the volume, 75 cents." He then sends us seven new subscribers for the paper, and thirteen for the report. We are not much acquainted with brother Baer's field of labor, but we suppose it is not more prosperous than many others. The question arises, why should not our agents in hundreds of other places do as well as brother Baer did? We hope that many of them will try. B.

Miscellaneous.

Practical Education.

If you can give your son money enough to support him all the days of his life, send him to college by all means; but if he must earn his bread and butter by his own labor, think twice about the matter before you give him a collegiate education. Go through our large establishments, such as manufactories, publishing houses, newspaper offices, and where do you find the college graduates who may be there?—at the top? You will generally find the college-bred man employed, and the employer one whose knowledge is of a different kind from that acquired in colleges. The graduate usually knows something about Rome and Jerusalem, but the gentleman who pays him his salary, is extremely well acquainted with New York, Chicago, and various other seaports now existing. With several exceptions, our principal periodicals are owned by men of business; and, as a rule, the college-bred men create the commodity in which the publishers deal. Even the professions are governed by men of business, for there are instances where railroad kings have a hold upon the lawyers of a score of counties, where teachers are appointed, dismissed, and consequently governed by men of business, who usually in country towns, hold the school offices. Such facts are worthy of serious consideration, when the question of going to college comes up in the family. The son of a poor man who must begin to earn his subsistence soon after graduating, is only too apt to fall into the ranks of those who are governed and remain there as long as he lives. Four years or so of the forming period of life, spent chiefly in intellectual pursuits and in the society of persons who are exempt from the common lot of mortals, may be most delightful; but the youth who means to be master of his career, who means to pay wages, not take them, who means to achieve plans of his own, not execute the plans of another, would do better to submit to the rough training of business, and enjoy his college at the other end of life, not forgetting in the meantime, that the most important part of every man's education is that which he gives himself.—Mechanic's Advocate.

Centennial Notes.

Solid silver bowls worth $100 each are the prizes selected for the successful competitors at the dog show.

A canoe of ash, from the Indians of Vancouver's Island, arrived on Saturday, June 10th. It is 60 feet in length and 8 feet in breadth, with not a chink nor joint discernible. It is dug out with stones and gouges.

Thus far no complaints have been made of any loss of valuables, although not a few of the so called "crooked people" have been seen on the grounds. In this connection mention may be made of a very curious occurrence. Among the visitors a day or two ago were a lady and her husband from the interior of the State. On returning in the evening to the friends with whom they were staying during their visit to the Centennial, the lady was very much surprised to find a purse in her pocket which did not belong to her, and how it came there was a complete mystery. It contained $64, but no papers by which to discover the owner.—It has been advertised, and the owner requested to prove property and take it away. It is the supposition that it was placed in the lady's pocket by a pickpocket, who, having relieved his victim, found himself closely watched and took this means of concealing it to avoid detection.

The department of Public Comfort is a thoughtful design. Here the stranger, fresh from the snorting railway trains outside the grounds, may have his baggage checked and kept to free him from incumbrance the rest of the day at a moderate charge; then he may step inside and await his turn at the rack to get a bite of lunch before entering upon the labor of sight-seeing, which at the Centennial is an immense undertaking. It is like seeing the world in eight hours, and if pushed too rapidly will make one's head dizzy. In the space about the dining-rack of the "Public Comfort" crowded groups of ladies sit on chairs discussing the contents of their lunch-baskets and the hot coffee and tea furnished by waiters. At times the crowd is so great that the place is rendered one of decidedly "public discomfort," but it is a good American baiting place for those in a hurry, as most Americans are generally.—Jeffersonian.

The Exhibition, so far from increasing food prices in Philadelphia, has actually had the effect, by attracting larger supplies, of reducing them. The Commercial List gives a comparison of wholesale prices for some staple articles now, comparing with the quotations at the close of May last year, which shows the market decline. New York or Bradford county butter then was quoted at 29 and 31 cents a pound; now the figures range from 23 to 28 cents. Good quality Pennsylvania eggs, by the barrel, then brought 17 and 18 cents a dozen; now the rate is 12 and 13. Spring chickens, then 35 and 40 cents a pound, are now quoted at 19 and 20 cents. Butchers' meat also shows a decline, though not to this extent.—These are, of course, the wholesale figures, but they indicate a corresponding decline in the retail prices of marketing, and show that we are thoroughly able to feed ourselves and our visitors, and at less cost than this time last year.—Church Advocate.

Help One Another.

This little sentence should be written on every heart, and stamped on every memory. It should be the golden rule practiced not only in every household, but throughout the entire world. By helping one another we not only remove thorns from the pathway and anxiety from the mind, but we feel a sense of pleasure in our own hearts, knowing we are doing good to a fellow-creature. A helping hand, or an encouraging word, is no loss to us, yet it is a benefit to others. Who has not felt the power of this little sentence? Who has not needed the encouragement and aid of a kind friend? How soothing, when perplexed with a task that is mysterious and burdensome, to feel a gentle hand on our shoulder, and to hear a kind voice whispering, "Do you feel discouraged? I see your trouble—let me help you." What strength is inspired, what hope is created, what gratitude is felt, and what difficulty is dissipated as dew beneath the sunshine. Yes; let us help one another by endeavoring to strengthen and encourage the weak and lifting the burdens of care from the weary and oppressed, that life may glide calmly and smoothly on and the fount of bitterness yield sweet waters; and he whose willing hand is ever ready to aid us, will reward our humble endeavors, and every good deed will be as "bread cast upon the waters, to return after many days," if not to us, to those we love.—School, Church and Home.

These are "hard times." I'll tell you why. The nation is spending more money for intoxicating drinks than for all the bread it eats and all the clothes it wears, for all the books it reads, or for all the churches it has ever built. If every one of its accursed drinking saloons could be shut up, and every bottle smashed forever, we should have good times in thirty days. Begin the year by cutting off the tow line, and let the liquor-seller drift into other business.—Ex.

Many of us have to lament not so much a want of opportunities in life as our unreadiness for them when they come, and "it might have been" is oftener the language of our hearts than complaining words. God sends us "flax," but our "spindle and distaff" is out of repair.

"I never complained of my condition but once," said the old man, "when my feet were bare and I had no money to buy shoes, but I met a man without feet and became contented."

Worry is the bane of time. It is everywhere. It comes in a thousand forms, and from ten thousand sources, and its inlets are open wide in the hearts of the multitude.

Human will needs to be broken by repeated disappointment before it becomes meet to receive success.

The art of life is to know how to enjoy a little, not to endure much.

Iowa papers claim "the first instance on record of a successful prayer-meeting on a railroad train, with souls converted while skimming across the country at the rate of forty miles an hour."

The surplus of wheat in California for shipment this season is estimated at 750,000 tons, which exceeds by 200,000 tons the surplus of the crop of 1875.

The importation duties on wool from Mexico, at Brownsville, Texas, which this time last year amounted to over $3,000, this year do not exceed $300. The Mexican revolution is the cause.

Wool has touched 33 cents per pound at Boston, lower than it ever ranged before.

A Baltimore fishwoman was fined the other day $10, on conviction as a "common scold."

A New York doctor recently charged his wife's estate $270 for medical attendance by himself in her last illness, but the courts wouldn't allow it.

Heavy business failures continue to occur in Great Britain, in the manufacturing and colliery interests.

A commercial route from Northern Russia to Behring's Strait, is the object of an expedition to be begun soon under the leadership of Prof. Nordenskiöld.

Anachronism.

To Jacob Mishler.

Dear Brother:—Grace be with thee to die a thousand deaths for Jesus. Paul died at least one death per day, and I do not think that human nature needs less crucifixion now than eighteen centuries ago. 1 Cor. 15: 31.

History is not necessarily truth, although it should be. While it records facts, it also perverts and misapplies them, and sends them to posterity under misrelations and misappellations. As instances see Draper's History of the Rebellion, and Baker's Patristic testimony to infant baptism.

In No. 17 of PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN you give the Old Brethren and River Brethren the relation of Genesis and Exodus. In No. 23 you make them identical. In the first account you say, "There is a body of Christians in the States known as River Brethren, that originated from the Old Brethren." In your "Eclaircissement" you refer the origin of both to the same time and place. If their origin was synchronous, how was it possible for one to originate from the other? If those whom Mr. Hitchcock denominates River Brethren, in his "Analysis of the Bible," are the lineal ancestors of the River Brethren of to-day, then it is evident that the Old Brethren originated from them, and not vice versa. The identity of your historical references necessitates either an independent origin of one party, or a rupture somewhere and at some time, for there is no identity claimed or acknowledged now. Had the River Brethren of to-day a transatlantic origin? Where, then, did the Old Brethren originate? Your "Eclaircissement" speaks only of Genesis, but not of Exodus. If the Genesis of the River Brethren is referable to the event and date assigned by history; where and when was their Exodus? Please eclaircise further.

I think that, upon investigation, my tradition as to the origin of the "body of Christians in the States known as River Brethren," will be found accordant with facts. If otherwise, bring the witnesses into court, and let us hear their deposition. I, for one, am open to conviction, and ready to reverse my decision.

May we go back of the Eder to the Jordan, back of the humanly historical to the Divine, back to Him who is "the Way, the Truth and the Life;" let "our life be hid with Christ in God," and our "calling and election will be sure."

Church News.

Dear Brethren:

At the request of Bro. B. E. Plaine, your agent, I will compile a few items of church news, etc. which you can abridge and publish, or throw into the waste basket.

The Coon River congregation was first organized about 14 years ago, with eight members, one of whom was chosen speaker, and one deacon. Since then they have had regular appointments all the time. The nearest ministerial assistance was seventy miles away. The timid little band has grown gradually and healthfully until now we number about 120 members, making quite a bold company of soldiers, officered and organized—prepared to more effectually defend ourselves and the good cause we have espoused.

We have a good meeting-house and burying ground, and though there are over fifty graves in it, not one member of the church, there having only one died as yet in this congregation. Seven out of the original eight now bow the knee together and mingle their prayers and voices in hymns of praise. Has not our Father spared us for a wise purpose?—Are we all living to that purpose? I fear not.

On the 13th ult., had council meeting, assisted by Elder C. Long and Brother H. Foulck, of Panther Creek. Bro. S. Longacker was ordained, and Bro. Jacob Hamilton forwarded to the second degree of the ministry. Four received by letter. We now have five ministers (two of them ordained) and five deacons.

Public services on 14th conducted by brethren Long and Foulck. One applicant.

On the 23rd the District Council for the Middle District of Iowa met at Dallas Center. Eleven congregations represented by delegates, two by letter and two not represented at all. Eight queries, all disposed of without sending any to A. M. Elder A. Stamy, delegate to A. M. On 27th and 28th, lovefeast at Coon River. Weather fine—attendance large—order good. Ministers from Panther Creek present. Two received by baptism and one by letter.

On the 29th Panther Creek congregation met in council and divided their territory. The part east of N. Coon River, called Dallas Center, has one elder (Michael Sisler), three speakers, seven deacons, about one hundred members and a good meeting-house. West of the river retains the old name, has two elders, C. Long and R. Badger.

On the 10th and 11th, the Panther Creek congregation held a lovefeast. Attendance full and order good. By the above division there was but one minister (Bro. Foulck) beside the elders in this congregation and only two deacons. Held a choice, resulting in S. Badger for speaker and J. Shafer and J. Long for deacons. Ministers from Coon River present.—Panther Creek also has a good house and about 75 members. More anon.

Fraternally,

J. D. HAUGHTLIN.

MAJENICA, Ind., June 15th, 1875.

Brother James:

Permit me to give some church news through the columns of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN from the Salimony church, Huntington county, Indiana.

We had our communion meeting on the 13th, and we truly had a season of rejoicing together. We came together at 3 o'clock and found our house well filled with hearers, and the bench behind the table well filled with speakers who preached unto us the word of eternal life. After service one precious soul came out and was immersed. Then we came together again for the evening services, when we commemorated the death and sufferings of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. The best of order prevailed.

Next morning we came together again and made a choice for two speakers and two deacons. The lots fell on brethren John Eikenberry and Henry Wike for speakers, and brethren Levi Hoover and Jacob Eckman for deacons. May they prove faithful to their calling. Brother Wike is a single man, only twenty-two years old. The burden seems to fall heavily upon him. Oh, may the grace of God be abundantly shed on him! After they were installed in office we had some good exhortation, when two more were made willing to come out on the Lord's side—one of them an old father in his seventieth year, who, when he came out of the water, like the Eunuch, went on his way rejoicing. The members seem revived, and our prayer is, that we may go on with the good work. We number seven speakers and nine deacons.

From your weak brother.

D. SHIDELER.

Bro. Hope's Letter.

Who has read Bro. Hope's letter, and not felt the soul yearn with profound sympathy for his noble cause? His spirit of self-sacrificing humility is so eminently in consonance with every known feature of the true spirit of grace, that every one is forced to exclaim, Truly the hand of the Lord is here!

Banished from this land of peace and plenty, sent away from his dearest associations of brotherly love, across the deep sea, to preach the gospel in a strange land, having the weightiest responsibility of public ministry, and domestic cares, all depending upon the church for success and support,—it is enough to make his heart beat with those pulsations of anxiety, which can only be allayed by the prompt aid and sympathy of the Brethren.

Who will not come up to the help of the Lord, and of Brother Hope, in this glorious work? Could the same spirit that inspired his profound consecration of the tenth of his future earnings to the support of the mission, pervade the brotherhood, we might then look for results which would make the heavens resound, and shake the earth with everlasting hallelujahs. All this too without the loss of one farthing to any who would contribute thus in the spirit of simplicity. The promises of recompense are written in the Book. Here, there, and everywhere they sparkle, like gems in the diadem of a king. Who will accept, who will believe them? Shall we roll in wealth and pamper selfishness with a superabundance of life's necessities and luxuries? shall we accumulate our thousands until they rust? shall we build fortunes upon the starvation of our missionaries and the failure of our missions? God forbid! Were we guilty of this sin—should this crying shame rest upon our heads in the day of judgment—how could we stand in the presence of that glorious, saintly host, who, in all the ages, sacrificed property and life for the cause of their king. The holy apostolic churches would rise up and condemn us, for they spared none of their dearest earthly interests; the radiant multitude of martyrs would rise up and condemn us, for they lay not only their goods but themselves, upon the altar.—The people of Denmark would rise up and condemn us, for in their spiritual poverty they cried to us for the gospel, and we gave it not. Oh, let every one awake—let us shake off those lethargic conditions

Which Shall I Take?

This is often a serious question with the invalid. He finds the market flooded with proprietary medicines, scores of which are recommended as certain cures for his peculiar ailment. He reads the papers, circulars, and almanacs, and finds each sustained by plausible arguments setting forth its virtues and its specific action. The recommendations are as strong for one as for another. The cures claimed to have been wrought by one are as wonderful as those claimed to have been wrought by another. In his perplexity and doubt the sufferer is sometimes led to reject all. But it must be borne in mind that this condition of things is one that cannot be remedied. In a land where all are free, the good—the truly valuable—must come into competition with the vile and worthless, and must be brought to public notice by the same instrumentality, which is advertising. In such a case, perhaps the only absolute proof that a remedy is what it claims to be, is to try it.—The "test of a pudding is the eating of it." "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good," is the apostolic injunction. There may, however, be stronger presumptive evidence in favor of one remedy than there is in favor of another, and this should be allowed its due weight.—A due regard to this may save a vast amount of experimenting and a useless outlay of money. As presumptive evidence in favor of Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines, the Proprietor desires to say, that they are prepared by a new and scientific process by which the virtues of the crude plants and roots are extracted without the use of a particle of alcohol. Not a particle of this destroyer of our race enters into the composition of either his Golden Medical Discovery or Favorite Prescription. This consideration alone ought certainly to rank them high above the vile compounds saturated with alcohol, Jamaica rum, sour beer, or vinegar, which are everywhere offered for sale.—Again, they are of uniform strength, and their virtues can never be impaired by age. They are also made from the fresh herbs and roots, gathered in their appropriate season, when they are flush with medicinal properties. In support of these claims, the following testimony is offered:

NEWARK, N. J.

R. V. PIERCE, M. D.:
Dear Sir:—I have sold a great deal of your excellent remedies, and I prefer to sell them before others, because they give good satisfaction to those who use them. I hear such remarks as "Sage's Catarrh Remedy completely cured me; it is a splendid thing;" or, "Pierce's Discovery is just what I wanted; I feel better than I ever did." One of our celebrated singers uses it for strengthening her voice, and says "there is nothing equals it;" and so I might give scores of remarks said about your preparations. A colored woman was using your Discovery, and after taking three bottles was completely cured. She, being in the store, said to me, "I don't want no doctors 'round me so long as I can get the Discovery; it beats all your doctors." And so I might go on.

I am, most respectfully, yours,
ATHA B. CROOKS.

strikes at the root of disease by purifying the blood, restoring the liver and kidneys to a healthy action, invigorating the nervous system.

The only standard remedy for hemorrhage, bronchial and all pulmonary complaints. Consumptives and those predisposed to weak lungs should not fail to use this great vegetable remedy.

Its marvelous power, not only over consumption, but over every chronic disease where a gradual alterative action is needed. Under its use the cough is loosened, the night sweats diminished, the pain subsides, the pulse returns to its natural standard, the stomach is improved in its power to digest and assimilate food, and every organ has a purer and better quality of blood supplied to it out of which new recreative and plastic material is made. Price one dollar. Six bottles $5. If your druggist or storekeeper has not got it, we will forward half dozen to any address on receipt of price, freight pre-paid.

Should the bowels be costive, or head-ache accompany your disease, the patient should procure a box of

DR. SWAYNE'S TAR PILLS.

HOME TESTIMONY.

I was sorely afflicted with one of the most distressing of all diseases, Protruding Piles, or more commonly called Itching Piles. The itching at times was almost intolerable, increased by scratching, and not unfrequently becoming quite sore. I bought a box of Swayne's Ointment; its use gave quick relief, and in a short time made a perfect cure. I can now sleep undisturbed, and I would advise all who are suffering with this distressing complaint to procure Swayne's Ointment at once. I had tried prescriptions almost innumerable, without finding any permanent relief.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

Never Despair—Something that Never Fails.—FEVER AND AGUE. To the sick it is of little consequence how they are cured, whether from a rational view of the disease, or by the rules defined for the guidance of the profession, so long as the cure is certain and expeditious. To a suffering man the question on the relative merits of quinine or calomel is uninteresting. The faculty may wrangle and discuss their various theories, but Dr. Holloway's treatment dispels doubt ere the disciples of Esculapius have finished the first stage. Holloway's pills are the only remedies which effect a speedy and radical cure without danger of a relapse. 185

GRASSES.

O, life that hideth in the sod,
How sweet and beautiful thou art;
Like Aaron's mystic almond rod,
By miracle the grasses start.
They cropt about the naked land,
In silence shod they nimbly run:
They clothe the rock and deck the sand
And spread their velvets in the sun.
Upon a mighty loom they ply
With shuttle flying far and wide,
And woven in this tapestry
See buttercups and daisies pied.
O, sweet this green and humble home,
For all earth's kind that breathe and sing,
This dewy footstool 'neath the dowe
Joy gives to every living thing.
O, sweet this fond, maternal care,
For nameless weeds that flower and fade;
And teeming millions flourish there,
The weakest races God has made.
O, sweet to think when day is done,
And tired we seek the common breast,
Like all that gaze upon the sun,
We, too, beneath this cloak shall rest.

Doing all Things in the Name of the Lord.

BY W. ARNOLD.

"And whatever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus."—Col. 3: 17.

The subject we wish to offer a few thoughts upon is doing all things in the name of the Lord. I have been thinking about this matter for some time but more especially since I read the discussion between Bro R. H. Miller and elder A. Walker. Seeing he (Walker) made so much ado about that one great and wonderful name, which really is to the Christian a great name, and the one only name through which salvation is obtained, and through it Christians must do all things, whether it is eating, drinking, making bargains, measuring, weighing and indeed everything that is done by the child of God, must be done in that name; for there is salvation in none other. Acts 4: 12.

The question is not what is to be done in that great name, but how to do it in that great name.

1. It is not done by simply attaching the name of the Lord to it, or by using the name of Christ when we are doing an act that one may call a religious act. We must be careful that we do not use the name of Christ in vain. For instance, it is claimed and argued that baptism is legally done if when we perform the act, we use the formula given to us by the Master, though it be done by an unbeliever, or even an infidel. I will ask can an infidel do any thing in the name of the Lord while he is in that belief or faith? We answer No. And why not? Because he denies Christ in toto, and consequently cannot perform one single act lawfully in the name of Christ the character whom he denies. No more can an unbeliever while in unbelief do any thing in the name of Christ.

2. In order to do any thing in the name of Christ, it must be done with the sanction and by the authority of the Law of Christ; it must be done in accordance with his prescribed law, and by the characters authorized by that law to do it. In order to make baptism lawful, and to have it done in the name of the Lord, there must be a lawful administrator, a lawful subject (a believer) a lawful place, and a lawful amount of water, that is sanctioned by the law of God; then baptizing them into the three great names given in the commission. When it is done in this way, it is done in that one only great name, though it be not used more than it is used in the formula given in the commission.

I illustrate: I live in the great state of Ohio, in which, as in other states, we have laws to govern the people of the state, in which all deeds for real estate, either trust mortgage or warrantee, must be acknowledged by an officer authorized and qualified by the law of the state, to make it valid; and in said acknowledgment the name of the state must be put. Now any man could attach the name of the state to such instrument; but it would not be lawful, and, therefore, would not stand. No, it must be put there by a man recognized and authorized by the law to make it lawful.

Again: A warrant for the arrest of any person, summons, subpoena, or other such instrument, must have the name of the state attached to make it valid; and it must be put there by the persons authorized by the state to do it. So in the work and worship of God. The name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost do not constitute the one great name, neither does it take the name of the Lord to constitute the three, but inasmuch as the Son was the only character that could redeem us it was necessary that God should give all power to the Son to redeem and save us, and to cut off all possible hope or chance of being saved in any other way. Had he not done so, it would have been useless for Christ to have come and suffered for the human family; for one could have said, "I will go to heaven this way, and another that." Now all such ideas are forever cut off, and other ways entirely closed and forever shut. Jesus says, "I am the way, the truth, and the life; and no man cometh unto my Father but by me." Hence you see that to do any thing in the name of the Lord Jesus, it must be done in accordance with this law, whether it be feet washing, the Supper, salutation, communion, teaching, praying, or any other duty laid down in that great law; and in that case the great, good and perfect law will sanction the work, and attach that great name to it, and all will be done in the name of the Lord Jesus. If we had not the form laid down by the Lord himself in the commission, and were only commanded to baptize in the name of the Lord, then it would be lawful for us to dip once, and that in the name of the Lord. But Jesus never told us to go and teach all nations baptizing them in the name of the Lord, but to go and teach all nations and "in the name of the Lord" to baptize "them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost;" i. e. we are to go in that great name, and in that great name, to teach all nations, and in that great name baptize the taught, according to the command given in the commission.

The apostle Peter commanded Cornelius to be baptized in the name of the Lord; but that does not change the command of the Lord in the commission. He was a Gentile, and the Brethren who were Jews did not believe up to this time that the Gentiles had any part in the Lord, and hence it was all right for him to command them to be baptized in the name of the Lord, since there was no other name in which they could be baptized and receive any benefit from it.

If it takes the three names,—

Father, Son, and holy Ghost,—to constitute the one great name of the Lord why is it that it is argued by the same party that three actions in baptism are three baptisms? If it takes the three names to make one great name, why not three actions in baptism to make, or constitute, the one great baptism? If that argument proves anything for single immersion, it proves too much. Nay it is conclusive that the great command of our Master must be obeyed to the letter; and when we do that, we do it in the name of the Lord. When we wash one another's feet, we have no formula of words to use; but we are to wash one another's feet, and that must be done in the one great name. It is the same in relation to the supper, communion, and saluting one another. "All things, whatsoever ye do, do all in the name of the Lord i. e. with the sanction of his law. But suppose we take the communion in the morning and have no supper, neither wash feet at all, and suppose we add the name of the Lord to it, will that be doing it in the name of the Lord Jesus? No, it would not. Why? Because it would not have the sanction of his law, and we would be using the name of our God in vain, the same as for me to sit down and write a warrant to arrest some person and to attach the name of the state of Ohio to it, which would have no force, because it would not have the sanction of the law of the state, and consequently would be forgery, and an attempt to enforce it would be dangerous, and the party writing it and the party trying to enforce it would be punishable by law for such a flagrant act and gross violation of law. So, we think, in religious matters, for us to use or attach the name of Christ to anything that we may invent and call it religion is unsafe; and not only so, but dangerous and wrong, not having the sanction of that great and perfect law of Christ.

Here are your Picnics, your Sunday School celebrations, your church festivals, your mite societies, and many other things, to all of which the name of the Lord is attached, but are they done in the name of the Lord? Does the law of God sanction them? No, verily, the law of God does not sanction them, and therefore they cannot be done in the name of the Lord; and when we, the members of the body of Christ, go and mingle with them, we leave Christ at home, or somewhere else, and are doing what we do in the name of the world. Christ being the author and finisher of our faith, God must of necessity concentrate all the means of grace in him, and exclude all other ways or means of salvation. Not that God has nothing to do in saving us, but to make his redemptive plan effective, he must bring all in through Christ, i. e. through his name, and will not and cannot accept of any short of that; for should he accept any one, or only one soul, in any other way than through the name of Christ, he would at once destroy the work of Christ and make his law contradictory. A certain minister in our county here when he baptizes any one, adds to the formula this: "In the name of the Lord I baptize you in the name of the Father," &c., as though that added strength to the work, and then gives them one dip.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Do you Pray for your Ministers?

BY C. SECRIST.

The apostles frequently asked the prayers of their brethren. If those who spake by inspiration, or, as God gave them utterance, felt the need of their brethren's praying for them, do not God's ministers to-day need the prayers of their brethren and sisters, when they stand before you to proclaim the word of eternal life? They are but fallible men, and need your prayers in their behalf. They stand before you as God's ministers—"ambassadors for Christ"—charged with the most important message ever delivered to men. They are frequently weighed down with a sense of responsibility, and shed tears, spending hours in a secret place in prayer, while many, like our Savior's disciples, instead of watching, fall asleep. Brethren, your prayers and sympathies will help them bear their burden. If your ministers have no burden of precious souls, pray that they may have; and the heavier the burden, the more they need the help of your prayers. Every time God's messenger stands before you to preach Christ, God's people should be around him as a wall, and their constant prayers should rot only keep Satan from their midst, but secure the presence of the Holy Spirit, that saints may be edified and sinners be saved.

They also need your prayers in their hours of study, that they may be wise in winning souls, and by your faithful prayers help to bring all the church into living sympathy with each other in the work of saving souls.

Pray for them at your family altars. I fear there are many who disparage the work of the ministry. Your children will learn this from the vast amount of unwholesome literature and from the words of others. Let your prayers and conversation constantly remind your household that your sympathies are with Christ's ambassadors. Thus you will teach your children to love and respect those set as watchmen on the walls of Zion, and help them to lead your children to Christ.

It is a comfort and pleasure when parents can supply the temporal wants of their children, but far greater if they can lead them early to Christ, and have their spiritual wants supplied. If we are zealously engaged in the cause of Christ, and in behalf of his ambassadors, we will not hinder their work by unkind criticisms; we will not take part with ungodly men against them; but will work with them, praying always, with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints, and for all true ministers of Christ, that utterance may be given them that they may speak boldly and make known the mystery of the gospel.

The Full Beard.

BY GEO. W. ANNON.

As there is considerable said about a full beard at this time among the brethren, I thought I would offer a few thoughts upon it, as some are for shaving off the beard and think it right, are honest in their opinion, no doubt, as well as those who wear the full beard.

The Hebrews regarded a thin scanty beard as a great deformity; while a long, full beard was esteemed the noblest ornament of personal beauty and dignity. A man's honor was lodged, as it were, in his beard. To insult it by word or act was the grossest indignity; to take it respectfully in the right hand and kiss it, was a mode of expressing high esteem and love; permitted only to the nearest friends. It was cherished with great care. Psa. 133: 2, Dan. 10: 3, To neglect, tear or cut it, indicated the deepest grief, (Ezra 9: 3, Isa. 15: 2, Jer. 41: 5, 48: 27,) while to be deprived of it was a mark of servility and infamy. These facts explain many passages of Scripture, as the gross insult offered to David's ambassadors, 2 Sam. 10: 4—14; the zealous indignation of Nehemiah, Neh. 13: 25; the mode in which the feigned insanity of David was expressed, 1 Sam. 21: 13; the grief of Mophibosheth, 2 Sam. 20: 9. The Jews shaved their beards and hair in time of mourning, repentance or distress, (see Job 1:20; also Jer. 48:37,) and in certain ceremonial purifications, Lev. 14:9, Num. 8:8. At other times they wore their beard long, like other oriental nations, except the Egyptians, who kept their beards shaven as we learn from Herodotus and from antique monuments.

I have offered a few selections and passages of scripture upon the beard; and upon the whole, I think, it was the custom of our ancient fathers to wear a full beard, except under such circumstances as I have pointed out to the friendly reader. I love to see our brethren have a full beard, and not shave in so many different styles and fashions as we see some, as the Annual Meeting in 1874 said those who followed the fashions of the world would fall into the hands of the counsel of the church. I always knew the Brethren by their long, full beard. God has caused it to grow upon our faces, and I think, it becomes a man very much to let it grow long and full, which I think no one can or ought to object to. I believe it to be right, and if I were to shave my beard off, I would think I were doing wrong and what I ought not to do.

Secret Societies.

When a parent sends his or her child to school or on an errand, or to play with a friend, and on returning you ask if it has learned its lesson well, or what made it so long gone on the errand; if the child has learned its lessons well, or if it has a good reason for being gone so long; or if it has spent its play day in innocence, then the child will be free to tell all that has occurred freely to the parent in whom it trusts. But if time has been misspent at school; if instead of doing the errand quickly the child has loitered carelessly by the way, or if the playday was spent doing what was known to be wrong, then with a fallen countenance of sin it will be speechless, as are all members of secret societies when asked what their secrets are. The parent thinks it has good proof that something wrong has been done; just so when your wife and children ask you what you do at your lodge, you dare not tell; and thus your children whom you would have pure and good, are taught by your actions that it is right to keep that which they do not wish you to know, secret. Thus you teach them not to confess their little faults and ask your forgiveness, but to keep them burning in their little breasts to torture them with a guilty conscience.

We all know that when a child does one wrong and keeps it from being known, it helps it to do a greater wrong, and so it keeps on from bad to worse until you find your child a liar and then a thief. All who want their children to have secrets they dare not tell parents all who want husbands to have secrets they dare not tell their wives, and wives their husbands, all who want crimes to be upheld by secrecy, all who want their case to gain the day in the lawsuit, right or wrong, may join secret societies.

All who wish their children to believe that all they do is just and right because you are not afraid to take them wherever you go, and give them good reasons for all you do, all who wish to teach their children the Bible unchanged by man, all who wish to keep husband and wife, children and parents together in the same society, ought to let secret societies alone and try and show your neighbors and friends the folly of them. Some say families have secrets they don't tell; the marriage state was ordained of God and no other secret society ever was, though some say they were.

Some people say also that secret societies do much good; but the good they do is like the sugar in a baby's medicine to make the bitter stuff taste well while it is being taken. It is one of God's laws that murder will out; so will secrecy of all kinds; for anything good, honorable and just, needs no cloak of secrecy to shield it.—H. B. Hulburt in Western Rural.

The Little Things.

The spirit that rules in a Christian's heart is the spirit of Christ. And the spirit of Christ is a self-sacrificing and self-devoted spirit. And this spirit will show itself in little things and on humble occasions as in the most conspicuous affairs of life. Life is made up of little things. However long the journey, it is taken step by step. However long the story, it is written chapter by chapter and scene by scene. Grand occasions of action, and conspicuous opportunities of serving our fellow-men, come to but few of us; and to those whom they visit, they come but seldom. If one be called, in some great hour of trial, to bear witness to the truth by going to the martyr's stake, it is but once in his earthly lifetime. It is seldom that we can give up all that is fair and pleasant to us in life to secure the happiness of another.

But the whole long day, and every day, is full of opportunities to make sacrifices for the comfort and advantage of our kindred and friends. And if we have the heart to forego our own choices and hopes for the sake of brightening the way of a companion, and making his life sweeter and happier, it is as much a triumph of the martyr spirit as though we consented to be bound and scourged rather than be false to our faith and our vows.

You are busy with your own thoughts or pursuits, and some one in the family circle calls your name; the call breaks in upon your musing or your working with an unwelcome earnestness. Now you can turn a deaf ear to that call, or a fretful and petulant face; or you can yield it a cheerful attention, giving interested audience, and suspending your own planning and doing to gratify and serve your comrade. Which procedure will love and self-sacrifice prompt? Can you doubt?

You start out for a walk with a friend. He wishes to go in one direction, and you in another. Give up your own choice for his, without letting him know that you have suffered any disappointment. That is love's selfishness. The morning paper comes in with the fresh story of all yesterday's life. You take it eagerly in hand, and just then you catch the glance of another eager eye fastened hungrily upon the unread columns. Forego your own craving curiosity to put the sheet into the hand of this impatient spirit, and you have acted out once more the Christian spirit.

There is a favorite seat in the family sitting room, to which you are making your way, wearied with your walk or your work, when it occurs to you that another languid as you are was, perhaps, moving toward the same destination. Turn off from your road without betraying your change of purpose, and drop into another seat, and you have honored the example and copied the spirit of Jesus.

In respect to all the conveniences of home—the favorite book, the most cheerful fireside corner, the fairest fruit, the tenderest "cut," the most agreeable companionship—give another the preference, and deny your own desire, and the Master will crown you as one in whom his spirit has won its difficult victories.—A. L. Stone, in Pacific.

CONCLUSIVE REASONING.—A great deal of the theological reasoning is very inconclusive. It is pretty much like that of an exchange with reference to groves around houses of worship. The writer in said exchange is opposed to these groves, and so he straightway goes to the Bible for proof of his position. He finds the following prohibition in the Old Testament: "Thou shalt not plant thee a grove of trees near unto the altar of the Lord thy God." That settles the question! Evidently we must not have our country meeting houses in a grove!

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
ZACCHEUS.

BY JAS. Y. DECKLER.

Zaccheus climbed upon a tree,
That he the Savior, too, might see,
As he was passing by.

He ran a little way before,
And climbed upon a sycamore,
Just as the throng was nigh.

Whom Jesus came unto the place,
And looking up, beheld his face,
He spake to him and said,

"Make haste, Zaccheus, and come down," (Although he knew the Jews would frown,
And murmur at the deed.)

He still continued on to say,
"I must abide with thee to-day,
And be thy worthy guest."

Zaccheus hast'ning from the tree,
Received the Savior joyfully,
Obeying his behest.

"Zaccheus hasten from the tree,"
The Savior calls to you and me;
O, sinner! hear him call!

"I must abide with thee to-day,"
Still hear the loving Savior say;
O, hear it one and all!

"Come down, come down." O, hear his voice,
And he will make your heart rejoice,
If you obey his word.

Come down and enter through the door,
There's danger on the sycamore,
If you would see the Lord.

It is not now as it was then,
That we can see the Son of Man,
By climbing on a tree.

Instead of climbing up some way,
We must come down, and him obey,
If we the Lord will see.

How many people now-a-day,
Climb freely up some other way,
Than going through the door;
Surprising us that they should come,
To make a choice to climb up some Sectarian sycamore.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
The Voice of God.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

A dreadful voice, even in his whisper. It sighs in the zephyr, roars in the Euroclydon, rolls in the thunder. "The word was with God, and the WORD WAS GOD. All things were made by Him; and without Him was not anything made that was made." All things originated in the Word, God intends that the Word be heard in all things. Not only are all things by Him but for Him. Here is the key-note to all the voices in the universe. "The Word was made flesh," and "hath spoken unto us," gathering unto His utterances the meaning of the great, everlasting vocabulary of Deity. O what an ear is that which catches all echoes in Christ! God is a declaratory god, breathing music through ten million eolian-lyres, rolling with the deep, terrible bass of ocean, earthquake, and volcano, making the ages a continuous Epiphany. Rightly understood, there is nothing, from the cedar to the hyssop, from the Alps to the atom, from the ocean to the dewdrop, from the sun to the glow-worm, that does not speak for Jesus and plead for a redemption. "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now." What a voice is that! Hear it concentrated in the earth-rocking, granite-rendering, sun-veiling, Hell-defeating, Heaven-satisfying, man-redeeming, "ELOI, ELOI, LAMA SA BACHITHANI" of the Son of God. Every word in the Bible and in nature must be interpreted by the cross. The voice that has no Calvary in it is not the voice of God. Everything speaks of sin, atonement, salvation, destruction. "The stars in their courses" preach Jesus. The sun shines the glory of the Cross. The waters laugh out in hearty jubilation the sinless joys of the Upper World. Voices, voices above, beneath, around, within, all blending and terminating in "the Name which is above every name—Jesus.

The voice of God: who has not heard it? and yet who has? Loud, long, thrilling. Silence has a voice, how eloquent; and darkness, how persuasive. The still, sleepless mid night hours have preached the most abandoned profligates into repentance. Were the voice of God recognized in all its utterances, it would be heard crying out against every violation of law physical and moral. Were the voice of God always translated into action, what upsetting of money-stands, scourging of unholy traffickers, demolishing of dainty family dishes, ripping of tobacco packages, and smashing of well-sucked smoke-pipes there would be! Every twinge of agony I suffer in my poor body tells me that God is holy, and that His law cannot be infringed with impunity. The voice of God constantly pleads, and urges, and impels in the direction of His predestinated purpose in Christ Jesus. He has given us neither time nor money nor gifts to create and foster artificial habits, or to give a loose rein to natural impulses. The natural is not to be abused, and the unnatural not to be generated. And yet both are so prevalent in the Church, as to cripple her energies and defraud the Almighty of His due. "The word of God is quick and powerful," and there is not a rational being on earth whose physical infirmities and moral dislocations do not testify to "sin, righteousness, and judgment." With what warning, entreaty, and denunciation it comes from sick-beds, shrouds and coffins and graves. Who heeds it? Who ejects his quid, or throws away his pipe because ten thousand voices of woe—all warning voices of God—come from crazy brains, shattered constitutions, ever-aching nerves, and empty, useless lives, made so by tobacco and other pernicious indulgences? Harken, O ye sons of men, for Jehovah speaks. Ponder well, and apply faithfully, in all you do. Gal. 6: 7, 8.

The voice of God. It has marshaled all the denizens of the Upper Realm, and put them on the wing in the service of thankless, self-pleasing man. Heb. 1: 14. Hatred to its authority has enlisted all the fire-seared rebels of the pit, bringing into play every weapon in the armory of hell to oppose the Eternal Sovereign, and defeat the one great end dearest to His heart. Eph. 6: 12. The immortal soul is at stake, and Heaven and Hell are in awful combat for its deliverance and destruction. Both contestants know its value and capacities. All that is contained within the star-sown immensity of these vast girdling heavens is not worth as much as one soul. What are we doing for its emancipation from the dominion of evil? We know what God has done, and is doing; are we seconding His mighty enterprise with an ardor and constancy corresponding to our "high calling?" Are our efforts commensurate with our obligations? Do the tremendous realities of Eter-Life and eternal damnation weigh upon our consciences, inspire, and direct our energies, as they should? If the Godhead put Himself to a strain to make salvation possible, what power may we leave untaxed and what means unused, to make it actual? Have we done, and are we doing, what the Cross requires and what our baptism has pledged, to make the will of God triumphant on the earth as it is in Heaven? Is there not the sound of mockery in the petition, "Thy kingdom come?" The Voice of voices says, GO. The first, all-embracing response is "Lo, I COME TO DO THY WILL, O God." Go in self-sacrifice. "Regard not your STUFF." Go in prayer and weeping. Go in the "love of righteousness and hatred of iniquity." Go in love to those who defy God, who have for themselves enthroned the Devil, who have made a covenant with Hell, and an agreement with eternal corruption and woe. Go in the strength of Jehovah, in the terror of Everlasting Love, and in the confidence of Everlasting Purity, lift the Cross on high as the only hope of mankind, and, if need be, seal your testimony with your blood. "Go, and prosper." Thus did "the Captain of our salvation," and this is the martial law for all the enlisted in the ranks of "the Lord of Sabaoth." If Christ had been the effeminate laggard His church is, He had never reached Golgotha. We are not on play-dill, sporting in the glitter and fascination of parade, but in deadly conflict with the arch foe of God and man. "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you likemen, be strong." TAKE AIM, FIRE, sound the solemn, Divine command all along the line. "Here is the mind which hath wisdom." The sword must first be thrust into our own bosoms, and be bathed in our own blood, before we can "wax valiant in fight." Alas! while the few kill themselves into life, the many kill themselves with death. Matth. 10: 39. Rev. 2: 23. We all carry death-wounds. Blessed are they who bleed out their souls with Christ. Woe to them that die of the venom of the old serpent. Since I commenced writing this article, how many have vanished from the probationary stage, with the groan of hell on their lips, and the agonizing quiver of damnation in their spirits. Still they are going, these priceless, deathless, sin deformed, God-acursed souls in awful, writhing shoals of horror into the "lake of fire burning with brimstone." Can we, do we try, to bring the damnation of our fellow-beings, neighbors and relatives, to our hearts with the self-crucifying, Heaven-winning, all-dominating earnestness begotten of the Cross?

The voice of God. It calls to holiness, consecration, self-consuming zeal in the work of the Lord. Are we holding up the hands of the Greater than Moses in His millennial war with the Amalekites of Hell? Did Christ die only for America? It is no valid plea against missionary effort that the evangel of salvation has already encircled the world. If it has made the circuit of the globe twenty times, what of that? The blood of the cross is for the race, and not for a tribe; for all time, and not for the early centuries only. The commission emphatically avers this "Go ye into all the world," allows not an inch to be excepted. "And, lo, I AM WITH YOU ALWAYS, EVEN UNTO THE END OF THE AGES" no less rigidly binds the Church to a world-wide evangelization to the sealing of mundane history. The commission is geographically and chronologically universal. Ours is an ecumenical Gospel, and "the ministry of reconciliation" is co extensive 2 Cor. 5: 19. There was no all world's plea when Christ delivered His charge that has not equal force today. The object was salvation, and the reason, sin. The one is as hideous, and the other as precious and glorious now, as when the God man "bowed his head and gave up the Ghost." There is no argument against an ecumenical ministry that does not theoretically depreciate the blood of Emmanuel. A geographical restriction, grounded in the nature and purpose of the atonement, is a worse than Calvinistic election. As the soul is housed in the body, and limited in its operations by the condition and locomotion of the body; so the Holy Ghost executes His office in relation to the world through the body of Christ. God does not step outside of the Body and convert the heathen by an independent operation. The Church is the organization of Deity, and Christ works by the body He has assumed. Therefore go ye, and teach all nations. Here there can be no excuse that does not dishonor the Cross. Let as much money as has been uselessly spent at our Annual Councils in the last ten years, and as much as has been worse than cast away on tobacco and other vanities in the same period, be spent in judicious missionary endeavor, mainly at home, for the next decade, and thousands of wilderness acres will be torn up with the Gospel plow, and thousands of golden sheaves be gathered into the Barn of the Great Husbandman. We have no plea to present to God for ourselves that does not belong to every soul on the earth. No one can offer the Lord's Prayer aright without including every inch of the globe and every individual of the race. All zones, latitudes and longitudes, are the property of Jesus, and if we are to be "joint heirs" with Him, we must also be joint workers. Heb 1: 2; Rom. 8: 17; 1 Cor. 3: 9. We have many noble Christian heroes in the Brotherhood; but as a church we are sadly delinquent. In some instances we may have relied too much on human judgment, as in the Maine Mission. But even that was not wholly a failure: it furnished data for wiser operations in the future. The correspondence of John Dennis engendered a foregone conclusion in the minds of competent judges that for him the mission would be in vain. The door opened in Denmark has unmistakable indications of Divine providence. If it is of the Lord, it requires the Lord's method of success. THE CROSS ALONE CAN SUSTAIN IT, and that means more than prayer. Let us pray for our beloved Danish Missionary as we do for our daily bread. In the one case prayer means a vigorous use of plow and harrow, drill and reaper. In the other case prayer means self-sacrifice and greenbacks. Such prayers are at par in the Exchange of the Golden City. It cost money, and houses, and lands, and families, and comforts, and life to bring the Gospel to America; it cost the eternal God His Beloved and Only Begotten Son to bring it into the world; it is still the Gospel of the Cross, and must track its course in blood wherever it goes. Pray out of your hearts and out of your purses for the triumph of Emmanuel. Nothing short of this will save the world or ourselves. Matth. 6: 19—24.

Once more: As God had his conditions for working out the redemptive scheme, we must adhere to the same in the working out of redemptive results; namely, perfect harmony of feeling and purpose in relation to the end contemplated. John 17: 21, 22, 23. To fill the grand office God has assigned us requires a relation of parts and concurrence of effort in the Mystical Body like that which Paul describes in Eph. 4: 15, 16. Let this figure be the felt and acknowledged status of the Church, and we will be the wonder of the world, the glory of God, the admiration of angels, and the consternation of devils. Let Jesus the Christ be the Head of all our thinking, and the Heart of all our emotion. God Himself would laugh at the fair play He would have with the powers of darkness through His own terrestrial instrumentality. "I, yet not I, but Christ in me," is the true philosophy of the Christian Life, and the true method of evangelization. From this Head let the whole body be fitly joined together and compacted. O how the Christ-loving soul palpitates, with holy ardor in contemplating these words. The whole body, not only articulated but fitly; and not only fitly joined, but compacted. And all this "by that which every joint supplieth." Truly, there is "no sehism in the body," if we let the Head rule. "According to the effectual working in the measure of every part." This is the voice of God calling for the co operation of every member—even the little toe. None so insignificant as to be without its "measure" of power and responsibility for "effectual working." A common Head, common interest, common obligations, fit relation, compact conjunction, the entire organization a unit—this "maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love." This is the condition of robustness and achievement. This alone fulfills the August Commission in which centre the Mind and Heart of the Triune God. "ALWAYS ABOUNDING IN THE WORK OF THE LORD." 1 Cor. 15: 58.

Glorifying in the Cross.

Synopsis of a Sermon Delivered in the M. E. Church, Greeley, Col., Sunday, June 25th, by J. S. Elory.

"God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ," &c. Galatians 6: 14.

In the examination of our text this morning, we will necessarily be led to take a brief view of the life and character of the apostle Paul, who is the author. This prayer,—for prayer it is,—cometh from a heart thoroughly imbued with the Spirit of divine grace. It is a fitting outburst of that overcoming faith which so beautifully characterized this eminent apostle. Being in perfect harmony with the true principles of the Christian religion, we feel to present the sentiment to you for due consideration.

"God forbid," that is, to say, "May the Lord give me strength and grace to overcome the natural inclination of the human mind to glory in flesh—in men—or in anything else but the cross of Christ."

"To glory," is to exult in or to rejoice. And the desire of the apostle was that he may rejoice only in the cross of the Lord Jesus Christ. How like is this expression of the apostle to that of the Corinthians, where he says, "For I determined not to know anything among you but Jesus Christ and him crucified."

That we may understand the reason why this worthy apostle so decided, it may be necessary to take a review of his former life. Brought up as he was, at the feet of Gamaliel, he had every advantage of a thorough education, especially in the Jewish religion. Zealously inclined, he became noted, even in his youth, for being a strong advocate for the perpetuity of the Jewish covenant, and a bitter opponent of that more perfect law of liberty—the gospel of Christ. He volunteered his services to go and help extinguish that vital spark of religion that was beginning to shed its refulgent light around upon a benighted world. But how futile the attempt of men to fight against God! In the prosecution of his desires, God's strong arm arrested him. Conviction was riveted upon him, as the result of God's miraculous interference. Conviction brought penitence, and penitence brought pardon and thorough conversion. Sacrificing all earthly considerations that stood in the way of duty, he immediately went forward in the discharge of the work God would have him do. There was no faltering on his part, or desire to tarry awhile in the tents of Kedar. By the aid of the illuminating light of God's grace in the heart, regenerated Saul, was made to see clearly that no longer could man be justified by the law. When the commandment came, he died to the law by the body of Christ. No marvel; then, that he determined to know only Jesus and him crucified. It was evident to his mind that now justification came through faith and salvation through grace. The glorious truths of the Christian religion became to him the savor of life unto life, and it was this that prompted Paul to glory in the cross of Christ.

Having shown the primary cause why Paul forsook all to follow Christ, we next will look a little to his life while propagating the glad tidings of salvation. We are of the opinion that Paul's surroundings were such that he had many temptations to resist. He might have gloried in his literary attainments—might have followed the drawings of ambition to be great in the world—or even have been led by the dazzling splendors of the god of Mammon, to seek a place of luxury and ease. But nay, none of these did he glory in, but cast all from him and regarded them as dross that he might win Christ. How unlike many of the great in his day, who, though they believed in Christ, because they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God, would not confess him. Paul was not ashamed of the gospel of Christ. He even gloried in persecutions, in trials, and all manner of sufferings. He gloried in everything that had the cross of Christ in it. That which had not Christ and his cross in it, to him was no glory, no joy. Oh, the wonderful transforming power there is in the cross of Christ! It takes away the proud spirit of carnal exaltation. Worldly ambition is laid in the dust. All the glories, honors and allurements of this vain world became eclipsed by the glory and brightness of the cross of Christ. The shades of time gather around and hover over all earthly glories, but the glory of the cross comes in transcendent beauty from heaven—yea from the eternal skies, made radiant with the spanning bow of God's promise. It was this looking forward to the glory yet to be revealed that gave Paul such peculiar strength to fight the fight of faith and hold out faithful unto the end. Faith held the crown of glory ready to crown him an heir of God indeed. Oh, the transporting rapture that arose to the mind of aged Paul when he was ready to depart! He who in life gloried only in the cross of Christ, now could glory in the prospective crown laid up for all who believe in Christ. Having gloried in the cross, and having been crucified unto the world and the world unto him, he could now, in a measure, realize what a life was awaiting those who are dead to the world and alive to God.

We shall next try to impress our minds with the necessity of making this matter a matter of personal experience. The religion of Jesus is a religion of a nature applicable to individuals, in the first place, and then, through the combined influence of Christians the blessing is of a nature that we might term general or national. How is it with us as individuals? Do we harbor that desire that we shall glory only in the cross of the Lord Jesus Christ? I fear we forget to pray, as did Paul, "God forbid" that we should glory in aught but the cross. We preach of the cross—talk, it may be, daily, of it—sing of the cross, and, in many ways, exhibit a reverence for the glorious cross of our blessed Master; but is it true that we glory in that cross?

It takes no arguments to prove the fact that we, as a people, glory in things of this world. I now speak of the mass of mankind in general. Thousands glory in the prospects of fame, and they are not so careful as to how they reach the coveted prize. Others glory in the hope of wealth, and seek it with unmitigated efforts. Worldly honor is the glory of legions; if they can get it even by wading through rivers of human blood, they will press on and even relish a feast of human souls if thereby they can gain the applause of men. Again, see the hosts of the children of men that glory in following the sinful pomp and fashion of the world even to the bitter end. Nothing but the grace of God in the heart can qualify us for this change, to lay aside all other glory and glory only in the cross of Christ. In coming to Christ, we come that our lives may be hid in Christ. It is evident, then, that we no longer belong to the world, in the sense that the gospel speaks of belonging to the world, neither to love the world or the things in the world. We are to glory in none of these things so common for carnal men to glory in, but only in the things the Christian should glory in, and that is in the teachings of the gospel, the service of Christ, and the joys found through an acquaintance with the meek and lowly Jesus. In these we may glory. It is our privilege to glory in them, and, by the Holy Ghost, in them we will glory.

One point we call especial attention to, and that is, all glorying outside of glorying in the cross must come to naught. As the last sands of time run out, all worldly glory ends. There is no connecting link between the glories of this sinful world and the world to come. There is an impassable gulf fixed. But the glories of the cross, first springing up here, culminate, eventually, in brighter and grander glories in the world to come.

Again, we must be crucified to the world,—and this is just what the cross of Christ will do,—become dead to the world, to all the sinful pleasures of the world, and have no joy in them; and as a positive result, the world will become dead to us, that is, incapable of realizing our life. If our life is hid in Christ, the world will hate us, mock at us, despise us, persecute us, shun our company, and do all manner of evil against us, in all of which we will glory, if we have the spirit of Christ. Such experience must necessarily follow our glorying in the cross; otherwise the cross would be of no effect. Oh, may we all glory in the cross of Christ—the blood-stained cross—the holy, Christ-sanctified cross; and continue to glory therein until we shall have fought the good fight of faith, and shall be crowned with a never-fading crown of glory in heaven.

Testimony to the Truth of the Bible.

Tyre from its ruins, Sodom from its ashes, Rome in her apostasy, Jerusalem in her degradation, the Arab in his tent, the Jew upon our streets, all living and lasting, even if unconscious, witnesses, proclaim that this book has God for its author, truth for its matter, and it has immortality and glory for its issues. Let me suppose, for a moment, that a number of persons in different ages and places had been engaged in making various parts of a marble statue; suppose a person in Petersburg made a finger, a second in Rome a hand, a third in Edinburgh an ear, a fourth in Athens the body, and so on till the whole was completed, but all without communication with one another, and in different ages as in different lands. Suppose, that when all the fragments were brought together, they formed that magnificent statue, called the Appollo Belvedere; would you not say, that some superintending statuary must have guided and given impulse to every chisel; that some beau ideal, some great archetype, must have been placed before each of them, after the form of which they were constantly inspired to work? in other words, that they composed the parts, not as their own fancy prescribed, but as the prescribing power directed? This is the fact in reference to the Scriptures. Let us take the portrait of our blessed Lord. Isaiah describes his sorrows, Malachi his triumphs; the dying patriarch proclaims his empire, and the sweet Psalmist of Israel the extension of his kingdom; one prophet gives one feature, and one gives another; and looking at the parts in detail, irrespective of the original, and comparing one with another, we should say they are so contradictory, that they can never belong to the same being. At last, Bethlehem and Gethsemane rise above the horizon—Calvary lifts its awful head—the Son of God appears upon the cross—what prophets said is compared with what Christ is; and lo! all the parts delineated by the pens of prophets in distant and different centuries, and under different circumstances, at first apparently contradictory, come to be put together, and they constitute the “brightness of the Father’s glory, and the express image of his person.” By this alone it is proved that the prophets “wrote as they were moved and guided by the Holy Spirit,” and that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah.—Rev. J. Cunningham.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. A True Nazarite.

BY C. F. DETWEILER.

“For he is not a Jew who is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision, which is outward in the flesh; but he is a Jew who is one inwardly; and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit and not in the letter: whose praise is not of men but of God.” Rom. 2: 28, 29.

And so it must be with the Nazarite. For our Savior who was born a true Nazarite in the perfect sense, did not formally comply with the external requirements of the old order of Nazarites. He was purer than the Nazarites whom Jeremiah describes as being “purer than snow,” “whiter than milk,” and “more ruddy in body than rubies” The Nazarites of the law, who were “raised up” from fallen man, were not as pure as our ancestors were before the fall or their Nazariteship would not have depended upon any external consecration. Of John the Baptist it was said, “He shall be great in the sight of the Lord, and shall drink neither wine nor strong drink;” but he who was greater said, “John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, He hath a devil. The Son of man came eating and drinking, and they say, Behold a man gluttonous, and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners.” Matth. 15: 18.

“In comparison of the old order of Nazarites and the new, he says, “verily, I say unto you, Among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist! notwithstanding he that is least in the kingdom of Heaven is greater than he.” This is the Nazariteship, for which the day of grace is given us to consecrate ourselves. The highest state of holiness is the highest and best aim of our life, and the perfect law of the new covenant is our law of consecration. Christ was not a Nazarite according to the law of Nazarites, but there is no reason to doubt that he wore a full beard according to law, as there can be no valid reason why he should not; and it is further generally conceded that he parted his hair in the middle, after the manner of the Jew, and left them grow to a considerable length. This is the whole pattern if we have a desire to follow it. Conundrum: If that part of the pattern which the world endorses is worth imitating, what is the whole of it worth?

Christ said to his disciples, “Ye are the light of the world;” but in some small affairs we fail: for years ago the world lit the way from the old style of a full beard to the fashion of adorning the face (?) by sitting before a glass with razor and soap. Now this fashion which was once new has become old, and they are lighting us back to Christ: and we must not blame our old brethren for not being inclined to follow the light of the world.

Man has nothing about his person to glory in, and nothing to merit disgrace; being created after God’s own image; but, through transgression, we have all inherited a depraved nature, through which we see implied impurity in things that are pure, and are prone to overlook impurity in ourselves. “To the pure all things are pure.” As long as man knew no sin, he knew nothing to merit disgrace; but when he had fallen from his original state, the heart began to be governed by external influences, “and they sewed fig leaves together and made themselves aprons.” So our depravity is not a theory, but a fact, and it becomes us to work for edification, “shun every appearance of evil,” and strive to purify our hearts.

The secret of happiness is to make the best of everything. No matter what happens to annoy, let it all glide along as easily, and with as few words of complaint and fault-finding as possible. Little inconveniences will intrude upon the most fortunate people, so the only way to be master of every situation is to make up your mind not to notice small annoyances. People may keep themselves in a constant broil over what amounts to nothing, and which, without accomplishing the least good, may ruin the peace and quiet of a household. We cannot have everything just as we want it in this world, and the sooner a person understands the fact, the sooner he may have a true basis for happiness.

SAD BUT TRUE.

BY MRS. J. S. THOMAS.

Listen to me, little children,
And a story I will tell;
'Tis about poor little Ellen,
Whom I used to know so well.
Ellen was a little orphan
Living with a cruel aunt,
Who, apparently, delighted
This poor little girl to taunt.
From the dawn till dusky even,
Little hands and weary feet
Up and down were ever busy,
This stern aunty's demands to meet.

Tasks so hard—severely arduous—
Daily were imposed on her;
And if e'er she failed to do them,
Sore displeasur she'd incur.

Did I only say displeasure?
No, dear children, that's not all;
But upon poor little Ellen Punishments severe did fall.

She with many stripes was beaten,—
Punished within a darkened room,
Where, like an imprisoned culprit,
She endured the awful gloom.

I have seen long, brawny fingers
Choke that tender little throat;
Volumes, to record her suffering,
Must be written, all to note.

I have seen those little fingers
Rubbed upon a zinc wash-board,
Till they seemed all crushed and broken,
Fiendish pleasure to afford.

I have seen the blood all trickling
From the bruises she received.
Punishment, so far inhuman,
Must be seen to be believed.

Sad but true, dear little listeners,
And I want you, every day,
Earnestly to look to Jesus,
And for little Ellen pray.

You have parents, home and comfort—
All that goodness can provide;
She has neither—poor, lone orphan—
Pray our Savior her to guide.

Pray that she may ever trust him—
Peace and comfort in him find;
And this motto ever cherish:
TO THE POOR BE ALWAYS KIND.

"I've Got Home."

"I've got home," said my little two-year-old sister, as she returned from having spent the day away, that her innocent prattle and baby noise might not disturb our sick mother. She came running to her bedside and exclaimed with eager delight; "I've got home!" The joy that filled her little heart burst forth, as going from one to another she repeated the words: "I've got home!" How those words, coming from that childish voice, have echoed in my ears since. Often when tossed about on the billows of life, I have longed to step inside this loved retreat of this family Bethel, and breathe from an overflowing heart: "I've got home!" The words speak of dangers passed, of hardships endured, of wanderings ended. We can put off the travel-soiled garments, the robes of formality, the restraints of society. The masks of worldly policy are out of place here; conventional garbs are unnecessary; the atmosphere is unsuited to them. The warm, genial breeze of love and peace bespeak another climate. Cares and anxieties are for the present put away. Our lives seem revolutionized. The benign influences of home shed a halo of joy around our hearts.

Hark! I seem in fancy to hear the weary Christian as he shall step inside the pearly gates of the "New Jerusalem," say, "I've got home!" The burdens of life are laid down, the hardships overcome, the warfare ended, the victory gained, the battle of life over. The tossing to and fro on the tempestuous sea of doubt and uncertainty is at an end. He has long been looking "through a glass darkly," but now the "many mansions" in his Father's house burst upon his enraptured vision. He has reached the haven and moored his storm-beaten barque. The quicksands and shoals are far out of sight. He is at home. The narrow way in which he has walked has been exchanged for the "highway of holiness" in the kingdom of his God. The redeemed who are to walk there will be his companions throughout the endless ages of eternity.

It is joy to return to an earthly home after months or years of absence; to a home even that is but temporary and fleeting; but what will be our emotions of joy when we enter our eternal home? No more going out from the paternal care, the light of the Father's smile ever beaming upon us—the tender welcome of our elder Brother. Ah! shall we not exclaim with infinite joy and satisfaction, "I've got home?" "The ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Mount Zion with songs, and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."—Christian.

Don't Think.

We often do and say unwise and sinful things through thoughtlessness. We do not mean to be wicked, but we are thoughtless. When expostulated with, or reproved, our apology is, "I didn't think." Little folks and big folks, men and women, young men and maidens, Christians and sinners, all excuse many faults and blunders by the plea of "I didn't think." And we seem to think our want of consideration is a sufficient excuse, and ought to be satisfactory as an apology.—But, pray, what have our minds been given to us for, unless it be to think? And why have we been endowed with ability to think, unless it be that we should use the ability? It doesn't answer for us to say, "I didn't think." We were made to think. It is our business to think. Reader, just think of it.

Do it Now.

Don't live a single hour of your life without doing exactly what is to be done in it and going straight through it, from the beginning to the end. Work, play, study, whatever it is—take hold of it at once and finish it up squarely and cleanly; and then to the next thing, without letting any moments drop out between. It is wonderful to see how many hours these prompt people contrive to make of a day it is as if they picked up the moments that the dawdlers lost.

And if you ever find yourself when you have so many things pressing upon you that you hardly know how to begin, let me tell you a secret; take hold of the very first one that comes to hand, and you will find the rest all fall into file and follow after like a company of well-drilled soldiers; and though work may be hard to meet when it charges in a squad, it is easily vanquished if you can bring it into line. You may have often seen the anecdote of the man who was asked how he had accomplished so much in his life. "My father taught me," was his reply, "when I had anything to do, to go and do it." There is the secret—the magic word now.—Sel.

I desire to be content in the station the Lord has assigned me. I recollect meeting with the shoot of a very pretty, tree, which I thought to plant in rich earth, but I was told it would only blossom in barren soil, and I found, upon trial, that was the most suitable to its nature. Thus God best knows where his people are most likely to flourish, and places them according to his own wisdom.

To every man there are many dark hours, when he feels inclined to abandon his best enterprises, when his heart's dearest hopes appear delusive; hours when he feels unequal to the burden, when all his aspirations seem worthless. Let no one think he alone has dark hours. They are the common lot of humanity. They are the touch-stones to try whether we are current coin or not.

Death is as near to the young as the old; here is all the difference: Death stands behind the young man's back, before the old man's face.—T. Adams.

RULES FOR AGENTS.

1. At the head of every letter give the name of your own post-office, county and State; and the date on which it is written.
2. Write the name and give the full address of every subscriber you send, as legibly as you can.
3. Write "New" before the names of all new subscribers.
4. In ordering a change of address, give the post-office, county, and State, to which the paper is sent, as well as the post-office, county, and State to which it is to be sent.
5. Do not mix up different items of business; but take up and finish one item before you take up another.
6. Write items intended for publication on a separate slip.
7. Make every lawful effort to obtain subscribers, and to do good in whatever way you can.
8. Send money by drafts, post-office money orders, or registered letters.
9. Observe the above rules, and you will expedite business, save us from much trouble, and yourselves and our subscribers from disappointments and vexation.

NO INTERRUPTION TO THE JOYS OF THE GOOD BY THEIR ENEMIES.

"Thou preparest a table for me in the presence of mine enemies."—Psa. xxiii. 5.

The difference between the enjoyment of the people of the world and the people of God is very great. This difference does not consist in degree or in kind only, but it differs in other respects likewise.—One of the main points of difference is in the enduring and unchanging nature of the happiness of Christians. There is a degree of enjoyment experienced by the various classes that comprise what we call the world. That is, those who are of the world, and follow the world. But their happiness is so uncertain, so changeable and so easily interrupted by the many influences by which it is effected and controlled. While the happiness of the righteous is permanent and abiding.

Our Savior in the following words, sets before us in striking contrast, the insecurity of worldly and the security of heavenly enjoyment. "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." Matth. vi. 19, 20. Every person has something on which he sets his heart, and which he most earnestly covets and for the obtaining of which his greatest efforts are made. This object, whatever it may be, is expressed in the word, "whatever." It may be honor, fame, or pleasure, as well as wealth—anything upon which the heart is most fixed, and which affords it the most enjoyment.

The Savior's reason here given, why we should give the preference to the heavenly treasure, or why we should lay up our treasure in heaven, is because the treasure thus laid up is secure; whereas earthly treasure is very insecure, being exposed to many dangers. If they are not taken from us, we shall be taken from them, and therefore it is by a very tender thread we hold them. How true it is that "the fashion of this world passeth away," 1 Cor. vii. 31, and that the things which "are seen are temporal." 2 Cor. iv. 18. It often happens that when the plans of worldly persons, seekers of wealth, pleasure, or fame, seem to be matured, and when apparently the successful candidate is about seizing the promised prize, something occurs to derange the plan, defeat the object, and spoil the pleasure.

"The evening cloud, the morning dew,
The with'ring grass, the fading flower,
Of earthly hopes are emblems true.
The glory of a passing hour."

The fickleness or uncertainty of worldly pleasure, is strikingly illustrated in the case of the rich man in one of the parables of our Lord. "The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully: and he thought within himself, saying, What shall I do, because I have no room where to bestow my fruits? And he said, This will I do: I will pull down my barns and build greater; and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods. And I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink and be merry. But God said unto him, Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee: then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided? So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God." Luke xii. 16—21. How suddenly did his life close, when he was called upon to leave the accumulated treasures of years of anxious labor! How terrible must the shock have been to him when he received so unexpectedly the summons of death! How sudden the change from riches to poverty, from happiness to misery! How deceitful are earthly treasures!

"What should I wish or wait for, then,
From creatures earth and dust?
They make our expectations vain,
And disappoint our trust."

Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies. Man's influence over his fellow-man is great. And if the proper fraternal feelings exist and prevail, and that influence is exerted for the promotion of the real welfare of one another, men are made a blessing to their fellows. But alas! this influence is often exerted against one another, in making each other miserable. Our friends seek to promote our happiness and well-being, and our enemies, our injury and ruin.—The most holy men have had their enemies. David had his, and Jesus and Paul had theirs. But the happiness of the good is not as liable to be affected by their enemies, as is the happiness of the people of the world by theirs. Bad men have an influence over worldly things that they have not over heavenly things.—Worldly people do not often have a feast in the presence of their enemies, because the presence of their enemies spoils their feast. A man who has been successful in building up an honorable character in the estimation of the world, and when that honor is his only source of enjoyment, and it becomes blasted and injured by the malicious slander of his enemies, he has no enjoyment in their presence, for their presence embitters all his pleasures. When the enjoyment of business men depends upon their success in business, and the business prospers, they have a feast and are gratified. But when a panic comes, or business declines, then is their feast turned into mourning and their joy into heaviness. If domestic happiness is sought for and the marriage union is used as a means of obtaining it, and one of the parties proves unfaithful or unkind, the other can have no feast, for the domestic food that was expected to constitute a feast is not sweet and satisfying, but sour and sickening. In worldly gatherings, feasts, and parties, occurrences may happen, and they may often happen, and they may not always be of a very grave or serious character, yet they may change the entire aspect of things, and prevent the anticipated pleasure. So uncertain are all our hopes when grounded upon human promises, and human friendship and worldly things, that disappointment must be expected.

But when we turn to the feast or the enjoyment of the good, it is not subject to the changes and failures that the happiness of worldly people is subject to.—The source of that enjoyment is so far removed from the world, that the changes that occur around us in the world cannot affect it. It is like those rivers which have their source in mountains always covered with snow. They are always fresh and flush. God himself is the fountain of the happiness of his people. "All my springs are in thee," sang the Psalmist. lxxxvii. 7.

"My God, the spring of all my joys,
The life of my delights,
The glory of my brightest days,
The comfort of my nights."

When David says the Lord prepares a table before him in the presence of his enemies he means, 1. That his enemies cannot destroy his happiness. God knows that the charges his enemies make against his servants are false, and therefore he takes no account of them, but continues his gracious visits to them. 2. The language implies that God makes a manifest distinction between the good and the evil. For the good he prepares a table and they can feast on the heavenly food to their great comfort, while the evil will be denied the privilege, though they see the righteous enjoying themselves in the Lord.

In God's gracious dealings with his people we see the principle contained in the language of David under consideration, clearly illustrated. It was illustrated in the case of the three Jews, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, when cast into the burning, fiery furnace. The king who had in a fury commanded them to be cast into the furnace of fire, saw them to his great astonishment, walking in the fire freed from the fetters with which they had been bound, and another person with them like unto "the Son of God." The Lord had prepared a table for them and they had a glorious feast, and that, too, in the presence of their enemies, who, to their great astonishment, beheld them safe and happy in the fiery furnace.

We have another illustration in the case of Stephen. This faithful servant of God was highly honored by him.—His defense of the truth and exposure of error brought upon him the wrath of the people, and they "cast him out of the city, and stoned him." But his death was so glorious and hopeful that it is said "he fell asleep." In his death he was favored by the Lord with a remarkable manifestation of the Divine presence. "Being full of the Holy Ghost he looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God and Jesus standing on the right hand of God." His death was indeed "a feast of fat things." Such was the effect of the Spirit of God upon him that it was manifested in his countenance; and his enemies "that sat in council, looking steadfastly upon him, saw his face as it had been the face of an angel." Acts vi. 15.

How wonderfully does God own and bless his servants who faithfully serve him! Before them all he prepares a table in the presence of their enemies.—Their joys are permanent and lasting, and not subject to the interruptions and changes that those of worldly persons are subject to. "Happy is that people, whose God is the Lord." Reader, fail not to become one of them, that their uninterrupted and heavenly comforts may be yours.

A FEW WORDS IN REGARD TO THE REPORT.

We would say to our brethren in regard to the Report of the Proceedings of our A. M., that we hope the reporter will soon have it ready for the press, and by that time should like to have an idea of the probable number of copies that may be wanted. We do not expect that it will pay very well, from present indications, and we may not get our money back that we shall have to invest in it.—We therefore do not want to have more printed than the brethren shall want. We request our brethren to send in their orders as soon as possible, that we may be the better prepared to judge of the number that may be wanted. We have not, up to this time, received as many orders as we expected to. But we hope a sufficient number will be sold to justify us in getting out the work.

A REQUEST FOR PRAYER.

The following request will explain itself. We recommend the case to the brethren, and hope they will sympathize with the friend that is in trouble, and present his case before the Lord, and pray that his trouble may be sanctified to his salvation, and that the hindrances in his way, may be either removed, or he be enabled to overcome them. As he has confidence in the brethren, we hope their prayers will be offered for him, and be heard by the Lord. Job said in regard to himself, and so would we say in regard to our friend in trouble. "Oh that one might plead for a man with God, as a man pleadeth for his neighbor." Job 16: 21.

DEAR FRIENDS: I am in deep trouble, financially and otherwise, and ask you all to pray that the good Lord may deliver me soon, and also to remove the hindrances that keep me from him. I ask the Brethren because I believe they are the people of God.

Gleanings and Gittings.

IN our last issue we stated that Brother S. H. Bashor, of Whitesville, Mo., came to our congregation on the 24th of June, and that he had entered upon his work as a minister of the gospel. He is still with us, and is laboring very acceptably among us. He has preached a number of discourses at different points, but mostly in our meeting-house in this place; and we are happy to state that a good interest is felt, and that a number of precious souls have been made willing to come out on the Lord's side and to enlist in his service. Several were baptized before our communion meeting; and since Brother Bashor is with us, eleven more have been buried with Christ in baptism, and have risen to walk in newness of life. There are still some who have made up their minds to go with us, and others are counting the cost. May the good Lord bless every effort made in harmony with his will to promote and advance his cause. Brother Bashor's address will be Meyersdale, until otherwise announced. B.

OUR MANUSCRIPT BOX.—D. C., Grant C. H., W. Va. This is a very flattering notice of a semi-monthly journal, claiming to be "devoted to the general diffusion of practical knowledge among the people." As we were not favored with a copy for examination, we will insert only the closing paragraph, which reads as follows:

"Those who wish to examine the paper before subscribing, have but to address Dr. O. Phelps Brown, Jersey City, New Jersey, and a goodly number of copies will be sent free of postage, to convince the applicant of its sterling ability and goodness of character."

No. 15—C. D., Macedon, Ohio. This paper starts out with a few items of church news as follows: "We number twenty-one members, and we are getting along very well. We hope to soon organize a church. The members * * * all attend meetings seemingly in earnest. The worldly people say we do not need any uniform, as that is a church fashion and is just as bad as a worldly fashion. We tell them it is not a fashion but a custom." To show the propriety of the "custom" of a uniform, the writer relates a few occurrences; but as neither of them are in the Bible, and as they have no parallel in the Bible, we omit them. Our brethren should establish the necessity of a uniform just as we establish the necessity of baptism or the communion, and thus have a uniform way of convincing the people of the essentiality of these things. When we plead for plainness, and modesty, and economy in dress, we refer to the Christian law; and surely it will be better to give a "thus saith the Lord" for the necessity of a uniform than to relate anecdotes. B.

No. 16—E. J., York New Salem, Pa. The heading of this article is, "Health more than Riches." The writer commences, "To say something on this subject, I feel a little unfit, so I will try and do as good as I can." He then introduces a number of arguments to prove that a man without health cannot enjoy himself. He may have riches, but if he is not healthy, he is a poor mortal; on the other hand, a poor man, if he is healthy, may be happy, and consequently he is the richer of the two. He, however, is inclined to think that wealth is good and right in its place, and probably he would agree that a little of it might be good even for a sick man, but a healthy man can get along very well without it, if he only has enough to eat and drink and wear. There is much truth in the article, but we think it scarcely of sufficient merit to give it the space that would be required to insert it.

BROTHER GLASS sends us the following announcements at Bristolville, Trumbull county, Ohio, with the names of the ministers who have agreed to fill them: "Lewis Glass, July 16th; George Worst, August 13th; William Johnson, September 10th; P. J. Brown, October 8th; Samuel Garver, November 5th; David Workman, December 3rd; E. L. Yoder, December 31st; John Nichelson, January 29th, 1877." He adds: "If any cannot go, they will please let me know in time. We thank the brethren for their promises, and we think they will fill their time."

BRO. J. S. FLORY, of Greeley, Colorado, June 26th, 1876, says:

"Weather is remarkably warm at this writing—103 degrees in the shade, which is, I think, the warmest weather I ever experienced in this territory. Crops are still doing well. The warm days are melting the snow in the mountains so that the waters are flush. But little irrigation was necessary up to this time; but now it will be necessary. Grasshoppers have about all disappeared. The many reports of persons being killed by the Indians in Colorado were all untrue, except the killing of three cattle herders in the South Platt Valley sometime ago. They were killed by horse-thieves, whether Indians, or white men is not certainly known. A man, lately from Iowa, came to this town with a man of bad character. Together they stole a span of mules and wagon. They were arrested, tried, and sent to the penitentiary for 6 years. Justice overtook them speedily. The young man mentioned had a young wife in Iowa, and a letter of a very affectionate character was found in his pocket. It is a sad case, and another warning to keep out of bad company. Take heed, young men; 'keep good company or none.'"

FRIEND W. J. HOWE, North Star, Darke Co., Ohio, June 21, 1876, writes: "By request I will write you a few lines. The Brethren are beginning to settle in here, and they have no minister to preach for them, only once in a long time. There is a surplus somewhere, and if you could induce some one to come and settle here there could be great good done. I have a good farm of 83 acres, which I would sell to some minister very reasonably.—There is a good bearing orchard, good water, good house, a barn, and on a good free pike. The society is good. The people are all anxious for the Brethren to preach here. I hope you will try and get a preacher to come and settle here, for I am satisfied there could be much good done. If any one wishes any information in regard to the country, I will give it. Address, Wm. J. Howe, North Star, Darke county, Ohio."

BRO. A. J. INGLERIGHT, of Berrien, Michigan, sends for one of Bro. Miller's books, "The Doctrine of the Brethren Defended," and says: "My impression is that every congregation ought to send for this book, and make a present of one to every minister." We add that it would be well for every member to have one and make a minister of it.

BRO. ELIJAH HORNE, Son, of Ross-ville, Ohio, June 22rd, 1876, says:

"After our love to you and yours, we would say that we wish to help the Danish work along, as God has prospered us. Inclosed find $1.50 for brother Hope. O brethren and sister, do, for God's sake, and your soul's sake, and for the sake of all that is eternal, lend a helping hand, and encourage brother Hope in the Lord's work. Send your dollars and dimes right along, and lend to the Lord, and you shall reap in due time. Pray for us that we may ever increase in the knowledge of the Lord, and experience the love of God shed abroad in our hearts, that we may spend and be spent in the Lord's work. O Lord, we do pray that thou mayest send out thy light and truth."

BRO. HENRY P. BRINKWORTH has changed his address from Jewell Center, Kan., to Elmore, Richardson county, Neb.

A few weeks ago we solicited our brethren and sisters to send us some good, original essays, and also to keep us supplied with correspondence. We are happy to state that some of our contributors have responded. We, however, need many more good, stirring articles to make our paper interesting and instructive, and we again call on our fellow members and co-workers to come to our assistance. By writing for the columns of the CHRISTIAN you will improve your own hearts, and may render assistance to others. B.

The following was intended for the correspondence department; but as there was no room for it there, and as we wish to get it before those whom it concerns as early as possible, we give it here. We hope it will be duly considered, and that our brethren will respond promptly and liberally.

Home Mission.

The Home Mission Board for the Western District of Pennsylvania, was to meet on the 28th of June, at Meyersdale; but only three of the six were present. These however had the permission of going on with business, by a permit from one of the absent members, and did such business as they thought they could consistently do. The members present were John Wise, James Quinter, and C. G. Lint. We organized the Board for the coming year by appointing James Quinter chairman, and C. G. Lint clerk and treasurer. We give the names of the officers of the Board so that the brethren at large may know who they are to write to on home mission business. The Home Mission of the past year was very much neglected, not perhaps so much from a want of proper willingness on the part of the Board, as for the want of the proper means to carry it on. There are and were calls enough from different parts, and the evangelists would have had willingness to enter upon their field of labor. But we (the board) did not think it charitable in asking them to go on upon their own expense, and this we would have been necessitated to do, as the treasury was empty, and for us as the board to obligate ourselves for their pay, we did not feel free in doing. And unless the district at large enters into the work it will prove a failure. This the district is not willing to submit to. The free expressions and the seeming zeal of the delegates of the last District Meeting, gives us the assurance of this conclusion. Now, then, all the Board wants is a free and ready response (financially) from the different congregations in the district. This will prompt them to ready and free action in the cause. We are, however, happy to say that we have a little money in the treasury to start with the present year, but not enough to pay all the necessary expenses that will have to be met in a thorough and effectual work of this kind. We therefore make this appeal to all the different congregations, to commence the work at home with a proper will, and gather in all you can and as soon as you can, and send it on. There are several congregations that have done very little toward the evangelizing cause. We know not whether it is only a neglect on the part of somebody, or whether these congregations do not wish to do anything. The latter we cannot allow ourselves to believe; for a church, or even an individual member, having the cause of Christ at heart, and enjoying the pleasant Christian fellowship of saints and the hope of a blessed immortality beyond the grave, would certainly wish others to enjoy the same blessed privileges. The former must then, perhaps, be the cause. We then urge upon our beloved housekeepers and others, to work and lay the matter before the members, and we are persuaded the result will be a good one. The Board adjourned to meet at George's Creek congregation on the 31st day of July, 1876, and we would be very thankful to any and all for such advice and suggestions as would help us along in forwarding this noble cause.

Fraternally submitted,
C. G. LINT, Clerk.

Miscellaneous.

DESTRUCTIVE STORM.—During a severe storm in Eastern Massachusetts on Sunday afternoon, a large number of pleasure boats in Boston harbor were capsized, and although nothing definite is yet known, it is believed several persons were drowned, as a number of boats with parties on board are missing. At Plymouth two boats with seven persons on board are missing. A large barn in East Medway, owned by Samuel Davis, was struck by lightning and burned. Jas. Goodall, a quarryman at West Quincy, was killed by lightning. A mill at West Gloucester was struck by lightning and destroyed. The schooner B. P. Chase, in the harbor, was also struck and lost her foremast. William Woodbury, one of the crew, was instantly killed.

DESTRUCTIVE HAILSTORM.—A despatch from Muskogee, Ill., June 21, says: The most terrific hailstorm ever known in this region passed over the South Canadian River yesterday morning. The course of the storm was from west to east, and it varied in width from a half mile to two miles. Trees were blown down and entirely stripped of leaves, and every species of vegetation in the track of the storm was destroyed. All the glass in dwellings and passing trains was broken. At 7 o'clock in the morning cars could have been loaded with hailstones the size of hens' eggs, and at 3 o'clock, p. m. they still covered the ground. The damage done is immense.

SWIFT JUSTICE TO CENTENNIAL THIEVES.—The Philadelphia Ledger of Saturday says: "On Thursday afternoon about 5 o'clock, two pickpockets pretending to hail from Frankfort, Ky., stole the watch of Mr. Thomas Cozzen, of New York city, as he was making his way through the Pennsylvania Railroad depot near the Centennial grounds, to take the train home with his family. The thieves were immediately arrested by one of the police officers; they were committed for trial on Friday morning; a bill of indictment was sent into the Grand Jury by the District Attorney, and was returned a "true bill" before noon; they were immediately tried, convicted, and sentenced to three years' imprisonment, and by 4 o'clock—within twenty-four hours from the time they stole the watch—they were on their way to the penitentiary, there to remain until 1879. This is the way justice is being administered to thieves and other rascals who have come here to depredate upon visitors to the Centennial Exhibition."

SENTENCE OF THE CHICAGO WHISKY RING.—In the United States Circuit Court, on Saturday, Col. Juessen, on behalf of the defendants in the whisky cases, asked for a stay of sentence. Judge Budgett, however, overruled the motion and pronounced the following sentences: A. C. Hessing to pay a fine of $5,000 and to be imprisoned in the county jail for term of two years; O. B. Dickinson and Jonathan Able, distillers, each a fine of $1,000 and three months in the county jail; Simon Powell, a fine of $3,000 and six months in the county jail; H. B. Miller, ex-county treasurer, a fine of $3,000 and six months in the county jail; F. L. Reed, a fine of $1,000 and one day in the county jail; H. G. Phalam and David Bush each a fine of $1,000 and three months in the county jail; William Cooper, a fine of $200 and three months in the county jail; R. P. Hutchins and David Cochrane, a fine of $1,000 and three months in county jail; Geo. T. Burroughs, a fine of $3,000 and one year in the county jail. Ex Alderman Hildreth was called but did not appear, and it is supposed he has gone to Canada.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT TO A STREET CAR.—At Cleveland, Ohio, about 11 o'clock on Monday night, June 19th, as a car on the south side street railroad was descending Seneca street hill, the brakes gave way, letting the car down the hill at a fearful rate of speed. When the car struck the bridge the horses became detached and ran away, and the car jumped the track and plunged into the canal, falling a distance of twenty feet. Three of the passengers were carried into the water. Mrs. Gertrude Daizaid, a widow lady aged forty, was drowned. Miss Emma Landsburg and J. W. Kelly were severely but not dangerously injured.

FIGHT WITH THE INDIANS.—A despatch from Cheyenne, June 23rd, says: Gen. Crook's command left camp on the morning of the 16th inst., with four days' rations and struck across the Rosebud, a branch of the Yellowstone, in Montana. Following down the creek next morning about five miles, the Snake and Crow scouts brought word from the front that the Sioux were in force at the Hills, and by 8:30 o'clock the command was in position and an extensive fire was inaugurated along the bluffs to the north of the creek. The enemy, who had begun the attack, and showing thereby their confidence in their ability to whip the command, retired. As the soldiers and allies advanced, the Sioux, all well mounted, and well armed, charged in numbers at times, and were prodigal in the use of ammunition. The fight lasted four hours, when the enemy retired out of sight at every point.

Gen. Crook reports nine white men killed and fifteen wounded in the Third Cavalry, two wounded in the Second Cavalry, three wounded in the Fourth Infantry, and Capt. Henry, of the Third Cavalry, severely wounded in the face. The loss of the Indians cannot be estimated, but thirteen dead bodies were left on the field, and many had been removed.

There is no probability that Congress can adjourn by the 10th of July.

Senator Morrill, of Maine, was on June 21st nominated and confirmed Secretary of the Treasury, vice Bristow resigned.

The real plague exists in Mesopotamia. During the month May 2,099 deaths occurred at Bagdad from the scourge.

In the Senate on the 20th the committee on finance reported favorably the House joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue $10,000,000 in silver coin in exchange for legal tender notes.

A Father to his Son.

"Gold and silver have I not;
But what I have I will thee."

MY DEAR JOHN:—The time is slowly approaching when I will go the way whence there is no returning. I cannot take you with me, and must leave you in a world where good advice is needful.—Nobody is wise from the cradle up. Time and experience are teaching here and sweep the threshing-floor.

I have seen the world longer than you have. Not everything is gold that glitters. Many a star I have seen fall from heaven, and many a staff break which seemed to be stout support. Therefore I will give you some advice,—what I have found to be true, and what time has taught me.

Nothing is great that is not also good, and nothing is true which is not lasting. This is not man's permanent home, and it is not mere chance that he wears the coarse coat.

Everything with him and beside him is transient—subject to a strange power; he is his own agent and carries his life in his own hand. And it is not all one whether he goes to the right or to the left. Never be persuaded that he is his own counselor and guide-board!

This world is too little for him, and the Invisible One he cannot penetrate nor comprehend.

Therefore save unnecessary pains; don't trouble yourself, and think what you are doing.

Consider yourself too good to do evil; do not attach yourself to passing things. The truth never shapes itself after us, my son, but we must be guided by it.

What you see, see; and make use of your eyes. But for the invisible, take the word of God for your guide.

Be steadfast in the holy faith and shun those who talk idly about it.

Be severest against yourself. In our own inward conscience is the judge who never deceives, and his voice is more to us than the applause of the world and its wisdom. Be careful, my son, never to act against that voice. From the first he only speaks in a low voice, and stammers like an innocent child; but if you regard his innocence he will loosen his tongue and speak plainer.

Be ready to learn from others, and where the subject is wisdom, humanity, light, liberty, virtue, there be an attentive listener. But be careful; not all the clouds have water, and there are different kinds of teachers, who believe they have the true thing, when they can talk and do talk about it. This is not so, son.—Words are only sounds, and where they come forth so light and easy, there beware. The horses attached to a wagon laden with goods move off with slow paces.

Don't expect anything of driving and of drivers, and where you hear noise in the street, go your way.

If any one wants to teach you wisdom, look up into his face. He may be ever so popular, but still void of the truth; you cannot learn of him. What one has not he cannot impart to others. And he is not free who thinks he can do what he likes to do; but he is free who can do what he ought to do. And he is not wise who thinks he knows much; but he is wiser who knows enough to know that he knows very little.

But if you are eager to find wisdom, hunt for it above all things; break your self-will and await patiently what follows. Consider often holy things, and be sure it will be a great advantage to you.

It is easy to despise, my son, but to understand is much sifter.

Don't teach others, before you are capable of doing so.

Stand up for the truth where you can, and be willing to be hated for it; but know that your cause is not the cause of truth, and be careful that they don't run together or your reward will be gone.

Do good as you pass along, and do not be troubled. Have only one thing in view and that with all your heart.

Take care of your body; but not as if it were your soul.

Be subject to your government, and let others quarrel about it.

Be strictly honest toward everybody; but be slow in trusting.

Do not meddle into others' affairs, but keep your own mind with care.

Do not flatter and do not receive flatteries.

Honor everybody according to his station in life, and let him be ashamed if he is not worthy of it.

Do not go into debt, but be submissive as if they all were your creditors.

Don't wish to be generous always, but be always just.

Don't cause anybody gray hair. But if you are righteous, you won't need to boister yourself about gray hairs.

Help and give always if you have, and don't consider yourself better for it; and if you have not, be ready with the cup of water, and not think yourself less.

Don't say everything you know, but always know what you say.

Don't attach yourself to a great man.

Not the seemingly pious, but the truly pious honor and follow. A man with true love and fear of God is like the sun, who shines and warms, if he don't talk.

Do what is worthy of reward and do not ask for it.

If you are in trouble, complain to yourself and to nobody else.

Always have a good thought. When I am dead close my eyes and bewail me no'.

Be a support to your mother and honor her as long as she lives, and then bury her at my side.

Study daily of life and death, that it may be success, and be of a joyous heart. Don't leave this world without having publicly demonstrated your love and admiration for the founder of the Christian religion. YOUR FATHER.

Dear Brother James:

Having received No. 25, and learning therefrom that the Annual Meeting passed off pleasantly, I feel to thank God, the giver and dispenser of all good, that such is the case. Not having been with you in person, yet I strove to be with you in spirit. May the Lord add his blessing to your labors and deliberations. I am pleased with Bro. Flory's return to the church. May God grant him grace and strength to hold out faithfully. I am glad that the reporter question was granted.

On the 3rd and 4th of this month we had our lovefeast. We had a good meeting, large turnout, well represented with ministerial aid. Two brethren chosen to the ministry, S. H. Miller and Charles Asquith. The latter is an Englishman. He came to the church. He had been a minister among the Campbellites, but was a member of our church for eight or nine years. We sometimes gave him privilege to speak. He speaks well; at least the brethren thought it prudent to choose him to the ministry. The other one, Bro. Miller, is quite a promising young brother. We stand in need of ministerial aid. Brother Musser was taken off by death, and three others had moved away. Yours fraternally,

E. K. BUECHLY.

Church News.

The brethren of the Maple Grove church, Ashland county, Ohio, held their lovefeast on the 3rd of June, which was well attended, and much zeal was manifested in carrying out the ordinances of the Lord's house. Two (husband and wife) were prompted to submit to the holy ordinance of baptism a few days previous, and another addition by baptism on the day of the lovefeast (this applicant was from the Mohican congregation, Wayne county). From the spirit of zeal manifested on the part of the ministers present, the simplicity of the word, and the practical setting forth of the same, impressions were made upon many that looked on, as their countenances gave evidence, and seemed to say they wished to be among the number that worship God in spirit and truth. On the next day one more declared his intention to follow the Lamb, and the next day (5th) one that had been disowned asked to be restored, and between that and the 15th, four more made known their intention to forsake sin. On the 15th, the Ashland church, Ashland county, Ohio, held their lovefeast, and the five above mentioned were there from the Maple Grove church and united with the church by the ordinance of baptism, which, in accordance with the Scripture caused a rejoicing in the church militant here on earth while the lambs were entering the fold, and no doubt the angels in heaven rejoiced.—Relatives said, "We are glad you have made a start in the better life;" and one of the candidates remarked, that this looked like the days of the Apostles, and after baptism, when returning, he exclaimed, "My yoke is easy and my burden is light." The work of baptizing was easy and uniform, the witnesses many, the attention a marked quietness. No doubt impressions were made that may lead heavenward. May the Spirit lead these good impressions into action.

At the above meeting of the brethren many were gathered together. The ministerial labors were spirited. The sister at whose house the meeting was sat in the congregation listening to the words spoken; tears were noticed in her eyes. No doubt she felt the absence of one that formerly sat in the midst of the ministers, but now is no more. May she put her trust wholly in God. While some of her children are now lambs in the fold of Christ, may the others soon follow, that they may stand as a family of worshippers here below, that when death separates them their homes will be in heaven never again to separate. As they loved their father here below, may they seek to join him above. As the writer was not present at all the exercises, he learned from others that it was a pleasant meeting throughout.

Now, brethren and sisters, let us live every day as if it were our last, so that when we fall asleep, it may be in the arms of Jesus. WM. SADLER.

From Denmark.

NORTH DENMARK, May 29, 1876.

Dear Brethren:

On our arrival here we found our sister, Christine Fredericksen, still willing to follow the Lord in all his ways. Bro. Hansen and I went to hunt a place for baptism, but could find nothing but ponds and muddy places. The next day we started on foot to visit a relative of sister's, distant twelve miles. On the way we kept a lookout for "much water," and we found the Lord's promise, "Seek and ye shall find," true in this case, for we found a beautiful stream which seemed to have been especially fitted for baptism.

After reading, prayer, and teaching of Christian duties, we went down into the water and baptized the dear one in the presence of the heavenly host and a few distant spectators. Having come up out of the water we remained there on the shore until our garments were dry, spending the time in reading God's word, and in holy conversation. We went from this place to the sister's relatives, where we were appointed meeting for the next day. A few came to hear us, and gave good attention to what we said. On the day following we returned to the home of our sister, and to-day (May 29th) I came to this place, Oster Hassing, 16 miles, rejoicing in the Lord's goodness, though my walk made me very tired.

Brother Hansen will stay in this part of Denmark awhile, spread tracts and talk to those church members I mentioned in a former letter. We hope to gain more of them yet. To spread the tracts more effectually, and to call the people's attention to them, I write on them, "This is given to the people of this village or city," as the case may be. In this way it will go from house to house; and I hope by the time I return it will have done some good. I mark the places expecting to visit them again, going from house to house. O, if I could only visit all the places! The field is ripe and very great. This presses me on all sides; my wife's ill health is upon me; the cares and anxieties of the converted ones is coming on, and not the least is the fear that my expenses shall seem too great for my brethren. Sometimes when I walk alone I feel tired and broken to pieces with the heavy load. But the Lord's rod soon reminds me to work on, telling me, "Were ever my servants treated so well as you?" Oh no, never! I am met with respect by the people; and taken care of by the church, and prayed for continually day and night by dear, loving hearts; my weary hands are held up, but still they are weak. O brethren, if you could see my tears flowing desiring your prayers still more earnestly and more frequently, yea, always, you would give them at once!

We want a church here,—yea, more; we want every longing heart to rest in God's love. But how shall we get them? By your prayers and help. If we get them, God's blessing will be upon you for through you he now works: if we fail it is our shame. Can you not, dear brethren and sisters, write to us once in a while? I know we ought to write to you; but our time is already too short, and we are alone to write to many, while you are many to write to a few. I have not forgotten you. No, no, my heart never left America; but time is precious, and dear souls are perishing every minute, and we should try to warn them all, hence must use time for this first.

ASSENS, June 3, 1876.

In Hassing I stayed several days as I got a job putting on some wall paper, and along with that had a chance to speak of the good Lord. It was surprising for them to see a minister work; but it was a good lesson to them. Their idea of us has changed for the better. [At this place Bro. Hope and wife were considered outcasts when first they visited there, but thank God the power of love conquers all.—M. M. B.] We had a very interesting meeting at Hassing, and the people requested me to come again.

On my leaving, they brought us some distance in a carriage, and on arriving in Lundly found a letter from my neighbor calling me home, as Mary was taken down sick. I am now here trying to do the best I can. The Lord's will is good, even if his stroke continues hard. We send you all our love.

Yours in the love of Jesus,
CHRISTIAN HOPE.

Beloved Brethren:—I cannot refrain from adding a few words to the foregoing cheerful news from over the great deep. My heart swells with gratitude to my heavenly Father for the great good already done through our beloved brother, C. Hope. Pardon me for so frequently referring to him; for his great zeal, his unaffected piety, and humble steadfastness for his Master's cause has made me love him as I love myself, and every other child of God.

Was ever devotedness and zeal for the institution, baptism, more manifest in this age of general slothfulness than that expressed in Bro. Hope's letter? What! walk twelve miles seeking "much water" (by the way, "much water" is Scriptural) in order to bury the "old man"? Yes; poor pilgrims going about on foot, seeking to do their Father's will. How much more heavenly—how much more divinely does this sound than riding up to a finely decorated temple, and in the presence of the kings and princes of this world, have a little water sprinkled or poured on the head. Thank God for his good institutions. All may and can come to them.

O brethren and sisters! you who are continually concerned for the salvation of others, cease not to pray day and night for our brethren, both in Europe and America, that the work of the ministry may be effectual. You who love the Master's cause abroad, please write to Bro. Hope. In Christian bonds,

Huntingdon Normal School.

TEACHERS' TERM.

The Institute Session of this school will open Aug. 1st, in the Pilgrim building, Huntingdon, Pa. This session is designed especially for young teachers or those who are PREPARING TO TEACH,

but other students are also welcome. The term will continue six weeks. Tuition $5. Good boarding can be had in private families for $3 per week. Some living near enough to go home on Friday evening, got boarding for $2 per week last term. Students who desire boarding accommodations for the August term should apply immediately.

There will be classes in all the common branches, as far as desired, and also in algebra, geometry, and Latin (Cæsar). There will also be lessons on the THEORY AND PRACTICE OF TEACHING.

Prof. White, Supt. of Huntingdon schools has consented to give us an occasional talk on school management, methods of instruction, modes of discipline, &c. Mr. Sheeder, Ass't Supt. of public schools has also signified his willingness to be with us and to tell us some things that he has learned during his fifteen years' experience as a teacher. Other practical and successful teachers will be near at hand, and, if needed, will no doubt consent to be used.

Dr. A. B. Brumbaugh, one of the leading physicians of the place, will lecture once a week or oftenier upon and kindred subjects, having direct reference to the preservation of health.—Teachers need to know more about ventilation, food, exercise, bathing, the functions of the vital organs, and about the laws of health in general, not only for their own sakes but that they may be enabled to establish in early years habits of correct living in those under their charge. One or more

PHYSIOLOGY, HYGIENE,

DEBATING SOCIETIES

will be organized and the members of the school will be encouraged to avail themselves of the advantages afforded by societies of this kind. We have a very pleasant, suitable room for such exercises. Students will be encouraged to use the

REFERENCE LIBRARY,

which contains two complete Cyclopedias, Chambers and Appleton. The thoroughness which we aim at is not so much the ability to memorize every fact and statement as the ability to investigate; not so much to master a single book, as to give the power to master all books; in short to develop mind rather than to give scholarship. Knowledge is an important factor in the educational problem, but it is far from being the most important.

Students who desire to do so, can enter Aug. 1st, and continue during the year, as there are except a short one at Christmas. This will curtail traveling expenses, especially on the part of those who come from a considerable distance, and the interests of this class must be considered, as we are having inquiries from students in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Maryland, Virginia, and other distant localities.

NO VACATIONS

FALL TERM.

The Fall Term will open Sept. 12th immediately after the close of the Institute Session and we are anxious to have a number of young folks from abroad make arrangements to enter at that time and continue through the year, or as long as circumstances will permit. There are scores of young people in the church or whose sympathies are with it, who ought to go to school and who will be all the better satisfied with themselves in after life if they consent to spend a year or two at Huntingdon. In case any of these conclude to come they should look around among their neighbors and friends, and if possible, get one or more agreeable young people to come with them. This would make it more pleasant to them and more profitable to us.

CONGRESS, O., July 3rd, 1876.

Dear Editors and Readers of Primitive Christian:

Having seen on page 414 of current volume of your paper an account of the doings of the District Meeting of S. W. Missouri, and for the consideration of our brotherhood in general, and that class whose policy is presented in the resolutions and decisions of said D. M. in particular, I wish to offer a few thoughts.—My apology for so doing is founded upon the fact that in substance the brotherhood at large is asked to accept and adopt the same as a part of our church discipline, to carry out even to making it a test of membership, by virtue of which I claim the right of a party concerned. I will only notice one of the several items alluded to—that of dictating to us what kind of houses, barns, and other buildings we shall be allowed to erect. The decision in this case like all the others, is reached without the least allusion to any gospel on the subject, I suppose for the very good reason that there is none to allude to. I know of but one house that was erected under the immediate supervision of the Lord, and that was probably the most magnificent structure of ancient or modern times; and for a District Meeting, Annual Meeting, or any other meeting, in the absence of any authority from the Lord, to ordain a certain style, cost and finish of houses, barns, and other buildings, and make compliance therewith a test of church fellowship, as those Missouri brethren in substance propose to do, is, in my humble opinion, simply absurd; and it would be well for all to remember that in mere matters of opinion we all have an equal right, and we can never be in union in the brotherhood as long as any part of us seek to enforce our peculiar views by ecclesiastical legislation. The longer we try this the more disunion we create. And just here allow me to say—and I say it without fear of successful contradiction—that upon all subjects that are plainly decided in the gospel there is no division in the brotherhood, unless it be on the missionary question, and if the Missouri brethren would have devoted their time and directed their zeal in favor of sending the gospel abroad in the world by means of a well qualified ministry, and demanded a united effort upon this subject, I would feel like tidding them "God speed." By a well-qualified ministry I mean men that are not ashamed of the gospel, and men of whom the gospel would have no cause to be ashamed, or, in the language of St. Paul, "Workmen that need not be ashamed."

On this subject our Missouri brethren are silent, and why? A very natural consequence. You will see it every place where there is a disposition to find fault with one another in matters upon which there is no law, the "weightier matters of the law are neglected." It was so in the days of our Savior, and his reproof is needed now as much as ever, and as long as we let it go unheeded, it will stand against us. The Missouri brethren, and all like them, may as well be undecieved at once by being told plainly. You can never maintain a union in the brotherhood as long as you continue enacting such statutes as those of which you speak and to which you ask obedience by the general brotherhood—no, never, as long as there are free schools and a free press, and people claim the right to think for themselves. Let us then go to work in the things that the Master has committed to our hands, and leave off all else. We will find enough to do upon which all can unite, and there will be no more divisions among us, and unless we do this the union in our brotherhood stands in jeopardy every hour. I do sincerely hope and pray that these facts will be regarded and well considered by all our dear brethren everywhere, and not only considered, but put in practical operation. I wish to be plainly understood, and give warning, if it is not too late, that if we wish to maintain a united and happy and prosperous brotherhood, we must cease making laws where God ceased, and go to work in better earnest to carry out what he has commanded.—These have been my feelings for over a quarter of a century, and I have withheld them in part, at least, in the hope that a remedy would come without giving publicity to them. But when reading the article alluded to above I could not in justice to my own sense of duty withhold them any longer.

Now, what I have written I have written from a sense of duty, and I humbly ask the forbearance of the Missouri brethren and all others who may not look at the matter as I do.

Yours, in hope of gospel union,
P. J. BROWN.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

Not a Dye; makes harsh hair soft and silky; cleanses the scalp from all impurities, causing the hair to grow where it has fallen off or become thin.

Can be applied by the hand as it does not stain the hand or soil the finest linen. As a Hair Dressing it is the most perfect the world has ever produced. The hair is renovated and strengthened, and natural color restored without the application of mineral substances.

Since the introduction of this truly valuable preparation into this country, it has been the wonder and admiration of all classes, as it has proved to be the only article that will absolutely without deception, restore gray hair to its original color, health, softness, lustre and beauty, and produce hair on bald heads of its original growth and color.

This beautiful and fragrantly perfumed article is complete within itself, no washing or preparation before or after its use, or accompaniment of any kind being required to obtain these desirable results.

HERE IS THE PROOF

OF ITS

SUPERIOR EXCELLENCE.

Read this Home Certificate, testified to by Edward B. Garrigue, one of the most competent Druggists and Chemists of Philadelphia, a man whose veracity none can doubt.

I am happy to add my testimony to the great value of the "London Hair Color Restorer," which restored my hair to its original color, and the hue appears to be permanent. I am satisfied that this preparation is nothing like a dye, but operates upon the secretions. It is also a beautiful hair dressing and promotes the growth. I purchased the first bottle from Edward B. Garrigue, druggist, Tenth and Coates streets, who can also testify my hair was quite gray when I commenced its use.

MRS. MILLER,

No. 730 North Ninth St., Phila.

Dr. Swayne & Son—Respected friends: I have the pleasure to inform you that a lady of my acquaintance, Mrs. Miller, is delighted with the success of your "London Hair Color Restorer." Her hair was falling rapidly and quite gray. The color has been restored, the falling off entirely stopped, and a new growth of hair is the result. E. B. GARRIGUES, Druggist, cor. # HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

Never Despair—Something that Never Fails.—FEVER and AGUE. To the sick it is of little consequence how they are cured, whether from a rational view of the disease, or by the rules defined for the guidance of the profession, so long as the cure is certain and expeditious. To a suffering man the question on the relative merits of quinine or calomel is uninteresting. The faculty may wrangle and discuss their various theories, but Dr. Holloway's treatment dispels doubt ere the disciples of Esculapius have finished the first stage. Holloway's pills are the only remedies which effect a speedy and radical cure without danger of a relapse. 185

*. * Sold at the Manufactory of Professor Holloway & Co., New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents, and $1 each.

CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the signature of J. HADDOCK, as agent for the United States, surrounds each box of Pills and Ointment. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

JESUS OF NAZARETH PASSETH BY.

What means this eager, anxious throng,
Which moves with busy haste along—
These wondrous gatherings day by day?
What means this strange commotion, pray?
In accents hushed the throng reply:
"Jesus of Nazareth passeth by."

Who is this Jesus? Why should he
The city move so mightily?
A passing stranger, has he skill
To move the multitude at will?
Agait the stirring notes reply:
"Jesus of Nazareth passeth by."

Jesus! 't is he who once below
Man's pathway trod, 'mid pain and woe;
And burdened ones, where'er he came,
Brought on their sick and deaf and lame.
The blind rejoiced to hear the cry:
"Jesus of Nazareth passeth by."

Again he comes! From place to place
His holy footprints we can trace.
He pauseth at our threshold—day
He enters—condescends to stay.
Shall we not gladly raise the cry:
"Jesus of Nazareth passeth by."

Ho! all ye heavy laden, come!
Here's comfort, pardon, rest and home.
Ye wanderers from a Father's face,
Return, accept his proffered grace.
Ye tempted ones, there's refuge nigh—
"Jesus of Nazareth passeth by."

But if you still his call refuse,
And all his wondrous love abuse,
Soon will he sadly from you turn,
Your bitter prayer for pardon spurn,
"Too late! too late!" will be the cry.
"Jesus of Nazareth has passed by."

Disciple.

BY C. G. LINT

There are but few subjects brought to our notice of greater importance than that of discipleship of Christ; for upon a correct understanding of what constitutes a disciple hangs our hope of future joy and happiness, while an incorrect knowledge has the opposite tendency. There are different opinions extant among the religious of the present day as to what constitutes a true disciple. There are some of the opinion that all those that are baptized into Christ are true disciples. Others again assume that all that are in the church, whether baptized or not, only so they commune together, sing and pray together, are true disciples. While still another class holds that nothing short of a full compliance with the whole law constitutes a legitimate discipleship of Christ. That all of the above are correct we cannot admit for a moment, for this would be dividing Christ into sects and theories, thereby bringing the great and sublime truths as taught into a chaotic mass, so much so that wise men could not run and read and understand, let alone fools.

The question comes up before us, Is it true that all the baptized are disciples of Christ? We answer in the negative; and we have different reasons for answering as we have done. One is that if this theory is correct, it virtually destroys the grand principles of the law and doctrine of Christ and the apostles. If in our baptism we gain the title of discipleship, I must confess that I have not yet a correct understanding of that term. I am aware that some hold that, because Christ in the commission, according to Matthew, says, "Disciple all nations," and then follows with the command of baptizing, that Christ wished to say that by baptizing the nations they would disciple them. I am of the opinion that through some weak point of doctrine with some body this theory was brought forward. Such a theory makes a pretty fair show for the baptism of unbelievers and of infants. But I do not think that baptism was ever intended for any such thing, nor do the sacred Scriptures teach any such theory. The Bible teaches me that baptism was instituted for two great purposes. The first is "for the remission of sins." (See Acts 1: 38, 22: 16.) In this act have we the promise of the forgiveness of our sins, but you must remember that only the penitent seeker after truth will realize this great blessing; the impenitent and unbeliever are not included. And the other is that we put on Christ, or, in our baptism we acknowledge him as our great preceptor. Paul understood this matter in this way. (See Gal. 3: 27) We may put on Christ, or acknowledge him as Christ, and yet not give ourselves under his teaching. While baptism is a command of Christ, it should and must be properly entered into. If it is not properly entered into, we have no evidence whatever that our sins are pardoned or washed away, nor that we have put on Christ. This then stands against those claiming discipleship because they commune and pray together, whether baptized or not. Such have no assurance of the pardoning of sins,

Taking it as a Bible truth, which it is, that in baptism we take upon us Christ, in this act we say, "Now, O Christ, thy will in me be done. I am now ready to hear and obey thee; I am now a scholar in thy school." Thus may the baptized believer feel, and thus may he express himself; and yet time will have to reveal to us around him the truth of his declarations. We notice him coming to the school of Christ, but when Christ gives him his lessons, the studying and the practical recitations of them must determine his fidelity to his preceptor as a disciple.

He gives him a lesson on prayer. The baptized believes says, "I cannot pray."

"Well I will teach you how to pray. In the first place, use not vain repetitions, nor make long prayers, but say, 'Our Father,' &c. &c.

"Well, I do not see much use in prayer, for those that do not pray are about as good as those that do pray; and, besides, I may be like some of my neighbors: I might pray too much, for I think some of them pray too much."

"Let us pass this lesson over, and take up another one. I will introduce the lesson of self-denial and humility; that is, you must study to deny yourself of the pleasures of the flesh and the lust of the eye. you must cease going to places of idle amusement, and every place where sin is predominant. You must abandon the fashions and maxims of this world." Well, I do not see much wrong in that. I use my own money to see and be seen; and besides this, I see other sincere professors indulge in these things, and even some preachers. If they can get through the narrow passage, why cannot I?"

This may be all true; but did you not say that I am to be your teacher? If so, why follow other teachers and not me? You had better leave my school and join their's. You must learn not to be proud; for you belong to a separate people from the world. You say that you are not proud, and, at the same time, show off in the most gorgeous apparel; and besides this, in appearance you are just as those are that you and others would call proud."

How a man or woman can be said to be humble with all the fashionable appearances about him is a question that the Bible has not answered.

The disciple of Christ is also known because of his nonresisting principle which holds and practices and which he has learned in the school of Christ. Yet, at the same time, a great many professed followers of Christ hold it right to rise up in arms against their fellow men. This however they have not learned of the great Teacher.

Then also the ordinances of the house of the Lord are some of the evidences of true discipleship, or, in short, in connection with those above referred to, are the true testimonials of legitimate discipleship, and a failure of a close observance of them on our part excludes us from that high and honorable position. I am aware that a declaration like this excludes many honest hearted pretenders of discipleship; but we cannot help telling them the truth of the matter, and advising to become lawful and consistent disciples of Christ. This is the idea, "If we continue in his word, then are we his disciples indeed." John 8 : 31.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
The Lost Sheep.

BY CHARLOTTE T. BOND.

How often do we see persons become members of the church who appear determined and zealous in the cause of Christ, but by degrees seem to lose their first love, and finally appear to lose all interest in the matter. Their brethren and sisters in the church, without offering a word of encouragement, erase their names from the church in contempt. Now, my Christian friends, these things ought not so to be, according to my views of the Scriptures. The strong are commanded to bear with the infirmities of the weak, and also to be kind one to another, tender hearted, forgiving one another. Suppose, instead of erasing their names in contempt, there had been a spirit of kindness shown, and loving words of encouragement given, that soul might have been reclaimed and converted from the error of his way, thereby saving a soul from death and hiding a multitude of sins.

Our Savior gives a beautiful parable of a man having a hundred sheep. If he lose one of them, he leaves the ninety and nine and goes into the wilderness after that which is lost until he find it; and when he hath found it he calleth together his neighbors and friends to rejoice with him for having found that which was lost. After giving this parable, our Savior says that likewise "joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons which need no repentance." Our Savior says, "I am the good shepherd and know my sheep, and there shall be one fold and one shepherd." Should we not, by Christian forbearance and kindness, endeavor to keep the fold together, and if any be weak in the faith, strengthen such by love and good works? We are also commanded to bear one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ. Let us not become so full of worldly matters as to forget the sorrows and necessities of others, or we might be swallowed up in the service of mammon. Let every one that standeth take heed lest he fall.

Pride is gaining such a hold among professing Christians that it is to be feared that many will call, "Lord, Lord, open unto us," and the answer will come, "I know you not." How common it is in these days, to those that profess to be followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, to be spending their time, means, and talents, in decorating these sinful and carnal bodies that must so soon return to the dust from whence they came. Is this the way we should improve the talents given us; or is it not rather laying them up in a napkin?

The Scriptures teach that we should abound in good works; and there is not a day of our lives that we cannot find something to do, some sorrowing soul to sympathize with,—for we are to weep with those that weep,—some sick to visit and encourage, making them as comfortable as possible, having a loving smile and kind word for all. We should never overlook these small matters, as they add much to the brightness of a truly Christian character, and they are works that all can do.

Christ, as the shepherd of our souls, requires that we should confess our faults one to another and pray for one another, in honor preferring one another. Why should we let one of the fold wander off? And if we do so, without exerting ourselves to bring such back, are we doing our duty as followers of Christ? Did not our Savior, in every instance, where there was an interest shown or an effort made to enquire after his mission on earth, answer all those enquirers with kindness, and reason with them patiently? Let us imitate his example, and by a godly and holy walk show to those that are unruly, or those that show a disposition to draw back after making a start, that there is something real in our profession; that our religion is pure and undefiled; that we are full of the love of God through Christ Jesus; that we have a love for their souls; that we are praying for them; and that there is a joy a hope and a delight in following Christ the world can never give; that there is a beauty in holiness; that there is an elevation of soul that the wicked cannot reach with all their deceitful lusts; and by an unwavering calmness in every circumstance, give full evidence that our faith and hope are centered upon the Good Shepherd of our souls, and constantly trust that he is guarding and protecting every lamb of his precious fold. He says, "I am the good shepherd, and lay my life down for my sheep." Glorious thought, that he so loved us that he gave his life for us! Can we do enough to prove our gratitude? How careful we should be not to offend one of these little ones that believe on him, but nurture them up in tenderness. If they be weak, strengthen them by loving words and kindly sympathy, rather than condemn without a just cause; for we must all appear before the judgment seat, and with what judgment we judge shall we be judged. The things of this world are speedily passing away with us, and we should work while it is called to-day, for we know not the moment—not the hour—when it will be said unto us "This night will thy soul be required of thee." How very important that every moment be rightly employed in the cause of our blessed Master, that, when he calls us home, the whole flock may hear his voice, and without the loss of one be admitted into his kingdom.

"Machine Revivals."

Whenever the critic wishes to be especially severe upon revivals, he commonly calls them "got up" but when his purpose is deadly, "machine" or "manufactured" is the invariable epithet. From the frequency of this charge of mechanism, we judge that it must be viewed as something very forcible.

And yet, upon quiet reflection, this annihilating shot seems very like a blank cartridge. The only mechanism which appears in all judicious revival work consists in earnest warning to sinful men that the wages of sin is death and in earnest appeal to them to accept Christ as their Sovereign and Guide. The mechanism for influencing men religiously is the same as that for influencing them in any other way—by appeal, by warning, by expostulation, by kindling aspirations, etc. Now is it meant that in religion alone we must not avail ourselves of any means of influence; but must sit down and fold our hands, lest we be charged with “manufacturing a revival?”

That seems to be about the meaning of the criticism, if it have any meaning at all. And yet just those critics who urge this charge most frequently are those who are the first to depreciate any assumption of a direct action of the Holy Spirit upon the heart. They seek to include all the mental experiences within the limits of law; but the moment any one seeks to avail himself of the familiar laws of suggestion and association to arouse religious aspirations in men up go the eyebrows, and the sneer goes round that these men are “trying to get up a revival.” It would be just as witty and just as wise to sneer at the sower for “getting up” or “manufacturing” a harvest.

This objection, however, does not come from any skeptic alone. Often enough one hears it from professing Christians. They say that revivals are the gifts of the Holy Spirit, who worketh all things according to the counsel of his own will. True enough, and so is the harvest the gift of God. No one, with all the chemistry at human command, can create a grain of common wheat. And yet both statements are only half true. The harvest does depend on man; and the spread of religion depends on him also. God operates through the ordinary methods and agencies by which men influence one another; and commonly, too, the displays of divine grace are proportional to our diligence and to our fidelity in the use of those methods. It is strange how sensitive we are to this reproach of religious mechanism. We expect nothing in any other department without great labor; but the moment we come to religious work we abandon reason, and falling back upon a morbid sensibility, look askance at every effort to lead men to religious life.

The thought which underlies this feeling on the part of Christians is one which has wrought great mischief. It is that a revival, to be a divine work, must be accomplished without means, by the immediate working of the Holy Spirit. Any thought or feeling whose cause is assignable is assumed to find its sufficient explanation in the mental mechanism which produces it, and, therefore, it cannot be divine. You may move men by appeal, by sympathy, by example, if you will; but in all this no divine factor appears. And, hence, the resulting religious thought or feeling must be viewed as of human manufacture, rather than as a divine birth. To be divine, an experience must stand prominently out from the common course of our mental life, and thereby witness to its divine origin. And this implicit assumption not only underlies the common religious sensitiveness to the charge of religious mechanism, but it has haunted and distorted many a religious life. “We have watched and prayed,” they say; “but no thought or feeling has come to us which did not come, like all our thoughts, through the ordinary channels of association, etc. There has been nothing in our religious experience which so broke with our daily life that we could be sure that it was divine.” Now this demand for a foreign experience, which shall suddenly manifest itself in consciousness, we regard as unwarranted, whether in revival effort or individual experience.

The divine activity in the soul is manifested not by interjections into the orderly flow of consciousness, but by purifying the sources of action and strengthening its inner springs. All our thought and feeling, like the Nile, takes its rise in an unexplored country; and here in this mysterious realm, where thought and emotion originate, He makes his abode with us. The proof of the Divine Presence is the new life we are aided to lead; but what is his and what ours we can never certainly distinguish. It is impossible to draw a line between the divine activity and our own; nor is there any need of doing so. Goodness is divine, no matter how produced. It is indifferent whether aspiration be called forth through the orderly working of our faculties or by direct influence from his Holy Spirit; in either case it is a dawning of heavenly light. The important point is not to find out the psychological genesis of a pure thought or a holy aspiration, but really to possess it. If the mental mechanism can be used in producing better lives, by all means use it. The attempt to throw contempt upon its results is unwarranted. And for the comfort of many worried hearts, as well as upon philosophical grounds, we ought to repudiate the notion that our religious life must appear as a lawless and unaccountable apparition in the orderly movement of our mental experiences. In the full conviction that all goodness is of God it is still ours to lead men to pure lives by using every means of influence which God has placed in or power.—The Independent.

Stand Fast.

In the last days many shall be as “clouds without water, carried about of winds.” And this is one of the special perils of these “perilous times.” The winds are loose, and are now performing their awful work of tossing hither and thither these empty clouds.

Hence the instability that prevails. Men are “carried about with every wind of doctrine.” They are not rooted and grounded in love; and having “tasted never that the Lord is gracious,” nor rested their weary souls on him, they go about seeking they know not what. They want something that will fill them, but not going to the divine fullness of the incarnate word for it, they wander on in sadness of spirit, vainly trying to soothe their uneasy souls with every new doctrine or device that meets them in the way! All in vain. For what can be a substitute for God and his free love.

Amid all this instability, let us “stand fast in the faith.” Let us be “strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus.” Let us beware of “novelties” in religion. Let us guard against fickleness of opinion and hastiness of decision. Satan will let loose his blasts and call up his storms; let us only moor our vessel firmer, and keep faster hold of the anchor, which is sure and steadfast, “and which entereth into that which is within the veil.” Thus, in patience shall we possess our souls, for “he that believeth doth not make haste.”—H. Bonar, D. D.

OBJECTS IN LIFE.—A person who has no object in life is apt to run a vagrant and useless career. A man who aims at nothing cannot reasonably expect to hit anything. In military operations there is always what is called the objective point. The objective point is the point to be made, the thing to be done. All the forces of the army are concentrated on the making of that point; and when that point is made success follows. In one sense life is a warfare—it is a succession of campaigns. And every one should have his objective point—a clearly-defined purpose—and work up to it with undeviating persistency. This is the only way to succeed.—Baptist Weekly.

TIME.

"Ye know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life? It is even a vapor, that appears for a little time, and then vanisheth away."—James iv. 14.

Mis-shapen Time, copesmate of ugly Night,
Swift subtle post, carrier of grisly care;
Eater of Youth, false slave to false delight,
Base wateh of woes, Sin's pack-horse, Virtue's snare;

Thou nursest all, and murderest all that are.
Why workest thou mischief in thy pilgrimage,
Unless thou couldst return to make amends?
One poor retiring minute in an age,
Would purchase thee a thousand, thousand friends;
Lending him wit that to bad debtors lend.

—Shakespeare.

Youth is not rich in Time; it may be poor;
Part with it as with Money, sparing; pay
No moment, but in purchase of its worth;
And what it's worth ask Death-beds; they can tell.—Young.

There is given

Unto the things of Earth, which Time hath bent,

A spirit's feeling, and where he hath leant
His hand but broke his Scythe, there is a power
And magic.—Byron.

Still on it creeps,
Each little moment at another's heels,
Till hours, days, years and ages are made up
Of such small parts as these, and men look back,

Worn and bewildered, wond'ring how it is,
Thou trav'lest like a ship in the wide ocean,
Which hath no bounding shore to mark its progress.—Joanna Baillie.

Time harries on

With a resistless, unremitting stream,
Yet treads more softly than e'er did midnight
thief,
That slides his hand under the miser's pillow,
And carries off his prize.—Blair.

Time as he passes us has a dove's wing,
Unsoiled and swift, and of a silken sound.

Transient is the smile of fate!

A little rule, a little away,
A sunbeam in a winter's day,
Is all the proud and mighty have
Between the cradle and the grave.—Dyer.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

On the Tapis.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

A clean-shaven, polybaptistic, deritualizing clergyman proposes four queries, all of which he has already answered to his own satisfaction, in the fixed conviction that they admit of no other solution.

"If sprinkling and shaving were the typical order of consecration, why do the Brethren immerse and wear beards?" Num. 8: 7.

To these two I will confine myself in the present number.

Who will dictate to God? "Who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath been his counsellor?"

Rom. 11: 34 Have we the ability or authority to prescribe his modes of consecration in any of his dispensations? If there is progress in the unfolding history of redemption, is it strange that there should be progress in the types of the succeeding dispensations? The bud and flower are prefigurations and prophecies of the matured fruit. All preceding economies "had a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things." Heb. 10: 1.

The Bible is the lexicon of God. It contains the terms of salvation. We can learn the language of Heaven nowhere else. In the beginning was the word, (not made;) the word was God, and became flesh. Jesus is the Alpha and Omega. Our whole life must be spelled in Him. He is the word in which there is no letter misplaced, and no dot omitted. If we pronounce after Him, we will be sure to graduate in glory. He understands Himself, and whatever meaning He gives his words, that must stand. If God contradicts Himself, where is the ground of our confidence? If we contradict Him, our hope is a delusion, or Heaven a bedlam. The sprinklings of the Old Testament mean sprinkling for the time being. They may refer to the same thing with baptism in the New without being a full representation of it. We must go to Jordan to learn what interpretation Christ has given of the ancient ritual. He is the Author of both Testaments, and the New explains the Old, as the Old foreshadowed the New. If we want to know how to baptize, it is not necessary to travel back over thousands of years and ask Moses and the Prophets. A greater than Moses is here. Christ's baptism is amply sufficient to explain every text and ceremony in the Old Testament having reference to the initiating Christian ordinance. He that is not satisfied with Christ's own construction, "will not be persuaded though one rose from the dead." That Christ went up out of the water, no honest man will deny. That He had to go in before he could come out, no sane man will question. And this was for a purpose without which there would have been no baptism. Christ's life had no chaff in it. His baptism was integral to His mission as Redeemer. Without it He would have fallen under the ban of righteousness. He went in, came out, and was buried while in, or we have no Christian baptism. Rom. 6: 4. Col. 2: 12. If He was not immersed, Paul recommended and practiced a mode not authorized by the Head of the church. There is no room for doubt here. To twist and cavil is a wisdom that no one should covet. James 5: 15. He went into the stream, and for a purpose on which hangs the honor of God and the salvation of man. Mark. 16: 16. We cannot be dry-land baptists any more than we can be immersion-sprinklers. We cannot stop on the bank, and be moistened with a few drops or a handful, without missing His footsteps. It takes a stiff neck and an uncircumcised heart that refuses to bow to the Lord of glory in his consecration. Acts 6: 51. All the rites of the Old Testament were typical of something better to come. After the substance is here, why return to the shadow? So far as quantity is concerned, the two dispensations were fitly represented by sprinkling and baptism. One was only as a drop to the ocean. The first had a foregleam of Christ: the second had Christ Himself. A personal Christ and a correspondent economy need a full symbol of the facts. A dead Christ needs a complete burial. Let those who are only half dead to sin, or in the full vigor of the carnal nature, choose for themselves a few drops of water. But all who have died with Christ, must also be buried with Him. We need salvation, and this we cannot have without the burial and resurrection of Christ. And this fundamental doctrine is represented by the ordinance in which we publicly express our allegiance. Rom. 6: 4, 5, 6. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear."

The second query relates to the beard. Shall we let it grow, or take it off? Why do not these interrogators propound the same question in relation to the head and eyebrows? Does not the same principle extend to all these parts? If it be a shame for a woman to shave her head, it is no less so for a man to shave his chin. God hath in both instances placed the pilatory appendage as it hath pleased Him. He who gave woman's hair for her glory, bearded man for the same purpose. To shave off the beard is to quarrel with God. Even to mar it is a transgression of the law of God. It is as repulsive to the Divine mind as "make cuttings in the flesh for the dead." Lev. 19: 27, 28. Dressing the beard was allowed to the Jews. 2 Sam. 19: 24. But to obliterate any part of it was a great scandal. 2 Sam. 10. The beard is a mark of distinction between man and woman whether it be an inch long or a foot. To remove it altogether is womanish. It is a significant Divine symbol, and we have no more right to shave it off than to amputate our nose. It is equally unbecoming for a man to shave his face and look like a woman, as it is for a woman to wear an artificial beard and look like a man. Both are alike violations of the appointments of God. He sets his sign in the clouds to indicate His Divine faithfulness. Gen. 9: 13, 14. And He has set his sign in the masculine face to show that man is man. Should God take His bow out of the clouds He would undefile Himself. If man would the mark of manhood out of his face, he unmans himself; he indicates his readiness to be classed with the weaker sex. The law of the beard reaches further than the face, just as the law of the Iris reaches further than the clouds. A shaven man has no right to preach, or to hold office in the church, or to any prerogative that belongs distinctively to his sex; for he has removed the badge of manhood, and assumed the badge of effeminacy. In 1 Cor. 6: 6, Paul stamps a black brand on the character and condition represented by the removal of the beard. A shaven face and a petticoat are in logical alliance. Let principles take their God-given course, and culminate in their God-established conclusions. The devotees of the razor must consistently, allow their wives and daughters to don the male attire capapie. Let all who would maintain the rank of men, and be treated as men, "quit themselves like men" by retaining this Divinely-given attribute of manhood. Let shavers demonstrate that in bearding man God acted without reason, or that the law relative to the beard has been repealed. If neither can be done, it is a fair, unquestionable deduction that shaving is a violation of Heaven's order, and that were the principle involved pressed to its legitimate limits, it would result in a subversion of society. Were the law of the beard universally acknowledged and felt, my clerical friend would be as much ashamed to rise beardless in his pulpit, as to present himself in his congregation in his wife's dress. But we lose the fitness of things, make false conjunctions of principles and facts, and then contend for our monstrosities as if they were the marrow of Divine revelation. Let your beard where God has put it, and be what it signifies. That is, BE A MAN.

May Christians Dance?

The question, "May Christians dance?" is often asked; especially by those who have loved this form of amusement before conversion, and desire still to practice it, if it is proper for them to do so. Since this is, to the young, one of the most fascinating forms of amusement, it is of the greatest importance that we give a correct answer to the question which forms the heading of this article.

It is not our present purpose to give an exhaustive treatise upon the subject of dancing, nor to spend time in discussing the question whether dancing is, in itself, a sin. But with society and social amusements as they are, may the Christian practice dancing as he will practice it, if at all? There is no need of argument here to show that if Christians dance, the sexes will not dance separately, as was done in the dances mentioned in the Bible. If Christians never danced except when men danced only with men, and women only with women, this question—"May Christians Dance?"—would never give the churches much trouble.

Neither will Christians do much harm dancing as a mere expression of Christian joy, as David danced when he brought up the ark of the Lord to Jerusalem.

Neither would Christians be very much charmed by the dance, if practiced merely for exercise, as we swing dumb-bells or Indian clubs. It is evident, that so far as professing Christians are charmed by the dance, the fascinations are of the same nature to them as to other people. The practical question for us is not whether or not we can conceive a case in which it would be proper for a Christian to dance, but is dancing, as it is and will be practiced, proper for a professing Christian? This question we will endeavor to answer; not by the monosyllable yes or no, but by laying down some of the principles which should always govern the conduct of a professing Christian, and leave each one to decide for himself whether he can dance consistently with these principles.

1. It is evident from God's word that no Christian should indulge in any practice which grieves or offends his fellow Christian. This principle is clearly laid down by the Apostle Paul, where he says, "If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend." The eating of a piece of meat, even though part of the animal had been used in a heathenish sacrifice, was no sin in itself, but when to eat this meat would grieve the tender conscience of a brother, or when this example encouraged any recent convert from idolatry to return to idolatrous practices, how easy this meat became an offense. So important was this principle to the Apostle that he said, not merely that he would not eat meat which had been offered to an idol, but that he would eat no flesh at all, if thereby any should be offended.

According to this principle, if your dancing will wound the conscience of a brother, or if your example in this respect will encourage others in improper amusements or indulgence, it is very evident that you should not dance. Before, therefore, we decide the question "May Christians Dance?" in the affirmative, we must decide that their dancing will give no offense.

2. It is evident that a Christian should do nothing that will interfere with a spirit of prayer. When the Apostle says "Pray without ceasing;" and again, "Praying always with all prayer," he means that we should always maintain a spirit of prayer; that is, we should do nothing upon which we cannot ask God's blessing. A Christian, then, can dance only when and where it is consistent with a spirit of prayer, and only as he can ask God's blessing upon it.

3. A Christian should do nothing which hinders his usefulness. To the missionary Richard Knill, to be useful was to win souls to Christ. To witness for Christ is a plain Christian duty. He who has the spirit of Christ, will, like Christ, seek to do good to his fellows. Just so far as dancing is in the line of Christian usefulness, we may practice it. If it promotes revivals and conversions it is a proper indulgence. If to dance with a friend is the best way to lead him to Christ, we should dance with him. An eminent pastor, of wide experience, gives the following testimony on this subject: "More than once, during a busy ministry of fifteen years, I have known the believing wife to yield to the solicitations of an unbelieving husband, and accompany him to the theater, or participate in the hilarities of the dance, on the specious plea that by relaxing a little her high toned Christian principles, she would render her religion more genial, and gradually win him over to the cause of Christ. I have never known an instance in which this plan succeeded. On the other hand, the wife always, I believe, loses whatever influence she might have possessed as a child of God, while the husband is confirmed in ungodliness by the compromise which she has made at his entreaty, or perhaps upon his demand. I have seen such women weep bitter tears over their folly and sin, and lament with unavailing regret the terrible mistake they had committed."

It is a fact, known to all observing ones, that dancing parties are very frequently resorted to as a diversion from the influence of a revival. It is also a well-known fact that when an anxious inquirer attends a dance, it is a pretty certain evidence that he has lost his seriousness. Never dance unless you are sure it will not be an obstacle to your Christian usefulness.

4. The Christian is enjoined to do all things for the glory of God. He shall not then dance save as he can thereby glorify God. What is proper for one Christian is proper for another under similar circumstances. Let the young lady who loves to dance remember, that what is proper for her, is proper, under similar circumstances, for all Christians. If it is proper for her to dance, it would be proper for the officers of the church, or for her pastor, to dance with her, because neither she nor her pastor have a right, as Christians, to do anything, not even to eat or drink, only so far as it may be done for the glory of God.

Guided by such principles as these, which all Christians admit, let each one decide for himself this question, "May I, as a Christian, dance?"

Do What the Father Says?

BY LEVI KITTINGER.

In my leisure hours I am sometimes moved to contribute a few thoughts for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. As I have been so unfortunate as to lose my hearing almost altogether, I have but little satisfaction in meeting; but as I still retain the blessing of sight, I peruse the columns of our valuable paper with much delight. When the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN comes it always receives a hearty welcome. I always find and obtain some spiritual food.

Some forty years ago, near where Vogansville stands now, Lancaster Co., Pa., a certain occurrence took place that made a deep impression upon my mind; so deep that it has not worn off from that day to this. I remember of being sent on an errand to a neighbor's house where there were four boys in the family. The three younger boys and myself were in the yard, when the oldest son of the family came out of the house and said, "Come on boys, we must do such and such work." One of the younger boys wanted to know who said so. He was answered that father said so. Not being altogether satisfied with what his brother said, he inquired further into the matter till he found out to his full satisfaction that the father had commanded the labor to be done. The younger boys well knew their oldest brother would order work to be done in the name of the father that the father knew nothing of, and did not meet the approval of the father. For this reason they were very particular when their oldest brother ordered work to be done, to ascertain whether the command came from the father. Just as soon as they found out that the father had said so, I didn't hear one single word of objection; they all joined in and commenced the work cheerfully.

I have frequently thought, in later years, if those boys had been minded as the general run of Christian professors in our day, they would have tried to find some non-essentials, and would have commenced reasoning on the matter—"We would like to know what object father has in view that this fence must be torn down and the new rails put in the bottom—why can't these new rails be put on top? This would do just as well and save much labor, and give us much more time to play. And more than this, it is an inside fence; it is not exposed to the cattle that run at large, and for that reason it is not necessary to be so strong; therefore we don't believe the father means what he says." But there was nothing of that kind said, nor, I suppose, thought of. They all well knew if the father commanded any work to be done, that it had to be done according to his orders, and that he commanded nothing that he did not intend they should do. And more than that, if it was not done as the father commanded it, a severe punishment would be sure to follow; and in order to escape the punishment and receive the friendly smiles of a kind and loving father, the work was commenced and performed according to the command of the father.

In later years this small affair proved to be of great value to me. Twenty years ago, when I resolved to tear loose from the devil's kingdom and enlist under the King that holds the reins of the universe, I commenced reading the Bible in order to find out what the Father says. Just at that time the devil sent one of his agents to get me to disbelieve the Father. This agent wanted to know whether I enjoyed religion, I told him I had made no public pretention of serving the Lord. He said I should come out and get religion. I told him that I could not go with him in religious matters for several reasons. Of course he wanted to know my reasons. I gave him several. After commenting on these different "non-essentials," as the world generally terms the most of God's commandments, he said, "You know there is more than one way to go to California: some sail round South America; others cross the isthmus; and others cross the planes; and they all get to California." I told him I would consent to that, but as for heaven I have never read of more than one way, and Christ is the way, and anything short of observing and doing what Christ has commanded will not take us to heaven. He said I should come out and get religion and I would look at these things quite differently. I told him I did not want any religion that would teach me anything else than what Christ has commanded. Just at this point the agent left. He made no impression on my mind. I was still left of the opinion with the boys—it is best to do what the Father says.

I would just say to one and all, if any one comes along and wants to teach you the way to heaven, be sure and find out whether the Father says so; and if you find the Father has not said so, I would advise you to stand aloof.

The Wanderer.

BY J. S. FLORY.

How many there are in this wide world who are wanderers, going from place to place, seeking something, they hardly know what! Home associations, have, seemingly, no charms to them. The dear ones—or, at least, those once dear to them—are become as strangers. The mother's heart may bleed in remembrance of her child; the brother or sister often sits in silence and sadness, musing upon the happy days when the long absent one was cheerful and happy around the one common family hearth. Oh, could the wanderer be made conscious of the fact that there are hearts that yet love him! for how can a mother cease to love her precious offspring, or brothers and sisters for get him that shall ever have a place in their remembrance? Yes, I repeat it, hearts that yet have in remembrance long, by-gone days love the wanderers; and could they feel it, "could they longer silent be?" Methinks not. But alas! the influences of other surroundings have weakened the wanderers' heart from objects that were first loved; and by reason of long wandering the better qualities of the soul have become callous. Years and years have passed, and yet parental affection or brotherly love continues to burn with the fires of patience and hope.

Cast off the wanderer? Verily no; come when he may there are arms ready to receive him, and the cup of forgiveness is full and ready to run over at his feet. There is one such brother that our memory goes out after. Though many years have gone since we last saw him, or had an epistle from his hand, yet we hope to meet him and see him in this life. But our object now is to call attention to the wanderer from God—to him or her who has left the "Father's house," and, like the prodigal, is a wanderer in a strange land. Sinful surroundings have seared the conscience, closed the better avenues to the human heart, and made a wreck of holy resolves, so that the wanderer is indeed dead in trespasses and sins. As a mother's love cannot forget an absent son, so neither can our Father in heaven forget the wandering prodigal. His mercy is great, his love, boundless, and his willingness to forgive beyond our finite comprehension. Oh, could such wanderers feel the yearnings of sovereign mercy, or hear the groans and prayers of dear ones who yet love them, would they go on in their uncertain wanderings? Were they to come to themselves, and see where they are, how swift would be their feet to return home! Home, oh what a sweet name! No wanderer can feel the blessedness of a happy home—a home where there are kindred hearts to love.

In many instances there have been affectionate meetings of long absent ones; and in the return of the homeless and wanderer there have been great joy and seasons of rejoicing. Just so the happy greeting when a lost one returns to God. When God meets the penitent wanderer coming home, the picture is such that we leave it for angels to brighten and heavenly hosts to gaze upon in wrapped enthusiasm. Oh, may the great truths of God's word be heralded afresh, from sea to sea, and to the ends of the earth, that many wanderers may hear the voice of the Son of God and live, and may find a home where love is—where love broods upon the spreading wings of mercy, and where peace is always at home. In all the wide world, where else can such love, such mercy, such pardon, and such boundless grace be found as can be found with Jesus?

Reader, have you a home with God? Doth peace dwell within thy soul? You will let the question pass for the present, will you? Dare you do it? Can you afford to put it off another day, when this hour may be your last? No home here with God in the soul, it will be no peaceful home with God in heaven.

Oh, may you awake to the solemn fact that delay may bring everlasting death!

Greeley, Col.

The Day is at Hand.

My night is far spent, my day is at hand. The wilderness is nearly traversed: Canaan and Jerusalem are almost within my view; the summits of the everlasting hills are already appearing. What manner of person, then, ought I to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hastening unto the coming of the day of God!

I must press forward; and so much the more as I see the day approaching, I must be consistent and heavenly-minded, so walking worthy of my calling, and settling my affection on things above. For what have I, who have a crown in prospect, a kingdom in reversion, to do with the vanities or pleasures of this poor and passing world? My eye is above; my treasures in heaven; shall not my heart be there also? If I am in Christ, I must seek to be like him, and to follow him more and more closely, as the night is hastening to an end, and the day about to break. If I am in sorrow, I shall call to mind that weeping endureth but for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. If I am in comfort, I must see that this prosperity which God has given me is making me a holier man, and a more self-denying worker for him who loved me and washed me from my sins in his own blood. If I am poor, I shall rejoice that my day of wealth is just at hand. If I am rich, I shall take this gold which my Lord has given me, and lay it all at his beloved feet. Mine must be no halt discipleship—no service of two masters—no divided heart. The night is far spent, the day is at hand. What remains of this brief life of mine must be given wholly to the Lord.—H. Bonar.

Faith.

"Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Hebrew 11: 1.

In trying to define our subject, we will quote a few extracts from reputed authors. "Faith," says Webster "is belief in the facts and truth of the Scriptures, with a practical love of them," &c. "Faith is the substance of (confidence in) things hoped for, and that it (faith) is the evidence (conviction) of things not seen." Dr. Lange makes it the anchor to the soul of man; it holds his trust firm in Christ, while all his saving powers are applied to his sin-stained soul, "grasping Christ with the heart." Faith, says Luther, is "trusting God in the dark." Faith is the hand to the soul; as the natural hand reaches food to the body, so faith reaches spiritual food to the soul. The apostle declares that "without faith it is impossible to please God." (verse 6), so that it is essential to believe and have faith in order to be saved. The faith which is necessary to salvation, combines assent with reliance, belief with trust. Thus Christ is exhibited in the gospel as having made an atonement for sin; and whosoever believeth in him, and is baptized, shall not perish, but have everlasting life. John 3: 16. Exercising this faith, the sinner is received and treated as if he were just and righteous; and hence the process is called justification by faith. Rom. 3: 24, 25. Our present salvation from sin and its consequent guilt is by grace through faith, Eph. 2: 8; and by faith our spiritual life is maintained, "for therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith; as is written, the just shall live by faith." Rom 1: 17. That there are degrees of faith is evident from Scripture. We read of "great faith," of being "strong in the faith," and "weak in the faith," &c.; relating to which a reputed writer says, "Faith is to be measured from the revelation which he who believeth hath, and from the opposition which he encountereth. A little faith upon little light, and maintained against a great opposition, is a great faith; though little in itself, yet great with respect to the circumstances of him or her that believeth."—Poole.

D. N.

THE petitions offered up by the believer who abides in Christ, and has Christ's words abiding in him, will be in harmony with the will of God. "The spirit maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God." The spirit-taught breathings of desire, therefore, on the part of the believer are the very breathings of God within him; and surely God on the throne in heaven will not be indifferent to the breathings of God in the human heart. Rather, these breathings are themselves a fulfilment of the promise, and a preliminary step on the part of God toward a richer, fuller, grander fulfilment of it.

It is with sincere affection or friendships—as with ghosts and apparitions—a thing that everybody talks of and scarce any hath seen.—Roche foucauld.

How Fights Begin.

AMELIA, ANN, AND THE ATLAS.

These two sisters lived in Pennsylvania. Amelia was ten, and Ann seven years old. I was asking them questions from an atlas one day, and they answered promptly and correctly. But I observed that each was desirous of being thought the smarter; and when one answered first, the other did not look pleased. I suspected they sometimes quarreled, so I asked:

'Do sisters ever quarrel?'

'Yes,' said Amelia, 'sometimes.'

'What can two little sisters, who eat sleep and play together, find to quarrel about?' I asked.

Said Amelia, 'Ann got my atlas this very morning, and would not let me have it when I wanted it.'

'What did you do to her then?'

'I snatched it away,' answered Amelia.

'Why did you not let her look at it awhile, and then she would have given it up? It was not very kind and sisterly to snatch it away from her.'

'But I wanted it,' said Amelia; 'it was mine, and she had no business to keep it when I wanted it.'

'But if you had felt a loving and sisterly spirit towards Ann, you would have been glad to let her keep it for a while and look it over, even if you did want it. It would have given you more pleasure to let her look at it than to snatch it from her.'

'But she was cross, and struck me,' answered Amelia, 'when I went to take it from her.'

'She did not strike you till you snatched it away, did she?' I asked.

'No,' said she.

'Then what did you do to her?'

'I struck her back again.'

'Then what did Ann do?'

'She struck me again harder.'

'Then you struck her harder still, did you?'

'Yes,' answered Amelia.

'Now why did you strike her at all?'

'Because,' answered Ann quickly, 'I struck her.'

'Why did you strike her, Ann at first?'

'Because she snatched the atlas from me,' said Ann.

'And why did she snatch it from you?'

'Because,' retorted Amelia 'she would not let me have it when I wanted it.'

'So you two sisters, who never ought to have a hard feeling or unkind word between you, were angry at each other, and struck and fought each other, merely about an atlas. I should think, Amelia, that you would rather have let Ann keep your atlas as long as she lived than to have fought with her about it, and thus have occasioned one moment's interruption of your sisterly affection.'

Quarrels among brothers and sisters generally begin in some such foolish way and about some trifling thing.—Sel.

Courtesy at Home.

No pleasanter sight is there than a family of young folks quick to perform little acts of attention toward their elders. The placing of the big arm-chair in a warm place for mamma, running for a foot stool for aunty, hunting up papa's spectacles, and scores of little deeds, show unexpressed and loving hearts. But if mamma never returns a smiling "Thank you, dear," if papa's "Just what I was wanting, Susie," does not indicate that the little attention is appreciated, the children soon drop the habit. Little people are imitative creatures, and quickly catch the spirit surrounding them. So if when the mother's spool of cotton rolls from her lap, the father stoops to pick it up, bright eyes will see the act, and quick minds make a note of it. By example, a thousand times more quickly than by precept, can children be taught to speak kindly to each other, to acknowledge favors, to be gentle and unselfish, to be thoughtful and considerate of the comfort of the family. The boys, with inward pride of their father's courteous demeanor, will be chivalrous and helpful to their young sisters; the girls, imitating the mother, will be gentle and patient, even when big brothers are noisy and heedless. In the home where true courtesy prevails, it seems to meet you on the very threshold. You feel the kindly welcome on entering. No rude eyes scan your dress. No angry voices are heard up stairs. No sullen children are sent from the room. No peremptory orders are given to cover the delinquencies of housekeeping or servants. A delightful atmosphere pervades the house—unmistakable, yet undescribable.

The Best Story.

Now Black-eyes, Blue-eyes and Gray-eyes, listen to me, for I am going to tell you a story. You like stories, I know Well, one night Arthur's mamma went away and left him alone fast asleep in his little bed. "But who was Arthur?" do you say.

Sure enough, I forgot that! Well, Arthur was a little boy who lived with his father and mother in the house where I lived. He had no brothers or sisters to play with, but he was not lonely, for his mother was so kind to him. She would tell him stories every day of lions and tigers and seals and whales, and so he knew a great many things about them, and when he would come to visit my room he would tell me about them.

When Arthur was only two years old, his mother made a little black woolly dog, with such a funny tail curled over his back, I know you would have laughed to have seen it. Arthur loved it better than any plaything he had, and each night took it to bed with him. Its name was Fido.

One night, as I said, his mother went away after he had gone to sleep. I told her if he awoke I would go to him. Soon I heard his little voice calling, "Mamma!" I went to him, and tried to quiet him, told him some stories and sung to him. By and by he stopped crying, and lay very still with his eyes wide open, and his little hand holding mine. "I was so afraid all alone in the dark!" he said. "But you were not alone," I said; "don't you know who was taking care of you in the dark?" "Oh, yes, Fido was taking care of me," he said. "Fido always takes care of me." How sorry I was then that that mother had not told her little boy the sweetest story of all, how Jesus was near him, and could see him in the dark as well as the light, and keep him safe, so that he need not be afraid.

So I told Arthur about Jesus, and he listened to every word. When I stopped, he drew a long breath, and said, "I like that story. I wonder if Mamma knows that Jesus takes care of me when I am alone. She never told me about Jesus." "But you can tell her about Him." "Oh yes, I'll tell her the first thing when she comes home, and she'll be so glad, 'cause sometimes she is afraid too." And so the brown eyes closed, and very soon Arthur was fast asleep again.—The Little Sower.

A worthy faith in immortality is a great thing to have. Even if the faith be baseless, the possession of it is an ennobling treasure that enriches and glorifies the mind. To believe such a thing intelligently, thoughtfully, sincerely, with deliberate and cordial assent, is an attestation of the greatness of the soul. They who can habitually entertain it—not as a tradition, not as a doctrine taught in infancy and in churches, not as a dogma of revelation which must be received without question; not as an anticipation to be fulfilled by some miraculous agency, but as an abiding postulate of reason, that has been subjected to the air and light, and resisted decomposition—are people to be envied. To such a hope, immortality is no more than an adequate answer.

Credulity is, perhaps, a weakness almost inseparable from eminently truthful characters.—Tuckerman.

Miscellaneous.

Debts of the Cities.

Since 1867, or say eight years, the municipal debt of the country has increased frightfully, and the burden of taxes is getting to be about as heavy as can be borne. The debt of Allegheny City has increased in this time 500 per cent., and the tax levy is nearly four times as much. The debt of Albany has increased 250 per cent., and the taxes the same percentage. The debt of Baltimore has increased 60 per cent., and the taxes nearly 100 per cent. The debt of Boston has increased from $13,000,000 to $43,000,000, and the taxes from $7,000,000 to $10,500,000.—Chicago has multiplied her debt by three and her taxes two. Cleveland has just quadrupled her obligations and trebled her taxation. The debt of Detroit is double what it was in 1867; the taxation is nearly three times as great. Louisville's debt is double, taxes 12 per cent more. Milwaukee has multiplied her debt by two and two-thirds, and her taxation by two and a half. Newark owes $5,600,000, against $2,110,000 in 1867, with taxation doubled. New Orleans has increased her debt from $14,000,000 to $22,000,000, and her taxation is just one dollar a hundred, or one per cent. greater. The debt of New York is four times greater, the taxation increased 50 per cent. Philadelphia has doubled its debt, but reduced its taxation just half. The debt of Portland is more than three times as large, the taxation has increased about 10 per cent. Providence has multiplied her debt by seven and her taxation by two. Richmond owes more than twice as much, and taxes are greater by 30 per cent. St. Louis has increased her debt from $5,500,000 to $16,500,000, and her taxation 60 per cent. Rochester's debt is more than five times as great, and her taxes two and a half times as great. The debt of Pittsburgh has been multiplied by four and a half, and the taxation by four and a quarter. In the aggregate, and allowing $50,000,000 for convertible and merchantable assets that belong to separate cities, we find that the net indebtedness of these nineteen cities, which, with deductions made, was not quite $100,000,000 in 1867, has grown to $230,000,000 in 1875, a net increase of $130,000,000, or 230 per cent. The average interest paid by these cities on their loans is in excess of 7 per cent., so that the permanent addition to their annual taxation aggregates $16,000,000, there is some consolation in knowing New York is not alone in her misery, nor is New Orleans the worst governed city on the planet; but these figures, in the rapidity of their tremendous accumulations, make it certain that there will have to be a short and swift limit set to municipal expenses or else our cities must accept the alternative of bankruptcy, with all its attendant shamefulness and ruin.—N. Y. World.

What England Pays for War.

Twenty years before the Crimean war, the military and naval expenditure of the country was £10,000,000. In 1854, the year before that war, it had risen to £16,000,000. Since the termination of that war it has averaged more than £26,000,000 per annum. Thus we have had a permanent increase of £10,000,000 per annum (not including the interest on debts) ever since the Crimean war.—These sums are so enormous that they cannot even be imagined, except by some process of comparison. To aid this comparison let us mark the following facts: According to the officially published annual statistics, the total amount of coal produced in the United Kingdom has averaged for the last seven years, an annual value of £22,000,000 sterling, or £4,000,000 less than the average cost of the army and navy. Hence, all our coal mines united will not suffice to maintain our army and navy. And all the coal, iron, copper, lead, tin, zinc, silver and other metals produced in the United Kingdom have averaged in value (for seven years past) £37,000,000 per annum, or about £18,000,000 less than the year's expenditure for past and present wars. The total capital accumulated in the Postoffice savings bank was (in 1867) £9,748,929.—The total capital in other savings banks in the United Kingdom in 1867, £36,476,408. Total, £46,226,337. Hence, the annual war expenditure (for past and present operations) far exceeds the total deposits of the industrial and economic classes invested in all the savings banks. The total annual receipts of all the railways in the United Kingdom for passengers and goods are about £38,000,000, or £17,000,000 less than the money demanded on account of war. The average value of wheat, barley, oats, maize, and flour imported into the United Kingdom for seven years past is £30,000,000 per annum, or only £4,000,000 more than the annual expenditure for army and navy alone, irrespective of the national debt. No wonder that many are almost starved! The average value of the cotton imported into the United Kingdom for the seven past years is £29,000,000, exactly the cost of the army and navy alone in 1868. No wonder the manufacturing population have to work hard to get a livelihood! All the paupers in the United Kingdom cost in the year 1870 £7,590,787, or one-third of the expense of the army and navy.—From the Peace Society's Papers, London.

Cost of the Franco-Prussian War.

A writer in the Revue des Deux Mondes estimates at ten milliards of francs (about $2,000,000,000) the total cost to France of the war with Germany. The war indemnity alone was five milliards of francs; the war contributions of Paris, two hundred millions of francs; requisitions in other departments, over three hundred millions. And all this besides the hundreds of thousands of lives destroyed, women and children made widows and orphans, and the horrors of the communism of Paris following this almost motiveless war!

War means immediate taxes laid on with a heavy hand. It means restoration of the tax of five cents on coffee and twenty five cents on tea, and the entire list of internal excises; it means a multiplication of the tax gatherers. War is the downfall of public credit, and ours is already strained. Instead of selling bonds for what they will fetch, we will lay a direct tax of $300,000,000 a year, to be collected through the regular state machinery. The expenditures of such a war will be made by a few eastern cities; the taxes will be drawn from the whole country. War will destroy confidence and paralyze industry. They are fools as well as knaves who argue that we should go to war to make good times. Traders who are weak and shabby now would be wiped out by a war.—Cincinnati Gazette.

Lord Derby has recently said: "Unhappily there is no international tribunal to which cases of dispute can be referred, and there is no international law to meet such cases. If such a tribunal existed it would be a great benefit to the civilized world." This is the great want of the world. Commerce, arts, religion, are spreading, but one war puts back civilizing influences for a whole generation. He who succeeds in leading the great powers to agree upon peaceful arbitration as a system, will deserve a statue of gold.

Secular Baptism.

Every man to his taste, has a curious illustration now and then in the manners and customs of those enlightened people that attribute the darkness of humanity to the faith of Christ. It is difficult to discern the workings of the minds that produced this scene described by an advanced thinker in the following words: "Mrs. B., who never looked more beautiful and feminine, took the babe tenderly from its mother, and, holding it in her arms, said it was her duty to admit that child to the Secular ranks. It was not with any desire to mock the ceremony of baptism, but simply because the child must be known by a name, and in giving the name publicly it pledged them to keep the child and to welcome it as a fresh member in their ranks. 'We welcome the child,' she added in a solemn voice, 'because when we die he is to take on the work and bear the banner we are holding this day, and the hope of our movement is with the children.—We name him with the full hope that the name will hereafter be honorable in the movement of freedom and thought.' The whole affair evidently impressed the large assembly which witnessed it."

No one would imagine that these persons wished to "mock the ceremony of baptism," but who can tell why they should feel constrained to ape that ceremony? It is a paragraph full of conundrums. Does it require any ceremony in London to admit a person, old or young, to Secular ranks? Is not a child just as effectively named for the public by the will of its parents as by a public ceremonial? Do Secularists imagine that this public recognition of a child, as born of parents that despise religion, will in some way confirm this child in ways of unbelief and Secularism? Rather, is not the whole affair merely a feminine recognition of certain instincts, and does not this very absurdity of Secularism reveal the repressed longings of the heart for something like that which is freely given to those who will accept the unspeakable gift of the Son of God?—N. Y. Observer.

RULES FOR AUTHORS.

1. At the head of every letter give the name of your own post-office, county and State; and the date on which it is written.
2. Write the name and give the full address of every subscriber you send, as legibly as you can.
3. Write "New" before the names of all new subscribers.
4. In ordering a change of address, give the post-office, county, and State, to which the paper is sent, as well as the post-office, county, and State to which it is to be sent.
5. Do not mix up different items of business; but take up and finish one item before you take up another.
6. Write items intended for publication on a separate slip.
7. Make every lawful effort to obtain subscribers, and to do good in whatever way you can.
8. Send money by drafts, post-office money orders, or registered letters.
9. Observe the above rules, and you will expedite business, save us from much trouble, and yourselves and our subscribers from disappointments and vexation.

A FEW THOUGHTS SUBMITTED.

There is an idea that has obtained considerable prevalence with a number of our brethren that any measure, practice, or principle, that the professing Christian world around us observes and holds, is of doubtful propriety, or perhaps altogether wrong, and that our brotherhood, making the profession that it does of a close adherence to the self-denying principles of Christ and the apostles, and of the primitive Christians, should not adopt or observe such measures, practices, or principles. The idea is, that because the popular professing Christian world has departed so far from the Christian life inculcated in the unadulterated gospel of Christ, any institution or measure originating in it, or being popular with it, cannot with safety be adopted or practiced by our fraternity, holding the views of Christian life and practice that we hold.

We may mention as examples of the class of things alluded to, Sabbath-schools and the missionary cause. The Sabbath-school has been introduced into many places by the Brethren and the propriety of making greater efforts than have hitherto been made by us for the work of evangelism, or the spreading of the gospel, is receiving increased attention in our brotherhood. But while a considerable number of our brethren take an interest in these things, others hesitate, and some think it not at all advisable to encourage them. And one of the objections offered is, that by taking a part in such things we do as the corrupt and popular Christian world does, and this we should not do.

Now, while we are not blind to the errors of an apostate church, and while we would not countenance any of its errors, we would appreciate what is right and good, and accept of it, let it be found among whatever class of people it may. We would not be prejudiced against a principle or institution if it has truth or merit to recommend it, though it may have been abused, and though it may be found associated with errors or evils. As persons of pure principles and holy character do not necessarily become contaminated by the society of the wicked, neither do right principles or useful institutions lose their virtue by being connected in communities with principles and institutions that are wrong. We think that every principle and every institution should be impartially examined in the light of gospel truth and its own practical tendency, and be dealt with according to its merits. And if it is worthy of our regard, it should have it, though it may have been rejected by some, and abused by others, and be found associated in systems with things that are wrong. "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." 1 Thess. v. 21. This is an apostolic precept, just and fair in its principle.

"Seize on the truth where'er 't is found,
On Christian or on heathen ground."

"The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." Luke xvi. 8. So affirms our Lord. And the meaning usually given to these words is this: The children of this world are wiser in their generation (that is, in their habits and rules of conducting their secular business, in making everything count, and in turning everything to their advantage, and in pushing their business early and late to gain their point, and to further their worldly projects), than are the children of light, or the children of God, to promote the spiritual interests of men, and the great cause of Christian truth. The language seems to be that of gentle rebuke. In viewing the language of our Lord, then, in this light, may we not and should we not as Christians profit even by the prudence, the shrewdness, the economy, the industry and perseverance that we observe in the business men of the world, and in seeing how these are made to secure success in their business, apply the same principles to promote successfully the work in every branch of Christian labor? We think we might, by a judicious application of hints we may thus receive from the men of the world, profit by such hints. The sluggard is sent to the ant to learn wisdom. "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways and be wise: which having no guide, overseer, or ruler, provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest." Prov. vi. 6-8. We should ever be willing to learn wisdom, and humble enough to receive it from any source from which it can be obtained.

The character and design of our remarks we hope will be understood. We do not mean to say that for Sabbath-schools and missionary labors, the propriety or necessity of which many of our brethren do not see, we have no authority but the practice of the Christian world around us. We are not attempting in our present article to show that it is the duty of the brethren to engage in the Sabbath-school and missionary fields of Christian labor. Our object is to show that the reason some of our brethren give for not assisting to promote these and other enterprises which are now being discussed among us, when they say it is doing as the world or as a corrupt Christian world does, is not a fair, weighty, or satisfactory reason, and it should not have the degree of importance given to it that is given to it by some.

There is another consideration we would respectfully submit to those brethren who seem to be conscientious in refusing to adopt any measure that errorists practice, simply because they are practiced by those not sound in the faith, thinking that any body of professing Christians that is not orthodox in everything, can be orthodox in nothing. Nazareth was a place that possessed but little reputation at the advent of our Lord; hence Nathaniel's question to Philip, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" John i. 46. But as little reputation as it possessed, it was the dwelling-place of our Lord—there was something good connected with it. And may there not be some good things in the popular Christianity of the day, however much it has fallen from the primitive standard of holiness, and however much of error in doctrine and unfaithfulness in practice may characterize it? What shall we say of its literature—the books which its authors have produced? It no doubt contains much error. But must we not in candor confess that it also contains much truth, and acknowledge our obligations to it for the advantages we have obtained from it? Its Commentaries, its Ecclesiastical Histories, its Christian Antiquities, its Dictionaries, and many of its works on practical Christianity, we have upon the shelves of our libraries, and we have consulted them with pleasure and profit. And can we with propriety and consistency do this, as many of our brethren have done, and as many are doing, and then when some measure is proposed, that the popular Christian world has adopted, reject said measure, simply because churches not thoroughly orthodox or evangelical have adopted it? We think we cannot consistently do so.

We then should look at the Sabbath-school or any other institution we may be called upon to look at, in all the light we can obtain upon the subject, and decide upon its merits accordingly. And if it commends itself to our approval, we should give it our sanction though the popular Christian world may likewise have it. As we make use of the literature of the Christian world when that literature can be used to subserve the promotion of the cause of Christian truth, may we not with the same propriety use anything else that will answer the same end, though it may be used, or may even have been introduced by such as are not evangelical in their principles or blameless in their lives? The institutions, agents, and instruments which some have used to promote a defective Christianity, or even to oppose Christianity, let us sanctify, and use to the spread of the "faith which was once delivered to the saints."

THE DELAY OF THE REPORT.

It has required our reporter a longer time to prepare his report for the press than we expected, and consequently we could not get it out at as early a day as was desirable. We hope our brethren will exercise due patience. We are doing all we can to hasten the work, and we shall send it out to those who have ordered it, as soon as we possibly can. We hope the brethren will still send in their orders.

ERRATUM.

In our leading editorial of the last number, and in the second paragraph, and in the fourth line from the latter end of the paragraph, "treasures" should be put in the place of "whatever." The compositor made the mistake, and the proof-reader overlooked it.

WANTED.

An honest, moral, active boy or girl, about fourteen or fifteen years of age, to serve as an apprentice to learn the art of printing. Should be good in orthography, and have some knowledge of English grammar. One preferred who can board at home. Apply at once.

OUR MEETINGS.—Bro. S. H. Bashor closed his meetings at this place for the present. He preached his last sermon in the Meyersdale meeting-house on the 6th inst. There was a deep interest manifested, and a number of precious souls showed by their actions that they were tired of the service of sin. Sixteen made application to be received into the church by baptism on the following day. At 3 o'clock p. m., on Friday, we assembled at the river to baptize. During the services two more made application who also were received and baptized. We had a joyful time. How pleasant it is to see sinners flocking home to Jesus! Many of those who have lately come out are yet young—a number of them members of our Sabbath-schools.

We were very sorry that Bro. Bashor's arrangements obliged him to leave, as many more were laboring under conviction and almost persuaded to be Christians. He went to Salisbury, six miles south, where he had meetings till the evening of the 10th. He reports interesting meetings, but no additions.

At our regular meeting on the 9th, we had the pleasure of receiving seven more by baptism. This makes an aggregate of 45 within six weeks. We have several more applicants, and many more are near the kingdom. May they come speedily.

Bro. C. Forney, Falls City, Nebraska, writing on the 28th ult., informs us that Bro. Ephraim Cober of Berlin, Pa., was at that time with them on a visit, and that they had some good meetings. He also reports fair prospects for good crops this year.

A BROTHER and Sister, Ashton, Ill., say: "Enclosed find six dollars, which we will lend to the Lord—the best place to lend money. Take two dollars for the Poor Fund, two dollars for the Danish Mission Fund, and two dollars for the Stein Fund, if needed; if not needed, then use it, too, for the Danish Mission Fund."

UNDER the title of "Too many collections," in Zion's Herald, "Anti-Tobacco" says:

"A pastor sends me the following statistics of his circuit: I have 267 members in full connection, and 100 probationers on my charge. Sixty-seven of them use tobacco, and on making inquiry of each one, I find they have spent for that article, in a single year, $845. The entire membership, with the aid of the outsiders, gave to pay the pastor and presiding elder, conference claimants, missions, church extensions, and freedmen, $841. One member confessed to spending $145 for tobacco. His contributions for church extension was 60 cents. Another confessed to an expenditure of $91 for tobacco. His contributions stood thus: Missions, $1; conference claimants, $1. It is to be feared that these are far from being unusual cases. There are many professing Christians whose record will stand, 'more for tobacco—a hundred fold—than for the conversion of the world.'"

Bro. H. D. Davy communicates a brief account of a visit of love to the little flock in the vicinities of Frankfort and Georgetown, in Kentucky. He says: "I met our much-beloved brother, George Fitzgerald, in Frankfort. He conveyed me to his house. We had several meetings there and in Scott county, where several of the brethren and sisters live. Pretty good attendance, generally, at the meetings, and one more added to their number at the close of the meetings. We now have set the 23rd of Sept. next to hold a lovefeast with them at the house of Bro. Wm. Bond, in Scott county, near Great Crossing post-office. Any one wishing to attend and wanting information, will address Bro. Wm. Bond, Great Crossing, Scott Co., Ky. We hope then and there to organize a church. The brethren and sisters there seem to be in good spirits, and zealous in the Master's cause. May the blessing of God be with them in their efforts to do good."

Epistolary.

Letter to Bro. Jacob Misher, of Mogadore, Ohio:

DEAR BROTHER:—I suppose you are beginning to think that I am rather dilatory about answering your letter of inquiry. I intended to have answered it before now but did not find time, on account of being away from home.

In the first place I feel myself to blame for not mentioning that it was what you term the River Brethren that I united with in church fellowship. However I hope you will pardon me for my error, for whilst reading the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN my faith was so much strengthened in many points of doctrine that my heart was drawn out in love to you as a church, and I really felt that I could call you brethren in Christ. However, if you cannot call me brother because I do not belong to your brotherhood, I must try to have love enough to bear with it.

You mentioned something of one Samuel Baker, of Markham. I would inform you that he is one of our ministers. You also mentioned J. B. Shoemaker and M. Weaver, two of your ministering brethren who visited Canada last winter, but had not the pleasure of seeing them, though I heard of them. They traveled through Waterloo county, some fifty miles south east from here.

You referred to your fraternity having an Annual Council, and that the States were divided into districts. You wished to know if our church was divided into districts. I would answer that our churches in Ontario are divided into three districts, namely: Waterloo, Black Creek, and Markham, with their branches. We belong to the Waterloo district. Our Annual Council was held in Markham this year.

You wished to know if the names of our ministers were sent for insertion in the Almanac. I answer, No. Neither have we any right to do so.

You stated that there was a body of Christians in the States known as River Brethren that originated from the Old Brethren. I need not correct that mistake, as Bro. C. H. Balsbaugh has already done that, for we neither originated from the Old Brethren nor from any other church, according as I have been informed.

You also called the River Brethren a sect. Now I consider that you have no more authority to call us a sect than we have to call the Old Brethren a sect. We call ourselves the Brethren, but in order to make a distinction, we are satisfied for you to call us River Brethren.

You stated that we observed the ordinances differently from the Old Brethren; but for my part I do not see much difference. I am perfectly satisfied that we have that faith which was once delivered to the saints. And by the grace of God I mean to contend for that faith.

You said that in my letters I mentioned eight different brethren who had been at our communion and preached for us, not one of whom is named in the ministerial list in the Almanac. How do you suppose we ought to send in our ministerial list when you stated just above that you were inclined to believe we were River Brethren?

Our lovefeasts have been as follows: First—Markham, six baptized and added to the church; second—Clarence Center, York State; third—Black Creek, thirty-six baptized and added to the church; fourth—Waterloo, two baptized; and tomorrow will be our love-feast. Some are to be baptized, but do not know exactly how many. I believe the Spirit of God is at work amongst us in this part. Oh, that there may be a glorious revival of religion, that sinners may be awakened out of the sleep of sin, that Christ may give them light! Also, one week from to-morrow, lovefeast at Natasawaga; some to be baptized there.

My wife and I were at Black Creek lovefeast. We left home on the 4th of June. Had some pleasant visits. Arrived at Brother Neils' Holm's on the 5th of June, and held meeting in the evening in the union meeting-house. Spoke through much weakness to an attentive congregation. Arrived at my father-in-law's, 18 miles south of the city of Hamilton, and held meeting in the Baptist chapel. Spoke with freedom to an attentive congregation. Took the train next morning from Caledonia to Port Colborne; arrived amongst the brethren and enjoyed one of the best lovefeasts I ever enjoyed in my life. My heart was made to rejoice to see so many starting for the kingdom.

On Monday morning was brought to Port Colborne; arrived at my father-in-law's; held another meeting in the Baptist chapel to good satisfaction. Thence proceeded homeward, held meeting in Waterloo at Bro. Sol'n. Gingrich's. Met with brethren S. Doner and J. Baker with their wives, from Notown. From thence we proceeded to our home, and found all well, for which we have reason to thank and praise God for his tender mercies. Hoping that the time spent may prove effectual to the salvation of sinners and the encouragement of believers is the desire of my heart.

I must now bring these remarks to a close, hoping, dear brother, they may prove satisfactory to you and the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Your weak brother and well-wisher in Christ Jesus. NELSON KITELEY.

*Fordwich, Haron Co., }
Ont., June 23, 1876. }*

P. S.—One question I forgot to answer, viz.: "How long have the River Brethren existed in Ontario?" They were in Canada before 1812, as far I can learn.

N. K.

Touching the Duties of an Editor.

Let us talk a little to our brother who complained about the article of Mr. Whitmire on secrecy. We think it was right to publish it, and would like to have him think so, too. If there were none reading your paper except Brethren, who are firmly settled in their minds on that subject, then, probably, it would not be necessary to give the subject on both sides; but since there are many outside of the church, and some who are inclined to favor such secret orders, are reading your paper, the surest way of reaching such with the truth, most likely, is to let Mr. Whitmire give his reasons in their strongest form, that the error may be seen dressed in its alluring beauties, so that all can see how these secret orders are introduced into the minds and feelings of the people. If, then, we can show them how the truth of God, the plain, practical Christianity of the gospel, rises above and against all their errors and arguments, we believe it is the surest way to establish the truth in the mind of those who are inclined to believe their errors; and the man who is convinced of the truth after he has seen the error presented in all its force, is in less danger of being entrapped by it. We think it not enough that we should merely denounce the error; but answer their strongest points of defense as they themselves have made them, and it carries conviction to the mind that is founded on solid truth, and is the surest defense the truth can have.

And further, we have had brethren who joined such secret orders, and why? Simply because these alluring and deceptive features were presented to them; they not fully understanding nor seeing how the pretense of charity showed a glowing exterior to cover a secret-working ring for the interest of a favored few. If all our brethren were posted on the deceptive arguments they offer as inducements to get others to join them, they would then know beforehand what they have to meet, and be apprised of the wiles of the enemy when he came. "I would not have you ignorant, brethren." Publish the article, and let them all see the "decoy duck"—the sugar coated pretense of good which covers the bitterness of selfish, worldly interest within.

Mr. Whitmire had baited the snare of the Fowler well with the very things which had caught some of our brethren before, and will be used for that purpose again. If our brother who complained knew that some patent right vender were trying to make $25 or $30 off each of his neighbors by selling a spurious patent, would he be to blame if he should get their well-prepared circular and show it to all his neighbors and explain to them how the statements in it would deceive them if they believed them, and prove to them that it was of no benefit except to a few speculators? Would our brother be blamable for showing the circular to his neighbors, if possible, before the patent right men could get to deceive them? Most certainly not. Then our editor is not wrong in giving to all the brethren the very circular which is used by the vendors to entice them to accept the error, as he is confident that the very same kind of thing will be offered to our brethren by some of the many secret organizations which flood the country now. Would you try to save the brethren by having them ignorant of the very means used to lead them into error? Certainly not; but give them "that wisdom which is from above," and show them how to use it to condemn the errors from below.

There may be a feeling that it is getting too much controversy into the paper.—We would not encourage controversy between brethren; but it is different in regard to those whom we all hold to be in error. It is right to oppose error in all the forms in which it may be presented. Every opposition to error is controversy with it, and the men of God are too remiss in some cases. Errors have been winked at by many until they have grown into popularity and power, and stand before the world in alluring beauty which need to be unmasked that their deformity may be seen. We want bold, determined brethren, ready to meet error in every shape in which it may come. The general who has only one way of meeting the enemy will likely be flanked. "Put on the whole armor of God;" then you may meet the enemy in any way he comes. If you are only going to meet him in one way, the shield may be enough.

I fear some would not make a successful warfare against the enemy. They seem only willing to meet him in a certain way. But the enemy may choose to come in another. How if he sends his force into the camp? Will you retreat and give him the field? Not if the "sword of the Lord and Gideon" may still have help. Jesus met the enemy in the mount; he met the Scribes and Pharisees; and he tells us what they said to tempt and entrap him, and he gives us his reply. Peter and John met the enemy at Jerusalem. The Evangelist tells us what the enemy said, and what they answered. Paul met the enemy and fought all the way from Jerusalem to Rome. The evangelist tells us what the enemy said and what Paul's answers were. The Bible is full of telling us what the enemies of truth have said, and how the holy men have answered them. Then may not Bro. Quinter tell us what an enemy of truth has said, and how the truth will answer and condemn him? God's holy men in the Bible are a living history of warfare against error. That warfare is not ended yet. Truth against error, humility against pride, the commandments of God against the customs of the world, the teaching of the gospel against the secret rites of lodges, necromancy and spiritualism; and we think our editor should bring these and all errors, out of their hiding places, and give the brethren all the schemes they use to lead the people after them.

My dear brother, though I cannot endorse your opposition to publishing the article, yet your opposition has something in it to commend you: it shows that you have no love for the error—not even enough to give it a hearing. You are so firmly set against them. You are out of their reach. They could not lead you into the snare; but there are others not out of danger. Some of them need to be reasoned out of the very deception hid behind the fair face of that article. Some need to be enlightened on that subject more than you do to prepare them for the temptation when it is offered.

R. H. MILLER.

June 25th, 1876.

My Dear Brother:

I will give you a short sketch of our trip West, which you may publish in your paper.

On the 18th of May myself, Isaac Long and wife, Jacob Thomas, J. P. Zigler and B. Neff started West. Our first point to stop was Dayton, Ohio. We arrived there on the 18th, at 3 o'clock. Next day we visited Dayton and the Soldiers' Home. Myself, Isaac Long and wife, and B. Neff then went to Bro. George Holler's district and remained there till Monday. Brethren Thomas and Zigler were in Bro. Peter Nead's district over Sunday. We then went to Bro. Nead's church, where we had meeting in the evening. The next day we went to D. Bowman's district, where all met again and parted. J. Thomas and J. Zigler went to Bro. Abraham Detrick's and Bro. S. Mohler's district. Myself, Isaac Long, and B. Neff went to Samuel Garver's district. We remained there till the 27th and then took the train and went to Allen county, Bro. D. Brower's district. Labored there one week and were present at a lovefeast with the brethren. Bade adieu to all, and went to DeGraff the place of Annual Meeting. Arrived there the 3rd of June, and was with the brethren till the 9th. Then started for Preble county, (Daniel Miller's district). There I left brethren Long and Thomas and went to brother Jacob Rife's district in Indiana. Was there a few days. Returned to Bro. D. Miller's. Had several meetings there. Then went to Samuel Garver's again, where we all met and had meeting.—Thence to Bro. D. Bowman's for evening meeting.

This closed our labors in the west. We were made to rejoice to meet with our brethren and sisters, and were sorry when we had to part, knowing well we would never meet in this way as we then met. We found them generally well and alive in the cause of the Master. May they still go on in the work of the Lord, and remember each other, and pray for each other, and cultivate love and forbearance toward each other, and hold out faithful until death.

On the 14th of June we left Dayton at 7:35 o'clock for the East. Went by way of Pittsburgh, Harrisburg, Baltimore and Washington. Stopped there one day, then home. Were met at station by our son. Found our family all in tolerable health, but three of them had been sick in our absence. We express our thanks to all for their kindness, and thank God for his care over us while on our journey.

Yours in love,

SAMUEL H. MYERS.

On the first Lord's day in June, we met with our brethren, sisters, and friends at our meeting-house in the Salimony district, Huntington county, Indiana.—Preaching at 11 o'clock to a large congregation. On Wednesday morning (7th) a goodly number of members met at the Springtown school house. After the necessary arrangements were made for our annual visit, exhortation, singing, and prayer, we started out by twos to visit the members of said district, which I call my home. On Saturday we met in church council in our meeting house. We never had a better visit reported, for which we bless the Lord. Soon in the afternoon of the 13th the people commenced coming in from every direction till our house was full. Preaching at 3 o'clock by brethren Daniel Shively and Stephen H. Bashor. After prayer we had an intermission. At half past five o'clock we met for examination; then a short intermission, while the tables were served. The members then gathered around the tables and the institutions of the Lord's house were strictly and harmoniously observed, in the best of order. We surely felt that the Lord was with us, and that it was one of our heavenly places.

The next morning we met again, soon after sunrise, for prayer. After prayer, we had social report. After that was over, a choice was held for two ministers and two deacons. The lot fell upon brethren John Ikenberry and Henry Wike for ministers, and Levi Hoover and Jacob Eckman for deacons. After these brethren were installed in their offices, our meeting closed by exhortation by Brother Bashor and prayer by the brethren.—Three were received by baptism at this meeting, one man about 70 years old. We truly felt loth to leave such a heavenly place. May the good Lord help our dear brethren and sisters to long remember this meeting. We were soon found on our way to another communion, from which you will hear in our next.

As ever your brother,

SAMUEL MURRAY.

Our communion was held on the 24th of June, at the residence of Bro. Jacob Weaver, north of Buchanan, at which place it has been held for four successive years. Bro. W. is one who is ever ready to manifest his Christian benevolence, whenever occasion presents.

Ministering brethren present were Jas. Miller, of Portage, our Elder; J. Stretch, of Pocagon; R. J. Sheves, Laporte; D. Weaver, L. Vorhees, and your humble servant.

I believe I speak the true sentiment of every brother and sister present when I say that it has indeed a feast in the Lord. J. Stretch served. J. Miller did most of the speaking on the ordinances. Sunday morning Elder J. Miller took his text from Heb. ii. 1—3, and preached one of the most powerful sermons I ever had the pleasure of listening to, and others expressed the same opinion—men of talent, too, which is evidence that he has not been slothful, but has cultivated that best gift spoken of, and also that God has verified his promise in showing him that excellent way of expounding the gospel. There is nothing good or excellent that we receive or attain, only from God. Then true culture will enable us to walk in all the ordinances of the Lord blameless before him.

Dear Brother Quinter:

Enclosed please find twenty-five cents; please send me the Report of the Annual Meeting. I think we do well if we can get the Proceedings of our Annual Meeting for the small sum of twenty-five cents and stay at home and save our time and the expense of going to attend those meetings, although some raise the cry: "It is only done for the purpose of making money by our brethren printers." Shame—shame on such! Would you rather pay out $10 to $25 to the railroad companies, who care nothing about us, only our money, than give the small sum of 25 cents to our editors for the report of the Meeting, giving us a better satisfaction than when we attend them ourselves? What a pity it is that our preachers are so easily spoiled by giving them a nickel once in a while! What poor beings our preachers and editors are! If our preachers are such persons that they are not to be trusted, I would advise to make no more. We have enough penny-grabbers, and I do not think they are all preachers and editors at that.

Bro. Daniel Arnold gave me the 25cts. for the report for myself and him. It will do us both, as I have no money to spare at present, or I would send you another quarter for one for myself; for I do not think it would spoil you, for you have a hard bargain to give the report for 25 cents. I would rather give 25 cents for the report than print them. Please send me a copy as soon as you get them ready. Yours in the bonds of Christian love.

A. J. CORRELL.

From Martinsville, Mo.

We have prospects for a good crop. But little wheat has been sowed, however; yet what there is looks well, and it is ready to harvest. Rye and oats are very promising. Meadows look well and will turn off much hay. Fruit will be plenty. We have a good country here, and I have often wondered that more Brethren do not seek homes here. I suppose it is too far from the railroad, I am a carpenter by occupation, and this being a thinly settled country, I find but little labor, which makes it hard for me to get along. If I were able to farm I think I could do well here. But this is not the case with me.

Some time since I had withdrawn or discontinued several meetings; but calls came for more. So I had meeting every Lord's day in the month. On the last Sunday in June we had meeting in the White Cloud school-house, and there was meeting at four other different points by other denominations. We were told beforehand that it was thought the meetings would be small on that day, on account of so many in the same neighborhood. But when the day arrived we found our house crowded to overflowing, and we had good order and attention. I do wish for ministerial aid. We need help so much. I am all alone, and have none that can even lead in singing, but the entire burden rests on my poor unworthy shoulders. Pray for me, and come and see us if you can. May God's blessing rest upon us all. W. B. SELL.

The Plumcreek communion has passed into history. The occasion was enjoyable. The laborers from abroad were brethren John Wampler, S. Wilt, and Jos. Wilt. They labored for and with us in the spirit of the gospel, and their labors were appreciated by the membership and others. Four young persons were baptized at this meeting. The good Lord aid them to adorn the noble profession by an upright walk and chaste conversation. This meeting commenced June 30th, at 5 p. m., and closed on July 2nd after second service. The weather most of the time was pleasant, but at times there was more heat than we well enjoyed. The order was good. But yet we may not have derived all that it was our privilege to, on said occasion.

A Visit.

Elder Jacob Wine and the writer paid a visit to the counties of Hardy and Grant, W. Va., from June 18th to 26th inclusive. We visited the brethren at Lost River, Knobly, Greenland, Luney's Creek, and South Fork, with some intermediate points. We filled eleven appointments for preaching and attended one council meeting. The appointment at Lost River, and two in the vicinity of Morefield, we were unable to fill in consequence of high water from the recent rains.

The meetings were interesting, and generally well attended, especially by the membership. The Lost River arm has a wide field and but few laborers. Its boundary extends to the vicinity of Morefield where there are about thirty members, not of the wealthy class, however. Bro Wine has agreed to visit them the first Saturday and Sunday in August, and, by request, will preach in Morefield.

Our visit to the Greenland arm was pleasant. From this congregation a number of active, zealous brethren have emigrated westward, while those remaining are earnestly laboring to fill up the vacancy.

We spent two days at Luney's Creek. Here are a number of excellent members. True, they have had their troubles, yet they manifest a commendable perseverance, and we trust that the Sun of Righteousness will here arise ere long with healing in his wings.

MARRIAGES.

By undersigned, at the residence of the bride's sister, on the 2nd of July, 1876, W. S. GLENN and MARTHA E. EISENBERGER, all of Harrison county, Va. W. B. SELL.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

Near South Whitley, Ind., on the 19th of June, 1876, brother GEORGE ROYER, aged 99 years, 10 months, and 8 days. Brother Royer was born in Lancaster county, Pa., in the year 1776. In 1834 he moved to Stark Co., Ohio, where he lived a short time. This was during the war of 1812, in which he served as a substitute. From Stark county he moved to Montgomery county, where he was married to Sarah Swank. Here thirteen children were born to them—nine boys and four girls—all of whom are yet living but one of the boys. About twenty-four years ago, he moved to Huntington county, Ind., where his companion in life was by death called from his side. After this he moved to Whitley county, where he lived with his children until his departure. Bro. Royer attached himself to the Brethren in the Wolf Creek church, in Montgomery county, Ohio, in the year 1840, or thereabouts, and lived in the faith to the last. The funeral occasion was improved from REV. XIV. 12, 13.

DAVID ROYER.

In the Middle Creek branch, Mahaska Co., Iowa, May 14th, 1876, Sister SARAH V. SCHUCHTER, aged 72 years and 2 months. Her disease was consumption. A meeting was held at her request, and one of the institutions of the primitive church—anchoring with oil in the name of the Lord—was attended to, which manifested her faith in Christ. Six weeks afterward she passed from the shores of time with a resigned will, only wishing to remain for her children's good. Thus passed away an earnest member, which, to the church here, is indeed a loss. Our sympathies run with this bereaved family, and we mourn the loss felt in her office as a deaconess, and as one less to fill the number that compose our small congregation. But we have all learned to say, by the exercise of faith in God, that all is well. The funeral services by Bro. Stephen P. Miller, from 2 Tim. iv. 6, 7.

Indisputable Evidence

St. Elmo, Ill., July 8, 1874.

R. V. PIERCE, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y.: I wish to add my testimony to the wonderful curative properties of your Alt. Ext., or Golden Medical Discovery. I have taken great interest in this medicine since I first used it. I was badly afflicted with dyspepsia, liver deranged, and an almost perfect prostration of the nervous system. So rapid and complete did the Discovery effect a perfect cure that it seemed more like magic and a perfect wonder to myself, and since that time we have never been without a bottle of the Discovery and Purgative Pellets in the house. They are a solid, sound family physician in the house and ready at all times to fly to the relief of sickness—without charge. We have never had a doctor in the house since we first began the use of your Pellets and Discovery. I have recommended the use of these medicines in several severe and complicated cases arising from, as I thought, an impure state of the blood, and in no case have they failed to more than accomplish all they are claimed to do. I will here only mention one as remarkable (though I could give you dozens). Henry Koster, furniture dealer, of this place, who was one of the most pitiful objects ever seen, his face swollen out of shape, scales and eruptions without end, extending to his body, which was completely covered with blotches and scales. Nothing that he took seemed to affect a particle. I finally induced him to try a few bottles of the Golden Medical Discovery, with daily use of the Pellets, assuring him it would surely cure him. He commenced its use some six weeks since, taking two Pellets each night for a week, then one each night, and the Discovery as directed. The result is, to day his skin is perfectly smooth, and the scaly eruptions are gone. He has taken some seven or eight bottles in all, and considers himself cured. This case had baffled the skill of our best physicians. Messrs. Dunsford & Co., Druggists, of this place, are selling largely of your medicines and the demand steadily increases, and they give perfect satisfaction in every case.

Respectfully, W. H. CHAMPLIN,

I was sorely afflicted with one of the most distressing of all diseases, Pruritus or Prurigo, or more commonly known as Itching Piles. The itching at times was almost insupportable, increased by scratching and not unfrequently becoming quite sore. I bought a box of Swayne's Ointment, its use gave quick relief, and in a short time made a perfect cure. I can now sleep undisturbed, and I would advise all who are suffering with this distressing complaint to procure Swayne's Ointment at once. I had tried prescriptions almost innumerable, without finding any permanent relief.

To sell the New Patent Improved EYE CUPS. Guaranteed to be the best paying business offered to Agents by any House. An easy and pleasant employment.

The name of the celebrated New Patent Improved Eye Cups for the restoration of sight breaks out and blazes in the evidences of over 6,000 genuine testimonials of cures, and recommended by more than one thousand of our best physicians in their practice.

The Patent Eye Cups are a scientific and philosophical discovery, and as ALEX. R. WYETH, M. D., and WM. BEATLEY, M. D. writes, they are certainly the greatest invention of the age.

Read the following certificates:
FERGUSON STATION, LOGAN Co., Ky., June 6th, 1872. DR. J. BALL & Co., Oculists:

GENTLEMEN: Your Patent Eye Cups are, in my judgment, the most splendid triumph which optical science has ever achieved, but, like all great and important truths, in this or in any other branch of science and philosophy have much to contend with from the ignorance and prejudice of a too sceptical public; but truth is mighty and will prevail, and it is only a question of time as regards their general acceptance and endorsement by all. I have in my hands certificates of persons testifying in unequivocal terms to their permanent cure, and prominent physicians of my county recommend your Eye Cups. I am, respectfully, J. A. L. DOYER.

WILLIAM BEATLEY, M. D., SALYSA, Ky., writes: "Thanks to you for the precious gift of my eyes, my sight is fully restored by the use of your Patent Eye Cups, after being almost entirely blind for twenty-six years."

ALEX. R. WYETH, M. D. ATCHISON, Pa., writes: "After total blindness of my left eye for four years, by the paralysis of the optic nerve, to my utter astonishment your Patent Eye Cups restored my eyesight permanently in the course of one month."

Rev. W. F. FALKENBURG, Minister of the M. E. Church, writes: "Your Patent Eye Cups have restored my sight, for which I am most thankful to your Father of Mercies. I have seen the instrument at a glance that your invaluable Eye Cups performed their work perfectly in accordance with physiological law; that they hierally fed the eyes that were starving for nutrition. May God, greatly bless you, and may your name be enshrined in the affectionate memories of multiplied thousands as one of the benefactors of our kind."

HORACE B. DILLON, M. D. says: "I sold, and effected future sales liberally. The Patent Eye Cups, they will make money, and make it fast, too; no small catch penny affair, but a superb, number one, six-story business, promise, as far as I can see, to be life-long."

Mayor F. C. ELLIS writes us, November 16th, 1869: "I have tested the Patent Ivory Eye Cups, and am satisfied they are good and will be successful. They are certainly the greatest invention of the age."

HON. HORACE GREELEY, late Editor of the New York Tribune, writes: "Dr. J. BALL, of our city, is a conscientious and successful man, who is incapable of intentional deception or imposition."

Prof. W. MENNICK writes: "Truly I am grateful to your noble invention. My sight is restored by your Patent Eye Cups. May heaven bless and preserve you. I have been using spectacles twenty years. I am seventy-one years old. I do all my writing without glasses, and I bless the inventor of the Patent Eye Cups every time I take up my old steel pen."

ADOLPH BIORNBERG, M. D., physician to Emperor Napoleon, wrote, after having his sight restored by our Patent Eye Cups: "With gratitude to God, and thankfulness to the inventors, Dr. J. BALL & Co., I hereby recommend the trial of the Eye Cups (in full faith) to all and every one that has any impaired eyesight, believing, as I do, that since the experiment with this wonderful discovery has proved successful on me, at my advanced period of life—90 years of age—I believe they will restore my vision to any individual if they are properly applied."

ADOLPH BIORNBERG, M. D. Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Essex, rs.
June 24th, 78, personally signed Adolph Biornberg, made oath to the following certificate, and by him subscribed and sworn before me.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

Never Despair—Something that Never Fails.—FEVER AND AGUE. To the sick it is of little consequence how they are cured, whether from a rational view of the disease, or by the rules defined for the guidance of the profession, so long as the cure is certain and expeditious. To a suffering man the question on the relative merits of quinine or calomel is uninteresting. The faculty may wrangle and discuss their various theories, but Dr. Holloway's treatment dispels doubt ere the disciples of Esculapius have finished the first stage. Holloway's pills are the only remedies which effect a speedy and radical cure without danger of a relapse. 155

* * * Sold at the Manufactory of Professor HOLLOWAY & Co., New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents, and $1 each.

CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the signature of J. HADDOCK, agent for the United States, surrounds each box of Pills and Ointment. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

is published every Tuesday at $1.60 a year, postage included.

This Christian journal is devoted to the defense and promotion of Primitive Christianity, as held and practiced by the Church of the Brethren, or German Baptists.

They accept the New Testament as the only proper rule of faith and practice, and hold to the observance of all its commandments and doctrines; among which are Faith, Repentance, Baptism by Trine Immersion, Prayer, the Washing of the Saints' Feet, the Lord's Supper, the Communion, Non-Resistance, Non-Conformity to the world, and the Perfecting of Holiness in the fear of the Lord.

As space will permit, some attention will be given to such secular matters as may be judged instructive to our readers.

Subscriptions may begin at any time. For further particulars send for a specimen number.

THE MANSIONS ABOVE.

There are mansions of love in the glorified
clime,
Unsuited by hate with its purpose of crime,
Where friendship immortal grows bright in soul,
And breathes in the anthems of rapture that roll.

There are mansions of rest in that region of light.
O'er whose glory there come not the shadow of night,
Where the toil-worn and weary of earth shall repose,
Removed from its conflicts, released from its woes.

There are mansions of peace in that beautiful world,
Where the banners of combat are never unfurled;
The turmoils of earth, the commotions of
time,
Disturb not the peace of those mansions sublime.

There are mansions of joy in the Spirit's bright home,
Through whose portal no vision of sadness
may come;
Where the gaze is unshadowed by tears that have birth
In the grief-stricken heart 'mid the sorrows of earth.

There are mansions of wisdom within that fair land,
That decay not, like temples of time's fading
strand;
They tower 'mid the light of that beautiful
clime,
With glory undying and lessons sublime.

There are mansions of life in that realm of delight
Unsung by the angel of death in his flight;
Oh, seek for those mansions celestial above,
Whose years are eternal, whose banner is love.

"Duty of the Church."

BY LEVI ANDES.

We believe that the church has a duty to perform, and that duty is one of unspeakable importance. It involves the saving of immortal souls. To accomplish this it requires a will, and not a will only, but also means; and the church is able to furnish both these essentials. Our church claims to be the true one—the one that is built upon the gospel grounds, and which has Jesus Christ for its "chief corner stone." This being the case, we are sorely amazed, betimes, to see that the church is so slow and stupid to perform her duty in this respect.

Thousands of human creatures are groveling and yawning in darkness for the want of a better knowledge of the truth, as so many skeletons of human forms, for man without the life of Christ in him is as a skeleton without flesh and life—he is neither comely nor attractive, and yet the church is partly at rest in her soft bed of ease, notwithstanding thousands of skeletons stare her in the face, not regarding the Savior's command, "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations."

* * * teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Matth. 28: 19, 20. The Savior does not say, "Teach all nations when they come to you into your houses, or when they invite you to come into theirs," but he says, "Go ye into all the world." And what then? Why, "preach the gospel." To whom? "To every creature." What then? The Savior's promise is, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." This is enough to excite us to full obedience, if we are begotten of God. We claim that, if we are born of God, and see the solemn doom awaiting the ungodly, and also the good things which are prepared for those who obey the gospel, we cannot but try to persuade the wicked to forsake his evil ways and to turn in with the overtures of mercy and life.

Not a few of those who claim heirship with Christ say that those who will be saved can find the gospel way, if they are only upright; and that we need not run the world over to convert the people. To such we must say, It may be that a precious few may be able to find the way of salvation without a preacher, but will this meet the Lord's design and clear your skirts from the wrath of God and the everlasting punishment to the disobedient?

We will also ask why do you send your children to a school teacher to have them instructed in language, writing, arithmetic, geography, and the sciences, when you have supplied them with all the required books already? Might they not just as well learn all these branches of study at home, when they have all the books that are necessary there to? Would not the child, that is under the care of an instructor, be much more rapidly advanced in the knowledge of these branches, than the child with the same books without the instructor? Do you see your inconsistency? or do you think you understand the scriptures better than the apostle Paul? Hear him. He says, "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Rom. 10: 17. Again he says, (verses 14, 15), "How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?"

Herein lies the whole mystery: man must have a personal instructor and the instructor must have a knowledge of the things he is to teach; and he must be commissioned or employed for the work he is intended to do. Right here we come to the weak point. Most of us believe that there is a world full of people, either to be saved, or lost; but how to go about saving them is the question which many pretend to be unable to solve. To this we will say, let us have a will and then we may also get a way; and then with the will and the way, we may be able to save some at least. Let the church in general be united. Let us have a Home Mission, a General Mission, and a Foreign Mission. Let us employ good sound men in the faith, who are willing to work for the Master, and assign them to preach the gospel, not only in places where they are invited to come, but let them if need be, introduce themselves, and if they are not received, let them go into another city or place. Let us not send one alone, but "two and two." Let us also give them the means which they need temporarily, that they do not become chargeable to strangers. Let every brother and every sister lay by him in store for this work as the Lord has prospered them, and we assure you all, that we will have all the means that are necessary in a very short time. All that is wanting is a willingness, a fair understanding, and a system to carry out the project.

We often feel sad, and are perplexed to know why it is that we cannot support one missionary with a decent living, when other churches give their thousands to the wants of their church. Is it not a shame for us? Yes, we ask, is it not? It makes our soul yearn within us, and our hearts to quiver, when we meditate the present and the future. What an awful responsibility is resting upon the church; and what an awful judgment is awaiting us, if we do not try to meet the requirements made upon us by God!

O brethren and sisters, one and all, for the sake of poor, benighted mankind, for the sake of the holiness of the church, and for the sake of your own souls, do not be so close fisted; do not press your money so closely to your heart; for, in reality, it is not your own. It is the Lord's; and what a vain thought for you to try to withhold that from the Lord which is his, simply for the sake of gratifying your own carnal desires. Remember, "The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof." We cannot help but say again, For the Lord's sake, and for the sake of the holy-religion which we pretend to hold forth, do let us all try to live a little more consistent with the gospel. Do, please, throw away the quid and the cigar; drive in less stylish carriages; dress in less costly raiment; decorate your houses with less stylish furniture. Leave those fancy instruments of music to the world, and if you must have them, do with plainer ones; and leave those other useless things away that are not for the Christian, and we will assure you that you will soon have a few dollars to spare for the furtherance of the gospel, and have some left yet for the poor. Let those who can, give the dollars, and let those who can only give cents, do so; and those that cannot do that, let them give their prayers and pleadings to the Lord to bless our undertaking. Let us all unite in the good work; let us cheer up our many poor ministers, who must toil day and night, and also our missionaries. Let our theme be "onward and upward" till safe at home.

Is It So?

BY C. G. LINT.

It is so that the Baptists do really believe that all a person seeking salvation needs do is to have himself put under the water? Yes, this is so, if it be true what our sprinklers, pourites, and Holy Ghost baptizers say; and if they be holy men of God, truly converted to God, and cannot speak the untruth, it must of necessity be so. We are aware that holy men of God ever spake as the Holy Spirit gave them utterance, and so must they yet, when they speak of holy things. Who then can say aught against the de-laration as above made? I will tell you who; the humble, despised and ignorant Baptist will take it upon himself to say that this is a flagrant misrepresentation on the part of those parties. While we do not believe as above stated, we, however, do believe that unless a person does repent believe and be immersed, he cannot be saved, let this tickle you as much as it pleases Mark 16: 16

Allow me as a Baptist to give you something new to look at, and then tell me if your cheeks burned not for shame. If we had the faith in water baptism which you yourselves have, we would perhaps act just as you do. You have so much confidence in water baptism that you allow none of your children to breathe the pure air very long until they must be baptized, and that, too, in order to their salvation. You look upon us as committing a great wrong in permitting our children to grow up to man and womanhood without baptizing them in infancy, signifying that by our neglect we jeopardize their souls. Now, then, if we had as much confidence in water baptism as you have, we, too, would, without law or command from God, take our infants and dip them so as to secure their salvation. But I am ready to admit that it requires more confidence than a Baptist can carry with him to believe such a jumble. What God had written for our salvation, we try to do; and what he has not given to us, we take no hold on it; and as God has given us to practice believer's baptism, and believer's baptism alone, all your seemingly good arguments based upon reason independent of Bible law, terrify us not. You should remember that as we are for much water, so likewise are we for much Bible, and unless you come with Bible it is to us as idle tales.

Here is another truth that we Baptists hold,—and hold it by the authority of the Bible,—that there were none ever led into baptism only those that made confession of faith. An unbeliever was never immersed in the apostles' time; and, as Paul has it, if they had baptized one that had not faith, they would have committed sin,—that is, one or the other, I mean either the subject or the administrator; "for whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Romans 14: 23.

When the above arguments are not sufficient to keep us out of the water, they will begin with arguments (if we may call them such) like these; "Oh, these mud-pudlers, water-dippers, frogs," &c. That is very pretty language for a child to cast into its parent's face. The Lord Jesus Christ must have been all of the above, for he just did what we Baptists are doing. The faithful Philip and the Eunuch did the same with all the apostles. Come, children, don't talk quite so ugly about our great and good men. You are not slandering us of the present day; no, but you are slandering faithful Christians from the time that Christ went into the Jordan to be baptized unto the present.

When such stuff as the above will keep us out of the water, they will begin with the pretty stroking and say, "It is certainly much more handy and decent to do it in the house; for when we go to the water there is always more or less talking and laughing going on." As for the handiness of the thing had you not better not baptize at all? This certainly would save you the trouble of running after a pitcher of water, &c; and besides that, you have about as much Scripture for one as for the other; and as for the noise on the banks of the stream, that is always made by the frogs that never get into the water. Do not forget that we go into the water to baptize because the law and example of Christ bring us there. We do want you to remember that our faith is, that unless a man believes repents and is immersed, he has in the law of Christ no promise of salvation.

Divisions.

"Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." 1 Cor. 1: 10.

The apostle would here have us to understand that there should be no divisions among the followers of Jesus; and, that we should all speak the same thing. But sad to think, in this day and age of the world, the spirit that mostly reigns in the hearts of men, leads them to disputings and divisions. Surely, such a spirit does not come from Jesus but from the adversary of souls. Paul says: "Now if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his." The spirit of Christ will teach his followers that wisdom that is from above, which is "first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy." But the spirit of division will cause disputings, sharp contentions, and often strife, which end only in a separation. We have, during the last year, seen so much of this contention and strife among the professed followers of Jesus, that we were made to feel sad, and sometimes grieved to the very heart. O that we had more love throughout the church. My prayer is, that we might become more and more the salt of the earth, and let our light shine as doth a candle, or as a city set on a hill, that cannot be hid. If we were only willing to obey the commands of Jesus, and keep in the valley of humility, like Mary of old at the feet of Jesus, we would have no cause for divisions. But we have cause to lament over God's spiritual house, as did the prophet Isaiah over God's natural house—"Oh, that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments." If we would hearken more to the commands of the Scriptures, we think that there would be less contention, strife, and division manifested in some of the articles published in our periodicals. Brethren, let us avoid divisions, and be of one mind, live in peace, and the God of love and peace shall be with us.

The Trials and Triumphs of Faith.

I shall briefly notice some of the many examples of faith given in the 11 chapter of Hebrews.

"By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith." "Noah was a just man, and perfect (upright) in his generation; and Noah walked with God." Gen. 6 9. His trust was in God—a trust that was not disappointed; for the same waves of desolation that brought destruction to the wicked, only float him nearer to his gracious friend; and though his lot was cast upon evil times, he found a sweet calm, a holy pavilion, under the shadow of the eternal throne. What though the whole world was against him, when he had this testimony from the lips of Jehovah—"these have I seen righteous before me in this generation?"

"Moved with fear." It is taken for granted that a reverential fear of God is here meant. Some people think that if a man has any fear, or fears, it is a sure proof that he has no faith. But this is a mistake: as "fear God and keep his commandments, is the whole duty of man." Eccl. 12: 13. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." Ps. 111: 10. "The Lord taketh pleasure in those that fear him." Thus we are taught that there can be no virtue where this is wanting as the motive of action; hence faith hope, fear, joy, &c., are often synonymous terms, expressing the same thing, and are united in the saints.

The faith of Noah led him to an impartial obedience. He did according to all that the Lord commanded him. Gen. 6: 22. He did not pick and choose among the commands and precepts of the Lord, obey some and reject others, according as they suited his notions, his prejudices, or his interests. This is always a fruit of true faith. It asks, "Lord what wouldst thou have me to do?" and as soon as it knows the Master's will, it is prepared to do it. This is what the faith of Noah led to, and what true faith always leads to.

Faith is the means of our spiritual livelihood and subsistence. All the other graces, like birds in a nest, depend upon what faith brings in to them. It is said of Noah that by his faith and consistent action "he condemned the world." This he did, not only as "a preacher of righteousness," but as a holy, consistent servant of the true God. A great trial to his faith must have been the length of time that elapsed from his receiving the warning till the penalty was inflicted. In great forbearance God waited for 120 years; waited so long that men turned his very patience into an occasion of scorn. The faith of the believer thus confides in God, however dark the surroundings. He says, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him."

Faith in the soul is compared to a ship's compass. The ship might be tossed ever so much, the compass still keeps its place, and with trembling eagerness the needle always points to the pole. So is faith in a believing soul. Cares like a wild deluge might come, and his frail vessel be driven by fierce winds: but faith steadily turns to God, who can rebuke the tempest and make a great calm. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed upon thee." Isa. 26: 3. Oh, how miserable are they who have no trust in God, no principle of holy confidence to comfort them amid the trials of life! Meantime, how safe and secure was Noah under the protection of the Almighty.

"And the Lord shut him in." After the Lord shut the door of the ark, his foes were all left behind him and all was peace within. A divine hand was now upon the helm; an allwise Pilot had now charge of the vessel freighted with the "world's hope." So we have a good Pilot who will guide us in the right way to the harbor of rest. It may seem to us, at times, as if we were being driven upon the rocks of destruction; but that is because of our ignorance and unbelief. When the lights of our households go out one after another, and sadness and desolation gather around our hearthstones; when health fails, and business and friends fail, and all around us seems hopeless; it may, for the moment, seem as if the pilot had deserted us; but it is not so.

Above the hoarse roar of the storm comes the cheery voice, "It is I be not afraid." O believe! faint not, fear not; for the harbor may be just in sight, and will soon cast your anchor within the veil amid peace and eternal rest. So through, "the trials and triumphs of faith," we may eventually be enabled to come off "more than conquerors through him that loved us."

Reading the Bible.

M. De Renty, a French nobleman, used to read daily three chapters of the Bible, with his head uncovered and on his bended knees. Lady Frances Hobart read the Psalms over twelve times a year, the New Testament thrice, and other parts of the Old Testament once. Susanna, countess of Suffolk, for the last seven years of her life, read the whole Bible over twice annually. Jeremiah Whittaker usually read all the epistles in the Greek Testament twice every fortnight. Joshua Barnes is said to have read a small pocket Bible, which he carried about him, a hundred and twenty times over. Mr. Robert Cotton read the whole Bible through twelve times a year. Rev. Mr. Romaine studied nothing but the Bible the last thirty or forty years of his life. A prisoner, being confined in a dark dungeon, had no light except for a few moments when his food was brought to him. He used to take his Bible and read a chapter, saying, he could find his mouth in the dark, when he could not read. Henry Willis, farmer, aged eighty-one, devoted every half-hour that could be spared from his labor during the course of so long a life, to the devout and serious perusal of the holy Scriptures. He has read, with the most minute attention, all the books of the Old and New Testaments eight times over, and had proceeded as far as the book of Job in his ninth reading, when his meditations were terminated by death.

—Selected.

It is a solemn thing to pray, to draw nigh to him who "searcheth the heart," to enter the presence chamber of the Almighty, to stand on the gleaming pavement of heaven, the abode of purity and holiness and love, to have audience with that God before whom angels veil their faces, and at whose footstool they prostrate themselves in holy adoration. O my soul! seek to realize when thou prayest that thou art on holy ground.

The bounds of a man's knowledge are easily concealed if he has but prudence.—Goldsmith.

THE TWO ANGELS.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

God called the nearest angels who dwelt with him above;
 The tenderest one was Pity, the dearest one was Love.
 "Arise," he said, "my angels! a wail of woe and sin Steals through the gates of heaven, and saddens all within.
 "My harps take up the mournful strain that from a lost world swells,
 The smoke of torment clouds the light, and blights the asphodels.
 "Fly downward to that under world, and on its souls of pain Let Love drop smiles of sunshine, and Pity tears like rain!"
 Two faces bowed before the throne, veiled in their golden hair;
 Four white wings lessened swiftly down the dark abyss of air.
 The way was strange, the flight was long; at last the angels came
 Where swung a lost and nether world, red-raptured a rayless flame.
 There Pity, s'uddering, wept; but Love, with faith too strong for fear, Took heart from God's almightiness and smiled a smile of cheer.
 And lo! that tear of Pity quenched the flame whereon it fell,
 And, with the sunshine of that smile, hope entered into hell!
 Two unveiled faces full of joy looked upward to the throne,
 Four white wings' folded at the feet of him who sat thereon!
 And deeper than the sound of seas, more soft than falling flake,
 Amidst the hush of wing and song the Voice Eternal spake:
 "Welcome, my angels! ye have brought a hollier joy to heaven;
 Henceforth its sweetest song shall be the song of sins forgiven!"

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

On the Tapis.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

We now proceed to the consideration of the third query by my anti-baptism, anti-baptism friend. "How long did the disciple remain disciples?" AS LONG AS THEY LIVED NAY, LONGER; FOR THEY ARE DISCIPLES STILL. The word disciple means a learner. So long as God has any thing for us to learn, we are disciples. So long as we are going to school to Jesus, we are disciples. So long as we do not know everything, we are disciples. In this world we can learn very little, for the time is short and we are dull. Sin has darkened our understanding, weakened our memory, and impaired our judgment. But with all these disadvantages, we are still disciples. If we cannot learn fast and know much, we may yet advance a little. If we cannot dive into the mysteries of God like Peter and John and Paul, we are glad to matter and stammer about "first principles." The abecedarian is a disciple no less than the third-heaven-rapt Apostle. 2 Cor 12: 2, 4. He that fills his pitcher out of the rill, drinks Divine Wisdom no less than he who takes his draught out of the Ocean. Christ's heart beats in his hem, and they who learn to pronounce the outer will experience the power of the inner. Matth. 9: 20, and 14: 36.

The fatal difficulty often is that we think we know better than the Teacher. When Jesus pronounces his words of wisdom to us, we spell something else. When He enjoins baptism, some mumble sprinkling or pouring. When He says feet-washing, many follow Peter's naughty example and say, "Thou shalt never wash my feet." When the Master corrects with the emphatic assertion, "if I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me," they continue to wrangle with the Lord of Glory, and go unwashed. When He pronounces beard, some spell shave. When He gives the Holy Kiss to the class, some titter, others mock, and the majority turn away their faces in contempt, as though the Teacher were nothing but a Nazarene Carpenter, and a loggerhead at that. And so the dear, blessed, all-wise Son of God is snubbed. But on the great Day of Commencement, when these dandy disciples are to pass examination before an assembled universe, they will be dealt with Lex Talionis. He had His own schooling term, and learned His lesson well. "Though he were a Son, yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered." Heb 5: 8. He was Himself a disciple for a while, that He might in all points be tempted like as we are, yet without sin, and be touched with a feeling of our infirmities." Heb. 4: 15. If we do not pattern after Him and learn obedience, are we disciples notwithstanding? No, verily, but rebellious, incorrigible scilpleasers, "to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever." Jude 13. If we reject baptism, feet-washing, the holy kiss, the Lord's supper, and do not "keep ourselves unspotted from the world," nor exemplify Matth. 5: 44, we are not the children of light, no disciples of Jesus, but "a seed of evil doers," "a generation of vipers." The integrity and glory of God are involved in His iota, no less than in His Alpha and Omega.

The eternity of discipleship is a matter of course. Earth is only the preparatory department of the saint's theological seminary. There is more to learn in Heaven than here. The elect angels have seen the wonders and glories of Jehovah for thousands of years, and when we get into their company what marvelousthings will they tell us! They can recount the daring campaign of the Red Dragon and his compeers, and rehearse the dreadful Waterloo that banished the disaffected hierarchs to the fiery Helena of perdition. They can unroll to us the records of the august eras of creation, and acquaint us with the times when God "made the worlds." A blessed and instructive fellowship it will be. And Jesus Himself will be our Propbet, Priest, and King, and lead us by the still waters, and make us repose in green pastures. Ps. 23: 2. Every meal from those meadows, and every drink from those fountains, will make us wiser. There we will "eat the flesh and drink the blood of the Son of man" forever; and to subsist on Jesus is to eat and drink "the wisdom of God." Christ gave Peter a hint of perpetual discipleship in John 13: 7. The beloved disciple revealed it with the clearness of a sunbeam in 1 John 3: 2. The Beatific Vision is an ever-unfolding apocalypse of the hidden wonders of the Godhead. Jesus is the face or expression of the Everlasting Father, the Lord of Angels, the Elder Brother of the saints, the Treasurer of the Eternal Kingdom, and it is the bliss and honor of our immortality that we are to be His disciples forever. The Godman carries at His Golden Girdle the keys of the Divine Arcana, and will unlock the mysteries of the Holy Three so long as sanctified mind can expand, and the Uncreated is exhaustless.

Your closing question is, "Was there a kingdom of God on earth, in the Christian sense, before the Day of Pentecost?" There never was a kingdom of God in any other sense. In sense, everything that God ever done on earth was Christian. By Him God "made the worlds." Heb 1: 2. Without Him was NOT ANYTHING made that was made" John 1: 3. God spake to Adam, and to Noah, and to Abraham, and all the Prophets: and Christ is the Word. Jesus walked in the Garden of Eden no less than in the Garden of Gethsemane. Abraham saw His day and was glad. John 8: 56. Isaiah "beheld His glory" and was thrilled with ecstasy. John 12: 41. He was the Word unto Moses in the church in the wilderness. Acts 7: 38. We must again recur to the fact that Christ is the Alpha and Omega. No two letters are alike, but all are bracketed between these two. Dispensations vary, but Christ is the First and Last and Life of them all. Yet the present is in a peculiar sense the Christian dispensation. Your question does not rest on honorable reasons. It is intended to invalidate the symbolic character of Christ's life, by giving Him a pre-gospel ministry. Suppose we restrict the establishment to the Pentecost, what then? Will that exclude baptism, feetwashing, and the Lord's Supper, and Holy Kiss from the Gospel Economy? Then is Christ Himself excluded. To date the beginning of the present dispensation at Pentecost, is to turn Christ out of His own kingdom. John's mission was not to preach a prospective Redeemer; but "Behold the Lamb of God." "There standeth one among you, whom ye know not." John 1: 26. This is the faith of Mark 1: 1. The rapture of His message was that even now, in a carpenter shop in Nazareth, shoving the plane and saw, and swinging the axe and mallet, "dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." There was the kingdom in all its fullness and power. "The government is on His shoulders, the kingdom His property, and its establishment His work Is 9: 6, 7. He is King of saints. Rev. 15: 3. King of Glory. Ps 24: 7—10. King of Judgment. Matth. 25: 34—46. King of kings. 17: 14. The Pentecost was the inauguration of a new Agent to dispense the grace procured by the life and death and resurrection of the King. Potentially the kingdom was established before the advent of the Spirit. Operatively it is in process of establishment ever since. The prayer is still pertinent "Thy kingdom come," for Christ will "come the second time without sin unto salvation." A babe a day old is as perfect a human being as when it has reached the full maturity of all its powers. Once generated, and all the coming years will bring only development of its organic properties. So with the kingdom of God. When Christ was born, it was born, and yet is ever coming, and to come. The Holy Ghost had no new revelation to make, but to give newness and efficiency to that already made. Christ said of the Spirit, "He shall testify of Me." "He shall take of Mine, and show it unto you." As regards the objective scheme of redemption, the work of the Spirit is complementary. Subjectively it is both fundamental and complementary. But all His authority is from Christ, and the Pentecost is only a fuller application and wider distribution of the Christly power. John 16: 13. By His ministry Christ provided a complete outfit for His successor, so that the Holy Ghost has nothing to do but superintend the kingdom already established. Christ planted the mustard-seed, and the Spirit wafted it to the ends of the earth. The handful of leaven in three measures of meal is Christ, and it is the work of the Spirit to diffuse it till all the meal in this great world barrel is leavened. We live in a Pentecostal age, which means an all diffusive Christ. If the Second Person organized no kingdom, the Third has no mission on earth. His office and armament are wholly dependent on the "All-power" of death's Abolisher and Hell's Conqueror. To refer the establishment to the Spirit, strips Christ of the character and position of regnancy, degrades the atonement, and gives His whole ministry an aspect of obsolescence.

Christ expressly announced Himself as a King, and His mission as that of exercising royal prerogatives. John 12: 15. Heb. 1: 8. "He spake as one having authority." "My kingdom is not of this world." Not of the world, but in it, and by Me. Pilate asked, "art thou a king then?" To which He replied with an equivalent to I am. John 18: 37. A King AND NO KINGDOM! Has any one brass enough in his composition to contend for such an anomaly? He further adds this emphatic testimony: "to this end was I born, and for this purpose came I into the world, that I should witness unto the truth. The Holy Ghost is the "Spirit of truth," and "testifies of Him." He is King of Truth, and His kingdom the sway of Truth. If He did not establish the truth, His incarnation was a failure, the Holy Ghost has no instrument to work with, and sanctification is impossible. John 17: 17. What wretched work people make when "they wrench the Scriptures" for sectarian ends. The Devil is a liar, and Christ came "to destroy the works of the Devil." Falsehood is the citadel and bulwark and equipment of the kingdom of darkness. Christ says, "I am the Truth." This is all the kingdom He has. The Spirit had no super-veritable ministry. Christ came to say GOD; and the Holy Ghost followed to say AMEN. Christ is King of Zion whether astride of an ass, or seated "on the right hand of the Majesty on high." Matth. 21: 5. Heb. 1: 3. He was here and became "the corner-stone, the sure foundation." Is. 28: 16. At His second coming He will be the "top-stone." Zech. 4: 7. All the material of this temple are from the quarry of Eternal Truth. Such a Fane means Kingship, and Government, and fealty. It is the centre and embodiment of Law. All the powers and edicts and honors and beatitudes of God are in it. It includes baptism, the Lord's supper, the holy kiss, feetwashing, the beard, self-denial, holiness, peace, righteousness, and joy in the Holy Ghost. As is the King and the Kingdom, so is the supervisory Paraclete. John 14: 6. Rom 14: 17. John 16: 13. Christ came to establish peace. Luke 2: 14. John 14: 27. To establish righteousness. Matth. 3: 15 and 5: 6. He is the Fountain of Divine Joy. Luke 1: 44. Matth. 5: 11, 12. John 15: 11. These three elements constitute the kingdom of God. Rom. 14: 17. If these are not blank falsehoods, then the case is clearly made out; that the personal ministry of Jesus Christ was the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth; and to gain say so plain a truth is to "fight against God." His sovereignty is Divine and Universal. Col. 1: 16. His name is above every name. Phil. 2: 9. His official dignity and execution above every other. Eph 1: 20—23. The Creator of all that is made. The Reservoir and Dispenser of the Spirit; the "brightness of the Divine glory, and the express image of His Person;" the "Judge of the quick and dead." "IN ALL THINGS HE HATH THE PRE-EMINENCE" Col. 1: 18.

True Love.

BY B. B. BOLLINGER.

"Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world."—1 John 2: 15.

The true lover has but one spouse. He is no polygamist. He longs only for the presence of "the chiefest among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely." His heart burns while he speaks to us by the way. He abhors the strange women, and flies from her as he would from the most venomous reptile, and clings to him that "sticketh closer than a brother." There are many allurements in the world that call for our love, but we must not even look back lest we become pillars of salt. The mighty dollar is a dangerous foe, if not closely watched; for "the love of money is the root of all evil." I believe that if there was no dollar in the world there would not be half so many preachers, for some are greedy of filthy lucre, while others serve their master mammon. Fashion is the great tyrant which drags his victim from one folly to another until he has robbed him of all that is noble in the world. How many of us are not in some measure in love with this cruel tiger? Let us look about us whether we have not some things about us, because it is the fashion, that are utterly useless—other ornaments than “the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price.” I venture to assert here, without fear of successful contradiction, that if our beloved brethren and sisters in the Lord would at once suspend all ornamental work, and lend the time and money to the Lord, more could be done for the conversion of sinners and the upbuilding of the church in one year than has been done in the last ten. We would not need half as many council meetings, and our brotherhood would put on its strength and declare to the world their faith by their works with such power and effect that many would tremble, and like Felix of old say, “Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian.” But through “the lust of the eye” many hardworking brethren and sisters spend their surplus earnings for that which is not bread, bringing reproach upon Christ and grief and sorrow into the hearts of many faithful ones, and poverty into their own homes.

How a Pedobaptist Minister Baptized by Trine Immersion.

BY JOSEPHUS CEREVISIA.

If the following actually occurred within the limits of Christendom, if it should ever come under the notice of the active parties, they will recognize it as being true; if it did not occur, no person will imagine himself as being misrepresented or abused. It will assist the careful reader in understanding how the weak may confound the mighty, and how things that are hid from the wise and prudent may be revealed unto babes. P. M. represents a Pedo-Baptist minister who was of the belief that John the Baptist and the first disciples of Christ baptized by immersion, but who entertained the opinion that sprinkling or pouring would now answer as well as immersion. B. represents a brother who has but a limited education, and who knows but little of the history of primitive Christianity, except what he finds in the Bible.

P. M. “Good evening, brother B. I am always happy to see you; but I am especially glad that I have met you this evening, as I am a little perplexed and I hope you will be able to give me some relief.”

B. “Well, my friend, if I can do anything for you, I will gladly do it. But what is it that gives you trouble?”

P. M. “Why, sir, as you are aware, six months ago I held a protracted meeting in this village, and during that effort several persons professed religion, as you, no doubt, know.”

B. “Yes, I understood so; but why should that trouble you?”

P. M. “It does not; but to-morrow is the day appointed for the converts to be baptized and received into full fellowship; and”—— here the speaker paused, as though for once in his life his immense vocabulary of words was unable to serve him.

B. “Well, my friend, why do you stop? I am sure I cannot see why that should perplex you, unless something has come into your way so that you cannot attend to it.”

P. M. “Not exactly so; but this morning, when on my way to this place, I met one of the probationers, a very intelligent young sister, and we had a lengthy conversation concerning the ceremonies of to-morrow. The conversation was of such a nature as to give me some annoyance; but after we separated, and I had time to think a little, my mind became settled, and I thought I saw my way clear. However, soon after stopping in the family of Brother S., I picked up from the parlor table a pamphlet entitled ‘Trine Immersion Traced to the Apostles,’ a work by one of your brethren, and while reading it I became greatly perplexed, and the more I think of it the greater is my embarrassment; and when I saw you the thought occurred that you might give me some information that might relieve me.”

B. “I am always willing to help whenever I can; but I am afraid you found the wrong man. If my brother’s pamphlet gave you trouble, my stammering talk will hardly help you much. But I do not yet understand what it is that troubles you.”

P. M. “Well, I will explain more fully. This morning, the young sister to whom I referred requested me to baptize her exactly as the Lord commanded his disciples to baptize. She said that there were several different modes by which professing Christians pretended to baptize; that she believed trine-immersion to be the true Christian Baptism; but she confessed her liability to err, and finally concluded by saying that she wished to obey her Lord and Master, and she would throw the whole responsibility on me for a faithful observance of the Savior’s command. I always believed that John the Baptist and the immediate disciples of Christ had baptized by immersion; but as I did not consider baptism as being essential to salvation, I felt satisfied with the general view of my brethren, that either sprinkling or pouring, as well as immersion, was valid baptism. I must confess that the conversation this morning and the reading of that pamphlet have so confused my mind that at present I know not what I shall do.”

B. “Oh, yes, now I see; but how do you think I can help you? If the young lady had come to me for baptism, I could have assumed the responsibility and baptized her as Jesus commanded; but as she has applied to you, I cannot take the responsibility which lies on you.”

P. M. “I see very clearly, and most sensibly feel it, that a weighty responsibility rests upon me; but if you cannot relieve me of that, cannot you give me some advice or information that would assist me in making up my mind?”

B. “Well, I hardly know; but if I understand you, your only trouble is in the action in baptism. You do not know whether to dip only once or three times. If I am right in this, I am willing to make an offer that might help you.”

P. M. “That is the point precisely, and I hope you will proceed with the proposition to which you alluded.”

B. “I will make my offer, but before I do so, we must be sure that we understand each other. If the persons to be baptized are not proper subjects for baptism, they and their teachers must be responsible for that; if the church into which they are to be baptized is not the true church, it must be responsible for that; and if you are not a proper administrator you must be responsible for that. Do we agree on these points?”

P. M. “Yes, my brother, I see no room for disagreement on the points mentioned; but my trouble is not concerning the subjects, nor the church, nor myself as a proper administrator. The perplexing question with me is, How should I perform this ordinance? If you have any proposition in reference to this point I should be pleased to hear it.”

B. “I am glad that we agree so well, and now I am ready to make my proposal, which is this: If you strictly follow my instructions, I will be responsible for any error in the baptism so far as the action is concerned.”

P. M. “I must confess, my brother, that your proposition is honorable and fair; for I see very clearly that you should not be held accountable for any action that is not strictly according to your directions. So far I feel somewhat relieved; but I am now anxious to know what your instructions are.”

B. “Well, my friend, if you accept of my offer, I propose to give only one thing at a time, and when that is done, I will proceed with another; but if you fail to follow instructions, then the directions cease, and you become responsible for your decision and action."

P. M. "My dear brother, I hardly know why you should be so reticent; and yet I confess that so far I can see no unfairness. But it is now getting late, and I must prepare to meet my appointment this evening. As you propose to give one direction at a time, perhaps you would give the first now, that I may have a little time for reflection."

B. "My dear friend, as the time for baptizing has not arrived, I cannot proceed with any directions in relation to any action in baptism; but as a first direction I will say, at any hour you may now fix on, bring your congregation and the applicants for baptism to the river below the village, and I will meet you there prepared to give farther directions. If you agree, fix the hour when we shall meet."

P. M. "I must confess that I am not able to give you a positive answer now, but if I decide to accept your proposition, we will meet you at the place named to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock. Thanking you for your kindness I must now bid you good night."

B. "Good night, sir."

SCENE AT THE WATER.

P. M. "Good morning, my brother, I am happy to meet you this morning. After services, last night, I considered your proposition; and after giving it much prayerful thought, I decided to accept, and hence I and my congregation are here. I am now ready to hear and follow your directions, leaving the responsibility on you, as you proposed."

B. "I am glad that we have met this morning. Of course you remember that I only engaged to assume the responsibility so far as the action is concerned. You will therefore proceed with your preliminary services, and when you are ready, I will proceed with my directions."

The preliminary services were then attended to with becoming solemnity.

P. M. "We are now ready. I shall first baptize the young sister to whom I referred, and as the rest have submitted their cases in the same way, I shall baptize all according to your instructions, unless I should discover some departure from the teachings of Christ or his apostles."

B. "Allow me yet to say that I understand the word baptize to mean 'to immerse,' and I expect your action to conform to this definition.

If you should attempt to sprinkle or pour water on these subjects my instructions cease and you must be responsible."

P. M. "I had so understood it, but I am still glad that you are so careful to avoid a misunderstanding. As we are ready, will you now proceed?"

B. "I will. When Philip baptized the Eunuch, 'they went down into the water, both Philip and the Eunuch;' therefore take the candidate and both go down into the water."

It was done as directed.

B. "Now you will have the candidate kneel in the water; and when you baptize let the motion be forward."

The candidate kneeled in the water.

B. "Now you repeat the words I use, and let your action be suited to the sense of the word"

P. M. "I am ready."

B. "Upon the profession of thy faith, and the covenant which thou hast made with God in the presence of these witnesses, 'for the remission of sins' I baptize thee 'in the name of the Father.'"

P. M. "Upon the profession of thy faith, and the covenant which thou hast made with God in the presence of these witnesses, 'for the remission of sins' I baptize thee in the name of the Father."

As the minister repeated the words, "I baptize thee in the name of the Father," the expression of his countenance and tone of his voice indicated that the truth was impressed upon his heart that this language required an action; and suiting the action, to the word, he gently immersed the candidate.

B. "And of the Son."

In the minister's countenance you could read the following as coming forth from the throne of sanctified reason: "And of the Son." This means something; and it can only mean to baptize also 'in the name of the Son.'" As soon as the candidate was ready, he proceeded by repeating, reverently, "And of the Son," and performed the required action.

B. "And of the Holy Ghost."

The same reasoning followed.

P. M. "And of the Holy Ghost."

The action was again suited to the word, and when it was performed the minister thanked God, laid his hands on the young sister's head, and devoutly asked God's blessing upon her."

B. "Now, you have baptized as directed; therefore, still following the example of our Savior and Philip and the Eunuch, 'come up out of the water.'"

This direction, of course, was observed; and as the minister saw nothing that conflicted with the teachings of the gospel, he proceeded with the others in the same way, "baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Matth. 28: 19.

When all were baptized, the congregation of spectators, who seemed to be deeply impressed with the services, were orderly dismissed. As they turned and went quietly away from the impressive scene, it is to be wondered at that the language of many a heart was, "How strange! Why, the minister followed the directions of that unlearned man, and his directions were given in the exact words of our Lord, and the result was a threefold action in baptism! Since this humble brother used only the words of Jesus in giving his instructions and a faithful observance of them resulted in trine immersion, must not this be what the Savior meant when he used these words?"

The minister and his instructor walked away together, conversing freely with one another. The writer understands that the minister made a little inquiry relative to the kneeling posture and forward action; but as he himself did not know why a different posture or a backward or sideward motion would be better, he needed but little explanation to satisfy him that all was right.

God's Omniscience.

God never forgets anything. All his works, from the creation of the world to the tinging of a leaf, are finished—perfect. Did you ever stand under a full boughed, heavy foliaged tree in summer time, and pluck one of its myriad leaves and examine its delicate tracery, its coloring, the very perfection of its finished beauty, and then think of the countless number of such leaves, of the great forests whose luxurious growth covers so much of the world, and reflect that among all there is not a leaf unfinished—each perfect in its form and color.

And did you ever pick a flower—either from cultured garden or by wayside walk—enjoy its odors and bless its beauty, and stop to think how all the wide earth blossoms with such fragrant beauty, and no flower of them forgotten—the same careful hand filling each glowing heart with perfume and coloring each leaf with care? When we think of this omniscience, of this never failing care, we feel something of the attributes of that power—unseen, yet ever present; untouched, yet ever felt—who gives to the violet its color, to the rose its fragrance, who tints with beauty the tiniest leaf, and yet whose hand controls the planets in their courses, whose fiat rules the countless worlds.—Scl.

Natural History—Ornithology No. 2.

BY HOWARD MILLER.

HARPORHYNCHUS RUFUS.—This is the name of a bird very common all over the country, though people generally do not give it the long, hard, scientific name which heads this article. It is about as large as the robin, and there all resemblance ceases. It is brown and white in color, and has a yellow eye with a black center. The bill is somewhat curved downward. It builds a not very good nest out of twigs with a very little lining of hair or feathers, and it never builds its nest high up in trees, like the blue jay or robin sometimes does. So you must look for the nest of the H. rufus in a thicket, or better yet, in a brush-heap. All the nests of this bird that I noticed this summer were built in brush and had four good sized eggs in each, which were white and yellow blotched and spotted all over.

The old bird would slip off the nest on my approach and glide through the grass like a snake, making no noise whatever as most birds do, and not appearing lame to lure one away. Going up to the brush and looking down at the nest, the old birds both put in an appearance and lose all fear of danger; and while measuring the dimensions of the eggs, and noting down the peculiarities of the surroundings, I have known them to give me a sharp rap in the face with the beak, and I have often had to get away to save my eyes.

It lives almost entirely on insects, and is therefore insectivorous and ought to be protected. I hope no boy or girl ever destroys a bird's nest if the bird is insectivorous, and in Pennsylvania there is a fine of ten dollars for each and every nest of the kind that ignorant or vicious people destroy; and the law ought to be enforced, and the fine collected, or the party put in jail for every such malicious act.

Well the H. rufus can sing like a bird, or, rather, like birds, I should say, for it is a mimic, and wild or confined it can imitate many birds.

During the nest building season the male bird will get on a tree near the nest and pour forth a profusion of the richest notes. Now he calls the dog, cries like a cat, or squalls like the jay, and then breaks out in a song of his own. It is the male bird that sings, and you can remember it by the fact that among the fowls it is the rooster does the crowing; though sometimes the hen tries it, with poor success. I have seen the same thing going on in a woman's rights convention; but that is not ornithology, or the science of birds. When H. rufus has raised two broods of young, the whole family go South, when cold weather comes on, and consequently they are migratory in habit.

The bird under consideration is often confined for its sweet song, and commands high prices; though I do not think it right that birds or animals that God made free should be enslaved. The Harporynchus rufus, is, then in color, brown and white—brower than white; lays four eggs in a twig nest in a brush-heap; is insectivorous and migratory—What is its common name?

The Difference of Sunshine.

A little girl named Mary was standing, looking out of a window which overlooked a pleasant enough country, but just then the sky was gray and dull, and the poor girl's heart was heavy. It was not that she had any great trouble just then, but she was feeling vexed, disappointed, and worried. She was weary of play, weary of her lessons, weary of her companions; in fact she was discontented.

Her grandmother was sitting by the fire reading, and Mary turned round to her and said:

"What a dull place this is, grand-mamma. Only look how gray and uninteresting every thing looks outside."

The old lady got up from her seat and looked, and said quietly:

"Very gray."

But while they stood looking, the sun burst out, and lighted up the grass and water, and tipped the distant hills, and cast clear shadows on the lawns, and scattered the clouds. Even little Mary's heart seemed to be warmed, and she turned around to her grandmother and said:

"See what a difference the sunshine makes!"

"Yes, Mary; you would scarcely think it the same world. You can see now a thousand beauties that were hidden from your eyes, and what was dull and gray is now bright and joyous"

Is it not the same when the Sun of Righteousness shines in the heart? All is changed. Flowers spring up on all sides, and the cold heart grows warm and happy.

To have ideas is to gather flowers. To think is to weave them into garlands.

It is not labor that hurts anybody, but rather fretting over the prospect of labor to be gone through with.—Ec.

The Sunday Stone.

In one of our English coal mines there is a constant formation of limestone, caused by the trickling of water through the rocks. This water contains a great many particles of lime, which are deposited in the mine, and as the water passes off, these become hard, and form limestone.

This stone would always be white, like marble, were it not that men are working in the mine, and that as the black dust rises from the coal it mixes with the soft lime, and in that way a black stone is formed.

Now, in the night, when there is no coal-dust rising, the stone is white; then again, the next day, when the miners are at work, another black layer is formed, and so on alternately, black and white, through the week until Sunday comes. Then, if the miners keep holy the Sabbath, a much larger layer of white stone than before. There will be the white stone of Saturday night and the whole of Sunday, so that every seventh day the white layers will be about three times as thick as any of the others. But if they work on the Sabbath, they see it marked against them in the stone. Hence the miners call it "the Sunday stone."

Perhaps many who now break the Sabbath would try to spend it better if there were a "Sunday stone," where they could see their unkept Sabbaths with their black marks.

But God needs no such record on earth to know how all our Sabbaths are spent. His record is kept above. All our Sabbath deeds are written there, and we shall see them at the last.

Be very careful to keep your Sabbath pure and white, and not allow the dust of worldliness and sin to tarnish the purity of the blessed day.

"Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."—Christian Treasury.

RICH WITHOUT MONEY.—Many a man is rich without money. Thousands of men with nothing in their pockets are rich. A man born with a good sound constitution, a good stomach, a good heart, good limbs, and a pretty good head—piece is rich. Good bones are better than gold; tough muscles better than silver; and the nerves that flash fire and carry energy to every function are better than houses or land. It is better than a landed estate to have the right kind of father and mother. Good breeds and bad breeds exist among men as really as among herds and horses. Education may do much to check bad tendencies or to develop good ones; but it is a greater thing to inherit the rich proportion of faculties to start with. The man is rich who has a good disposition—who is naturally kind, patient, cheerful and hopeful.

As the fragrant incense cloud went up from the kindled coal in the censer, so true believing prayer, coming from a kindled heart, rises of necessity to God, and the only altar which sanctifies and renders it acceptable is our Lord Jesus Christ himself.—Goulburn.

Father Wakefield's Experience.

[The following, claiming to be "Father Wakefield's Experience," was sent us for publication by Augustus Krabill, of Hancock county, Ohio. Perhaps some disappointed and discouraged seeker after peace may derive some assistance from its careful perusal.—B.]

Father Wakefield had been attending a meeting for several days. A meeting had been appointed for singing, prayer, and more especially for each one to tell what the Lord had done for him. After many had spoken, the class-leader called on Father Wakefield to tell what the Lord had done for him. He addressed the meeting as follows :

"Friends, in my younger days it was my misfortune to live in a section of country where there was but little said or known about religion. It turned out, however, after a number of years, that a preacher of much devotion and talent came to our section and preached a series of discourses with great effect. He portrayed with great clearness the sinfulness of man, his fallen, helpless and undone condition without divine aid. He also set forth our Savior as all-sufficient. He impressed us with his kind and gracious invitations; the assurance that he is not willing that any should perish, but all should come to repentance; that he who comes to him he will in no wise cast out, and they who 'seek shall find.' This all sounded rational to me, and I resolved at once to go. I rose at once from my seat and went forward and fell trembling upon my knees at the mourners' bench and cried from the bottom of my heart, 'Lord, be merciful to me, a sinner.' Others—some of them preachers—knelt around me and prayed fervently for me. Thus we continued until we were all exhausted. I was occasionally exhorted to give up my whole heart; exercise living faith, and make an application of the blood of Christ. I reasoned with myself thus : Do I not believe? I believe the Bible. I believe in the Savior. Have I not given up my whole heart? I hate sin; I loathe it from the bottom of my heart and have turned away from it with full purpose of heart. I love the Lord; the people of God. I love the Bible, and the worship of God. I have submitted myself to the Lord, as far as is in my power. What more can I do? Still the Lord did not bless me.—The question, 'Oh, what shall I do to be saved?' almost crushed my soul. The preacher told me to come again the next night—perhaps the Lord would speak peace to my soul. I went away crying for mercy, but finding none. The next night I came again, but all in vain. I thus continued to come night after night for a long time, but no peace was spoken to my soul. I was advised to join the church as a seeker, and assured that the chance was better for finding the Lord in the church than out of it. I consented and joined the church as a seeker. I would frequently inquire of my preacher what I was to do, and why I could not find peace? They would tell me I should not be discouraged, that they had known many persons to be seekers longer than I had been. I saw others in a similar condition with myself, and was led to inquire : 'Is the way of salvation so darkened? Is it so difficult to find that an honest man may mourn and seek for years and not find it?' At length I heard a man preach who made the assertion that this thing of honest, penitent mourners continuing to seek for years was unknown to the New Testament. He said the thing was a modern affair entirely—that the Scriptures did not authorize it, and that persons could be converted on the first hearing of the gospel as well as any time in their lives. I did not believe him. I thought I could find an account of mourners seeking religion, and continuing to do so for years, almost any place where I might please to open the Bible. I determined I would prepare myself to meet such men, and would have the Scripture at hand to refute them. For this purpose, with pencil in hand, I resolutely commenced to read the New Testament through, and mark every passage I found that said anything about mourners or seekers, especially when they had been seeking for a long time. I commenced with the first of Matthew, and in a short time found an account of John the Baptist preaching to great crowds. I read eagerly, with pencil in hand, and thinking : Now I shall find his mourners and all about how long they mourned and grieved before they 'got a hope.' But to my utter astonishment I found no mourners. I read on and soon found our Savior preaching the great sermon on the Mount, and found where he said to his disciples, 'Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted.' I thought that when I came to the close of the sermon I would find scores of mourners, and had my pencil ready to mark the place. But to my astonishment I found none. I determined to read on, and commencing with the Acts of the Apostles I soon came to where I found an account of Peter preaching to an immense assembly. I prepared my pencil again, and said to myself, 'Now I shall find all about mourners.' But to my surprise I found not a word about mourners, and not a seeker, so far as I could learn, went away seeking or mourning. Every seeker was converted, and every one in distress was comforted. I read on, and soon found Peter in Solomon's porch, preaching to a great multitude, and not a mourner to be found. I followed Philip down to Samaria, and found him preaching to great numbers of both men and women, and found nothing about mourners, or a single instance of a seeker continuing to seek without finding. I read on and soon found Philip preaching to the Ethiopian, but in place of continuing a mourner he was converted and went on his way rejoicing the same day. I read on, and found where the Lord appeared to Saul, a great sinner, and said to myself, 'I will now find where this man was kept mourning a long time,' but to my surprise, the preacher (Ananias) did not tell him to 'exercise living faith,' etc., but he was converted on his first interview with the preacher, and forthwith preached Christ. I thus continued on through the New Testament, and found not an account of a mourner, and much less one continuing to mourn and not find peace. I concluded that the order of things must have changed somewhat, and found myself in much trouble and perplexity.

I next thought I would read the commission that Christ gave the apostles, and I would certainly find where he commanded the apostles to call the people forward to pray, and to be prayed for, that they might be converted. Here again I was disappointed, for instead of this he said, 'Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature; he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned.' Peter, under this commission, said to the three thousand seekers, 'Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit.' By continuing I found this was the practice in every place, and that God had a uniform law of pardon, and that every one that submitted to it was pardoned, and forthwith received into fellowship of the people of God. I then concluded that our way of seeking religion is not the old way, and that the way of the Lord was better than our way; and I have submitted to the way of the Lord, and have since enjoyed the peace of God. The Lord help all to find the way of the Lord, and walk in it.

"FATHER WAKEFIELD."

THE growth and development of Colorado since 1866 have been most remarkable. Twenty years ago there was not a score of white inhabitants within its boundaries, and there appeared little prospect of an early settlement of the country. The discovery of extensive gold and silver deposits extending through a belt of fifty miles wide, stretching north and south across the central portion of the territory, brought to it population and capital, and has made Colorado wealthier than was Iowa, Oregon, Minnesota, Nevada, Kansas or Nebraska when admitted into the Union. Its chief towns are substantially built with brick structures on broad and well located streets. Denver, its capital, has a population of over 20,000 souls, Pueblo and Georgetown have each 5,000,—Central City, situated in the gold mining belt, contains 4,000. An excellent school system exists. There are 130 churches in Colorado and seven daily newspapers, over thirty weekly, and five magazines published in the territory. Colorado is in a good financial condition. No territorial tax was levied in 1873, and only one mill and a half the year after. A balance of $25,000 is reported in the treasury.—N. Y. Herald.

One of the chief industries of Oregon is the canning of salmon at the fisheries on the Columbia river. It is probable that more salmon are canned there than at all other fisheries in the world. Last year no less than 40,000,000 pounds were caught on the Columbia river. The London Times has estimated that the total catch of Great Britain and Ireland for 1875, was 9,600,000 pounds. Thus according to that calculation, the product of one Oregon river was more than four times the catch of the whole United Kingdom. Of the forty million pounds caught on the Columbia last year no less than sixteen million pounds were cured and canned for exportation.

Lord Chatham or Napoleon were as much actors as Garrick or Talma. Now, an imposing air should always be taken as an evidence of imposition. Dignity is often a veil between us and the real truth of things.—Whipple.

"THE GOD OF JACOB."

Has the reader's attention ever been arrested by the phrase, "the God of Jacob," which occurs so frequently in the Scriptures, and especially in the Psalms? And if so, has the practical truth suggested by it, been appreciated, applied, and enjoyed? There is surely much practical and suggestive truth contained in the phrase. As the patriarch Jacob is among the most interesting characters of the Bible, his history is among the most interesting histories contained in this ancient and venerable volume.

By the phrase "The God of Jacob," we are to understand the God whose wonderful providence is seen in the birth, the eventful and varied life, and in the peaceful death of this venerable father in Israel. The events in the life of Jacob did not happen by chance, neither were they controlled and directed by himself. There was a power that presided over his life, and gave direction and character to it, and that power was God's. That there was a supernatural power which directed his steps and made him what he was, is very plain and certain. If "man's goings are of the Lord," as Solomon affirms they are, Prov. xx. 24, that is, if it is so with mankind in general, it is evidently so with such men as Jacob, whose lives are characterized by so much that is wonderful in them.

The strange circumstances that marked his life, commenced with his birth. Esau was his twin brother, born with him.—Jacob's hand took hold of Esau's heel at the time of their birth, and this, apparently trivial circumstance, suggested his name, Jacob, which means supplanter or heeler. And this name typified or indicated an important event in his life, namely, that of obtaining his brother Esau's birthright. This transaction made him much trouble, but the God whom he worshipped, and whose he was, delivered him out of it all. Moses in writing his history or biography, immediately after mentioning the circumstance at his birth which gave him his name, says, "And Jacob was a plain man, dwelling in tents." This would imply that he was a man of domestic habits, and preferred the pleasures of home, solitude, and retirement, to those of the field, or of a sportsman's life. He frequented the tents of Melchizedek or Heber, as some understand it, to learn from them divine things. Moses seems to have been anxious to give him an honorable and commendable character at an early stage of his biography, lest, perhaps, something prejudicial to his character might be inferred from his name or the circumstance that gave rise to it.

After Jacob obtained Esau's birthright, Esau's anger was kindled against him. "And Esau hated Jacob because of the blessing wherewith his father blessed him: and Esau said in his heart, The days of mourning for my father are at hand; then will I slay my brother Jacob." Gen. xxvii. 41. The parents of Jacob, learning the purpose of Esau to kill him, sent him away to his mother's brother Laban, in Haran. There seem to have been two objects in view in sending him away, 1. That he might not fall a victim to his brother's rage. 2. That he might take to himself a wife of the daughters of Laban, his mother's brother. When his father Isaac sent him away, he blessed him, and offered for him the following prayer: "And God Almighty bless thee, and make thee fruitful, and multiply thee, that thou mayest be a multitude of people; and give thee the blessing of Abraham, to thee, and to thy seed with thee; that thou mayest inherit the land wherewith thou art a stranger, which God gave unto Abraham." Gen. xxviii. 3, 4.—Here we have a manifestation of the piety and faith of Isaac, the father of Jacob. He committed his son to God in prayer. God heard that prayer and became the God of Jacob, as he had been of Abraham, and as he then was of Isaac. And he now begins to manifest himself as the God of Jacob, and begins a course of providential dealings with him that is wonderful as showing his own power, greatness, and goodness, and which is most effectual in accomplishing all for Jacob that his own individual well-being and comfort required, and all that was necessary to prepare him to fulfill the important mission that he as a public character was called to fulfill.

It was on his way to Haran, a journey that he was taking in obedience to his parents' direction, that night overtook him, and he took of the stones of that place at which he had arrived, and put them for his pillows, and lay down in that place to sleep, when God appeared in a vision to him, and made himself known to him as the God of his father Abraham and of his father Isaac, and gave him the promise of the land he was then in as a stranger, with additional and precious promises. The following promise, rich in meaning, was given unto him: "The land wherewith thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed. And thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth, and thou shalt spread abroad to the west and to the east, and to the north, and to the south: and in thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed. And behold, I am with thee, and will keep thee in all places whither thou goest, and will bring thee again into this land; for I will not leave thee until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of." Gen. xxvii. 13—15. This general promise contains a number of particular ones. 1. The land of Canaan is promised unto him—the land wherewith thou liest. 2. It is promised him that his posterity should multiply greatly, and be as the dust of the earth. 3. It is implied that the Savior should come from him, as he evidently is the seed in which all the families of the earth are to be blessed, for he is the great blessing of the world. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John 3: 16. 4. Then there are personal blessings promised to Jacob. (a) He was in danger from Esau, but God promises to keep him. (b) He had a long journey before him, and apparently no company, and probably a strange road to travel over, but God says, "behold I am with thee." (c) He assures him that nothing shall fail of all that he had promised him, saying, for I will not leave thee, until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of.

Such were some of the great promises that "the God of Jacob" made to him—promises that were worthy of the character of God. And the wonderful doings of God in fulfilling these promises, were no less remarkable than were the promises themselves. No being but "the God of Jacob" could do such wonders. The series of events which God's wisdom devised and which his power executed, and which resulted in bringing Jacob's posterity out of the land of Egypt, into which they had been taken by the treachery of Jacob's sons with their brother Joseph, into the land of Canaan which had been promised to Jacob and his seed are justly characterized by the Psalmist as "wonders in the land of Ham," Ps. 105 : 27. But the promise of God to Jacob that he and his seed should possess the land of Canaan has been only partially fulfilled. And if the God of Jacob showed himself to be a great and powerful God in bringing his seed out of Egypt, the evidences and manifestations of his greatness will be greatly multiplied in the latter days, when that promise receives its complete fulfillment. The prophet Jeremiah when referring to the complete fulfillment of the promise of God to Jacob says, "Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, the Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, the Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them. and I will bring them again into their land that I gave to their fathers." Jer. 16: 14, 15. From this prophecy it appears that great and wonderful as the events were which the God of Jacob wrought in taking the seed of Jacob, or the Jews, out of the land of Egypt, and planting them in the land of Canaan at the time this was done, those events shall be surpassed in greatness and grandeur, by what he shall do when the posterity of the Jewish fathers shall be gathered into their land in the latter days.

When we then look at the varied and eventful life of Jacob; at the circumstances of his birth; at the remarkable vision he had when on his way to Haran; his successful wrestling with the angel at Peniel, where he informs us he saw "God face to face;" the success that crowned his labors while employed by his father-in-law, Laban; his escape from the wrath of Esau, and his reconciliation to him; the long and remarkable train of events which grew out of the foul dealings of his sons with their brother Joseph; the prophetic spirit that was given unto him by which he saw much of the future of his sons; and finally, the closing scene of his long and useful life as described by Paul, when he says, "By faith Jacob, when he was dying, blessed both the sons of Joseph: and worshipped, leaning upon the top of his staff," Heb. 11 : 21, it is not only very evident that there was a divine power that presided over his life and that controlled his circumstances, but it is also evident that that power so wisely and benevolently directed his life and circumstances, that they were made conducive to his own individual comfort and well being, and for qualifying him to become one of the benefactors of his race.

With his troubles, he had his dark and desponding seasons. On one occasion when contemplating the apparently adverse circumstances which surrounded him, he exclaimed, "All these things are against me." Gen. 42 : 36. But when God had made those apparently adverse circumstances accomplish his own purposes, and Jacob's prosperity and happiness, the pious patriarch exclaimed, with his cup of joy running over, "It is enough." Gen. 45 : 28. Thus we see the dealings of "the God of Jacob" with his people, are always designed for their good, as the following stanza of the poet implies:

"Good when he gives—supremely good—
Nor less when he denies;
Afflictions from his sov'reign hand
Are blessings in disguise."

It is a pleasant thought to indulge in, and one that is suggested by our subject, that "the God of Jacob" may be ours, and though his dealings with us may not be characterized by the same wonders, that characterized his dealings with his servant Jacob, they will be equally efficacious and successful, in accomplishing all for us that is necessary to make life a success with us, and to bring us to our end in peace. Let us then make "the God of Jacob" our God, and then we can say with exulting joy and lively hope, "This God is our God for ever and ever: he will be our guide even unto death." Ps. 48 : 14.

OUR VISIT TO HUNTINGDON.

On Saturday, the 15th inst., we left home for Huntingdon, Pa., our companion accompanying us, to have an interview with the brethren of the Pilgrim office upon business matters. We preached for them twice, on Sunday morning and on Sunday night, and though the congregations were not large, there was an encouraging little number of attentive hearers, and we felt comforted in our services together. The brethren have fitted up a comfortable room in their office building, in which they have stated meetings for worship. We had a pleasant visit and interview, though the weather was extremely warm.

We are getting the

REPORT OF THE A. M.

published in Huntingdon, and they are pushing the work rapidly, and we hope to have it ready to send out soon. We saw some of the sheets from the press, and we were pleased with the appearance of the work, and we think it will give satisfaction. We hope the brethren will continue to send in their orders, as the publishing of the Report will cost us considerable, and we have not yet got the number of orders we counted on when we undertook the work.

Gleanings and Gittings.

BROTHER S. H. Bashor has returned to us after having spent a few days in Garrett Co., Md. He, in company with brother S. C. Keim of this congregation, spent a few days in successful labor at the Cherry Grove meeting-house in said county. The first meeting at that point was on Friday evening the 14th inst., and the fifth and last on Monday evening following. During this time fourteen were added to the church by baptism, and one more made application. Many others were made to think seriously and some expressed their determination to unite with the Lord's people soon. We are always happy to hear such blessed news; as we feel assured that all the faithful rejoice, we hope we may be permitted to publish many more such reports. But right here arises a question which often recurs to our mind. It is this: Why is it that sinners are so prone to put off their highest interests and greatest good till some future time? They know that they are in sin, and under condemnation; that they are exposed to death and hell every moment; that salvation is offered now; and they have an ardent desire to realize the reward of the good; yet with all this they procrastinate their reformation and neglect their salvation, from day to day. Who can tell us why it is?

OUR correspondents from all parts of the country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific report unusually warm weather. The papers of the eastern cities report a great many sudden deaths occasioned by the heat.

BROTHER Monfort Morgan, Sedgwick, Harvey Co., Kansas, July 6th sends for a copy of the Full Report of the proceedings of A. M., and says:

"I want to know whether the Brethren have made any preparation to have the gospel preached out here in the West. It is almost five years since I have heard a sermon preached by any of the brethren. I would love to have some of the brethren to come out here and settle among us, for we have a nice country. We have our wheat all cut, and it was good; and our oats is good, and we have a good prospect for corn. I would love to have some brother to make me a present of brother Miller's Discussion."

Letter from Denmark.

ASSENS, June 4, 1876.

Dearly beloved Bro. and Sister Scheetz.—Grace, mercy, and peace from our dear heavenly Father to you all. With much joy we received your kind, encouraging letter. Seeing that you are still the same in faith and in works, when we think of you (which we do every day), then we feel both glad and sad; but still must praise God that he has faithful children at some places, even if we are far from them for a season. Sure you, too, have your load of trials yet, as well as when we rested with you, and you, with more than fatherly and motherly care, watched over us day and night. What you did God only knows; therefore he only will bring forth your reward.—And when you still minister to any of the Lord's little ones, faint not, for he will in the end graciously remember even a drink of cold water, and your doing shall yield abundantly incorruptible, immortal fruit. The same we can assure our brethren and sisters in the Montgomery county churches, who did so much, and still are doing for us. Indeed, had the love of God not been shed abroad in your hearts, you would not do and have done so much for poor strangers. This is to us like Samson's lion; it was hard for us in the battle, but every time we look back we find the comfort of brotherly love sweeter than honey in it. Oh! that God would abundantly bless you and unite in love—pure, undefiled, heavenly love—stronger than death, that nothing can quench! A few more days and trials, and we shall all meet rejoicing; all carrying our works along, and hear the sweet welcome from our own blessed, lovely Jesus, who will bring us to his Father's house prepared for us. Then shall we first realize the full meaning of the true words: "We have all gone astray like sheep; we turned every one to his own way; but God laid on Him the iniquity of us all. It pleased the Lord to bruise him; he hath put him to grief: when thou hast made his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand." Isa. liii. So also it prospers here. "He shall see the travail of his soul and be satisfied." "I will divide him a portion with the great." So he has now received a dear brother and a loving sister here. The light is kindled and we try to nourish it, so it can burn as a light-house for passers by in the dark. We would like to put those young lambs on you to pray for, as so much is dependent upon them. I hope you have received the particulars before this, and already pray for them.—It is true, what our dear Bro. Beer said, that we find the difference between work and ideas of it. But we knew that beforehand, and we ought to do our best in it all.

Our dear Bro. Hansen is now spreading tracts in the north of Denmark. He has left everything to attend to this work. Little Annie is growing strong and big. She speaks, sings, and walks nicely; but she is still English. Mary is still weak, but her constitution is getting stronger. She often longs after her mother Scheetz, and often we have a long talk of past times. If you do like last time—send this letter all around to our dear ones who want to know about us, you can save us much writing. Not only does it cost, but it takes time—the time which is too short to reach all poor, unsaved sinners, while this letter will do the same as many. Will you please send it to Bro. Kulp and ask him to write to us? It would please us much to see a few words from any one who feels like sending them.

I am very glad to see it go well with our dear A——, but would ask him the favor of not calling me "Rev." in his next. Glad also you continue to want a place in the Lord's army, but must still ask you to look for a place while it is time. You know the good book says, when the number is full the end will come, (Rev. vi. 11,) whence you see you could tarry too long, and what would you then give in exchange for your soul? Again, putting it off as long as possible, even if it were not too late, shows the poor, pitiful condition of a poor, lost sinner, that the danger and want of salvation is but little understood, and that Jesus is only looked to as a necessary but hated remedy for sin and hell. Oh, he deserves a better place in your heart! Forgive me, but your answer sounds continually in my ears: "I hope to come to him before it is too late." You know as well as I do that nearly all who have gone yonder, had such a hope all along, but that kind of hope has made many ashamed; and now if we could see them, we would see their hope cut off, root and branch. May God help you soon to say, "I know I came to him before it was too late." Our love to all who see this. God bless you every one.

Yours, CHRISTIAN HOPE.

Assens, Ladegaardsgade, }
Denmark, Europe. }

P. S.—If you have a chance let Bro. J. Heckler read this letter. Your kind question, "Can it help to send money for postage?" I can answer, Yes; we can get paper money exchanged here; but I do not wish you to do more than send this letter to our friends.

As many of our brethren are interested in the Danish Mission, we have taken a copy of the above letter to Bro. Scheetz, and send it for publication, hoping Bro. Scheetz will have no objections.

JAS. Y. HECKLER.

Dear Brethren:

We will give you a few items of church news. On the 25th of May I attended a church meeting in Santa Fe district, Miami county, Ind. The brethren gave a good report of their annual visit, so there was but little business except making the necessary arrangements for their communion. After this was done, there was a choice of one brother to the ministry and one to visit, or the deaconship.—The lot fell on T. Jenkins for minister, and George Landgrave for deacon. May the good Lord bless them and qualify them for their office. There were four received by baptism at this meeting. From here we went to the Pipe Creek district, to a church meeting on Saturday, the 27th. The brethren here also gave a good report, and there was but little business except making arrangements for the communion. After this was done, Brother Daniel Shiveley was advanced to the second degree of the ministry. From here I went to the Santa Fe district; preached in the Brethren's meeting house on Lord's day the 28th. On Monday we stayed with our dear Brother Abraham Miller and family, where we were well cared for. On Tuesday, 30th, we met with the members and others at the Brethren's meeting-house, to have a communion together.—Preaching at 10 o'clock. Then dinner was served for all present. We met at 5:30 for evening services. We surely had a season of good things. The meeting came off very pleasantly; ministers plenty to make a good meeting. All went off quietly and in good order. John E. Shiveley is Elder in this district. His helpers are John Wolf, a Bro. Bowman, and T. Jenkins.

From here we went to the Pipe Creek district again, to attend the communion on the 1st day of June. Preaching at 10 o'clock. After preaching, dinner served for all. Met again at 5:30 o'clock for evening services. We had a heavenly season together. We felt that it was good for us to dwell together, and with a bright anticipation of meeting in heaven, where participation will be no more. Plenty of ministers present. One received by baptism at this meeting. Abraham Shepler and G. Heller are the Elders in this district. Their help in the ministry, Daniel Bowser and Daniel Shiveley. Here is where I commenced my labors in the ministry in Indiana, when there was no church organized. The country then was quite new. I preached here about fifteen years. When I left we had a large congregation of members. Since, it has been ben divided into two districts.

As ever, your brother,
SAMUEL MURRAY.

A Word of Invitation.

PAINT CREEK, KANSAS, }
June 16, 1876. }

Dear Fellow Sinner:

We are fast hastening to the bar of God; and we have each a soul to be either saved or lost—a soul that is worth ten thousand worlds—a soul that will live throughout eternity. We are now passing down the stream of time, and fast hurrying to the ocean of eternity.

"Life is the time that God has given To fly from hell and rise to heaven."

There is no repentance in the grave. As the tree falls, so shall it lie. And now, fellow sinner, I will speak a few words to you, hoping that God will bless them to the good of your precious, immortal soul. God hath said in his word that men by nature are "dead in trespasses and sins," Eph. ii. 1; "Children of disobedience," ver. 2; "Children of wrath," ver. 3; "Without Christ, having no hope, and without God in the world," ver. 12. Again: "There is none righteous, no, none," Rom. iii. 10; "All have sinned, and, come short of the glory of God," ver. 23.

And now, my dear fellow-sinner, man is ruined and lost by nature; he lies under the wrath of God; by sin he is under the curse of God, Gal. iii. 10; he stands "guilty before God," Rom. iii. 19. In this awful condition we are all by nature; and all who continue in it, and will not flee to Jesus as their Savior, "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power." 2 Thess. i. 9.—They must receive the sentence, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire prepared the devil and his angels." Thus the doom of the impenitent sinner is sure. He is lost, and he cannot save himself, for, "by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight, Rom. iii. 20; and "none can by any means redeem his brother nor give to God a ransom for him." Psa. xlix. 7. But God in his mercy and love to a world of perishing sinners, has provided a way of escape. When we had broken God's holy law, and come under its curse, and when there was no eye to pity and none to save, God said, "Deliver from going down into the pit: I have found a ransom." Job xxxiii. 24. God gave his only begotten and well-beloved Son to die for those who deserved the condemnation of hell; for "God so loved the world that he sent his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John iii. 16. Fellow sinner, Christ became man for us,—"And the word was made flesh and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth." John i. 14. Wondrous love! He became a servant, and under the law for us,—"But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law." Gal. iv. 4.—He was obedient unto death; he fulfilled the law, and he bore its curse for his people; he suffered its penalty—the death due to our sins. "He humbled himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." Phil. ii. 8. "By his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities." Isa. liii. 11. "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many, and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation," Heb. ix. 28; "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for unjust, that he might bring us to God." Peter iii. 18. And now, Christ having "put away sin by the sacrifice of himself," and "brought in everlasting righteousness," God can, on the ground of this, be just, justifying the sinner. God hath set forth Christ "to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God to declare, I say, at this time his righteousness: that he might be just and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus."—Rom. iii. 25, 26.

Dear fellow-sinner, God has done all that is needful for the salvation of man; Christ has rendered a full satisfaction to the divine majesty for the terrible sin of man; God is satisfied. Nay, more—he is glorified by the work of Christ on our behalf. And now "as ambassadors for Christ, we beseech you, in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God." Fellow-sinner, we must all, if ever saved, be converted, or "born again." This great change we cannot work in ourselves.—Nothing short of the power of the Holy Ghost can bring to life a soul that is dead. Let man think as he will about himself. He is, by nature, "dead in trespasses and sins." God says so.

Dear friend, have you been brought to feel that you are a sinner—a great sinner? and have you come to the cross and been enabled by the grace of God, and with an eye of faith, to behold "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world"? If not, you are far from God, and far from Jesus Christ; and if you die this night without knowing Christ as your Savior, you will be damned to all eternity. Oh! dear reader!—whoever you are—for the sake of Jesus, and for the sake of your precious and never-dying soul, turn to the Lord Jesus this very day, this very hour. Don't begin to say you havn't been so great a sinner as your neighbor; for sin unpardoned will damn you to all eternity.

You and I are sinners—lost sinners.—But what a glorious thing that Christ Jesus "came to seek and to save that which was lost." Luke xix. 10. He says he came "not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance." Matth. ix. 13.—"This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief." 1 Tim. i. 25. Will you then, dear fellow sinner, come now to Christ? Come just as you are, with nothing to recommend you to him but sin, and he will receive you, for he says, "Him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out." John vi. 37.

And now, in conclusion, permit me to ask, Are you "in Christ," or are you "without Christ?" Are you in the narrow path, or are you on the broad road that leads to hell? In one of the two you must be. Which is it? Are you born again? or are you still unconverted? Put this searching question to your soul. Your eternal misery or your happiness hinges on your answer. You do not leave your worldly affairs so unsettled. You look far forward. You provide against every possible contingency. You insure your life and property. Oh, I beseech you, why not deal in the same way with precious and immortal soul! Turn, O dear readers! "Turn ye, turn ye; why will ye die?" Ezek. xxxiii. 11. Are the wages of sin so sweet and good that you cannot give them up? Is the world so satisfying that you cannot forsake it? Is the service of Satan so pleasant that you and he are never to be parted? Is heaven so poor a thing that it is not worth seeking? Is your soul of so little value that it is not worth a struggle to have it saved? Turn, Oh! turn, before it is too late. God is not willing that you should perish. "As I live," he says, "I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live." Ezek. xxxiii. 11. And now, dear reader, will you go down to hell with your blood upon your own head? If you do, you will have none to blame but yourself. Your everlasting ruin will lie at your own door. Seeing, then, that there is provision in the covenant of grace for the chief of sinners—for the vilest of the vile—oh! turn and live. God says, "I will be merciful to your unrighteousness, and your sins and your iniquities will I remember no more." Come to Christ and get pardon, and peace, and joy, and life everlasting; and come now. "To day if you will hear his voice harden not your hearts." "Behold now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation." Christ offers himself freely without price: "Whosoever will, let him come and take of the water of life freely." "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved;" "but he that believeth not shall be damned." Mark xvi. 16.

May God enable you to come now to that blood that "cleanseth from all sin." And now lest we may weary your patience with a lengthy article, we will conclude by asking an interest in the prayers of all God's children, that we may hold out faithful, and at last be permitted to enter into the realms of eternal glory. May God add his blessing.

RURUS G. GRISU.

To my Friends.

The mail brings me abundant evidence that among the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN I have many warm friends who sincerely desire my spiritual and physical welfare. To shape their good wishes more in accordance with physiological law, is the object of this communication.

Health is the complete possession of the body by the vital principle. Death is the separation of the soul from the body. Disease is a tendency to this separation. The healing art consists in the restoration of physiological over pathological action. What can be done in any case will depend on the organic capacity of the patient to generate and maintain the conditions of vitality. All genuinely therapeutic measures must take the sick back to the primary laws of organization, and furnish the requisites of vital action, and invite a more thorough sway of the laws of the human economy.

These propositions are axiomatic. In a true philosophy of life, whether sick or well, nothing can have place which is out of harmony with these fundamental ideas.

Any suggestion, from any one, in a line with these essential principles, will be gratefully welcomed. As for the unguents, liniments, plasters, poultices, lotions, alteratives, and other Golden Medical Discoveries, which my sympathizing friends so liberally and confidently recommend, although beyond the pale of my faith, I nevertheless receive all references and recommendations respecting them with thankfulness, and fully appreciate the sympathy and love in which they have their source. Let not these remarks deter any one from writing to me. If you cannot present an auxiliary to my physical comfort, you can pluck a leaf from the Tree of Life for the healing of my higher nature. I receive many anonymous letters, written by unlettered saints, which are brimful of the "wisdom which cometh from above," and the love that finds its blessedness in sacrifice. To have the life and the name hid with Christ in God, and let the hands work as though they grew out of the body of Christ, and have every motive dominated by "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, goodwill toward men," will bring the rapturous Patmos Apocalypse into glorious personal fulfillment. Rev. xxi. 10—27. The wonders and beatitudes of Revelation must be enjoyed subjectively if they are ever to transpire objectively. In Matth. xxv. 34—40 we find a characterization of those who shall walk the streets of crystal gold and enjoy the eternal festivities of the Divine-human nuptials. O that we might all be there!

C. H. BALSBAUGH.

VINTON, Iowa, July 4, 1876.

Dear Brother James:

Through the mercies of our heavenly Father, we, the brethren and sisters of the Big Grove church, Benton Co., Ia., enjoy good health, not a case of sickness known to me in the entire church, numbering about 140 in all. We also enjoy spiritual blessings. Our "feast of love" is now passed, and it was truly a feast to the souls of all our brethren and sisters who were present. Those that did not participate in the feast, enjoyed the meeting very much. The laboring brethren present preached the word with boldness and power. Every word seemed to come from the heart, and we know it went to the hearts of some, for four were added to Christ's body by baptism, others being almost ready to forsake sin. The laboring brethren then present preached principally to the members, just what we stood in need of. If all our ministering brethren would "tell Israel her sin," and God's people their transgression, there would be more genuine conversions than now. But that man fearing spirit seems to have entire control of many of our dear laboring brethren; the desire to become and remain popular is so strong in many of us that we preach all around the church—we dare not say, "Brethren and sisters, here is a wrong; let us remove it." No; this might offend some of our brethren or sisters. The man, no matter who he may be, that knows of a wrong in the church (though the majority be in it), that does not raise his voice against it, is not worthy to be called a minister of the gospel of Christ, and is in fact saying to the church, "You have a right to commit this wrong." Through his great desire to become and remain popular with all the members of the church, and his fear of offending some, the devil is making inroads in the church everywhere.—Thousands will be lost because they are deceived. They think they are right simply because the messenger of God silently but effectively says, they are right, by failing to point out the wrong. The charge is, "Preach the word," and if none had ever attempted to preach but such as would be, and have been, bold enough to fulfill the charge in full, preaching the word at all times and places without consulting the wishes of the people to whom they preached, preaching it in season and out of season, before this, we believe, the much looked and longed for reign of Christ would have extended from shore to shore, and infidelity, with all that belongs to it, been buried in forgetfulness. But it is not so. Brethren, who is responsible for it? I wait for an answer. But while we do so, let us pray God to enable us to preach the word with boldness and in power, and that he may prepare the hearts and minds of the people for the reception of his word of truth, so that we with them may be the happy recipients of the glories now in reservation for all the children of God. Amen.

Yours in love,

ELIAS TRONEL.

Brethren Editors:

By your permission I will give your many readers an account of a little trip Bro. James A. Sell and I took to California and Indiana counties. The 25th of June was the time appointed for the lovefeast in the Manor church. We, in company with three of our young sisters, started on the morning of the 22nd, by private conveyance. The day, however, was in part rather unpleasant, it being somewhat rainy. We moved gently along, crossing hills and mountains, and drove all day. We arrived at the house of Bro. Levi Brallier about seven o'clock.—The brethren had an appointment in Belzana, a little town near by, that evening for us to fill. Accordingly we repaired to the place where we had a very pleasant waiting before the Lord.

Next morning we resumed our journey. Left Bro. Brallier's for the place of meeting, arriving about noon. The meeting in the evening was very largely attended by spectators. The membership was, however, not very large, and the order was not such as is desirable on such occasions. A great many stayed outside of the house. There was public preaching announced for next day, and also a meeting of members prior to public service. According to arrangements we convened in the morning. The church held a consultation in relation to the election of several deacons, and unanimously agreed to elect two brethren to act in the capacity of deacons. The election was then held, resulting in the choice of brethren Levi Good and Isaac Secrist. The latter was not present, but the former was installed in his office. By this time the time for public worship was at hand, at which time we conducted the meeting to the best of our ability. Bro. James A. Sell spoke from the words of the Savior, "Ye are the salt of the earth." This ended our labors with the brethren at the Manor church.

We then returned to Belzana, where there was an appointment for us again, and where we enjoyed a season of worship together. This was to be our last meeting, but circumstances were of such a nature that we could not well leave.—There was an applicant for admission into the church on the next day, and she being the daughter of our esteemed brother, Daniel Brallier, and he being the only minister present to attend to the solemn duties, we concluded to stay over another day. Met again next day for public worship and to attend to the ordinance of baptism. After services we repaired to the water side, where we had the pleasure of seeing a precious soul buried beneath the yielding wave, to rise to walk in newness of life. This was the most impressive scene of the kind we have ever witnessed. A silence prevailed in the assembly such as made the occasion a solemn one. We met again on Sunday evening for public worship. This was the last meeting we had with the brethren at Belzana, and the occasion was one of solemnity, too.

We were absent from our homes five days and met six times for worship with the brethren and friends, we were encouraged and edified, besides the soul-cheering and reviving seasons at the family altars of those brethren with whom we lodged. The trip to us was a very profitable one and the meetings interesting.—We tender thanks to our brethren and sisters for their kindness extended toward us. Let us prove faithful and ever labor together in the glorious work, for we know that our labor shall not be in vain in the Lord.

From your weak brother in Christ,
DAVID D. SELL.

Brother Quinter:

I will, by your permission, give a few items of news from this arm (Vermillion), which was organized in the fall of 1868. Though we have often been made to rejoice in seeing sinners turn to God since that time, we have also had some gloomy seasons. At present, however, the church seems to be in a prosperous condition. The members met in council on the 17th of June. All matters which come up for deliberation were disposed of in perfect harmony. The voice of the church on all matters seemed to be as the voice of one man. A unanimous decision was made to hold a lovefeast at some convenient time after harvest. A council meeting was also appointed to be held at Baker Run School house, near Cornell, on the first Saturday in August, to make further arrangements about the communion. We wish our dear brethren Thos. D. Lyon, Jas. R. and Geo. W. Gish, and any others who may wish to be with us, to remember this.

Last Saturday we took the train, went to Chenoa, some 16 miles south of this to attend our regular meeting, on Sabbath at 11 o'clock, good attendance. At 4 P. M. we tried to speak to the people some 6 miles north of said place; after which we went out by a water side where prayer was made. Then we went down into the water and immersed Benjamin Lower and Lewis Lehman. The scene seemed to have a good effect, some who were standing on the ridge, looking down on those young brethren while they made their confession of faith and were buried with their great Redeemer, were almost persuaded to be Christians. One expressed a desire to be immersed, but we were not informed of it until after we had left the water. Arrangements are however made so that any one who wishes may be baptized next Sabbath. May God help those who are seeking the old paths that they may walk in them. Amen.

Dear Brother James:

Will you please acknowledge for me through the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN the receipt of six dollars and fifty cents by registered letter, from Bro. Martin Cochran, of Harrisville Ritchie county, W. Va., it being the half of $15. sent him by John Working, Nettle Creek congregation, Wayne Co., Ind., Bro. Cochran being directed to send it (the six dollars and fifty cents) "to that brother in W. Va., who had his house burnt." I suppose I am the man, as I was burnt out a little before that time. The delay of this acknowledgement was caused by my not getting the letter containing the money until to day. I live within five miles of Brandonville, yet the letter lay in the office there from about the 17th of May up to the present time. Brandonville is not my regular post-office, I don't often call there, hence the delay. I hope all will be right now. The brethren of Nettle Creek church will please accept our thanks for the favor.

JAMES A. RIDENOUR.

Announcements.

The Lord willing, a lovefeast will be held by the Somerset congregation Ind., at the meeting-house, Aug. 25th and 27th, 1876. All are invited and especially ministering brethren.

H. R. MINNICK.

The Nettle Creek congregation have appointed a communion meeting at the brick meeting house, about 1 mile west of Hagerstown, Ind., on the 16th of October, to begin at 10 o'clock.

The "Housekeeper" of Our Health.

The liver is the great depurating or blood-cleansing organ of the system. Set the great housekeeper of our health at work, and the foul corruptions which gender in the blood and rot out as it were, the machinery of life, are gradually expelled from the system. For this purpose Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, with small daily doses of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets are pre-eminently the articles needed. They cure every kind of humor, from the worst scrofula to the common pimple, blotch or eruption. Great eating ulcers kindly heal under their mighty curative influence. Virulent blood poisons that lurk in the system are by them robbed of their terrors, and by their persevering and somewhat protracted use the most tainted system may be completely renovated and built up anew. Enlarged glands, tumors and swellings dwindle away and disappear under the influence of their great resolvents. Sold by all dealers in medicines.

"Claude, a child about three years old, was greatly afflicted with sores on his legs and feet, so that he could not wear his shoes and stockings. Had a great deal of trouble with him. Had tried many remedies ineffectually. At last we tried the Golden Medical Discovery, and in about three weeks he was entirely cured, his sores were all healed, and health much improved. Respectfully yours, J. W. BOYER.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

Not a Dye; makes harsh hair soft and silky; cleanses the scalp from all impurities, causing the hair to grow where it has fallen off or become thin.

Can be applied by the hand as it does not stain the hand or soil the finest linen. As a Hair Dressing it is the most perfect of the world has ever produced. The hair is renovated and strengthened, and natural color restored without the application of mineral substances.

Since the introduction of this truly valuable preparation into this country, it has been the wonder and admiration of all classes, as it has proved to be the only article that will absolutely without deception, restore gray hair to its original color, health, softness, lustre and beauty, and produce hair on bald heads of its original growth and color. This beautiful and fragrantly perfumed article is complete within itself, no washing or preparation before or after its use, or acceptance of any kind being required to obtain these desirable results.

HERE IS THE PROOF OF ITS

SUPERIOR EXCELLENCE.

Read this Home Certificate, testified to by Edward B. Garrigue, one of the most competent Druggists and Chemists of Philadelphia, a man whose veracity none can doubt.

I am happy to add my testimony to the great value of the "London Hair Color Restorer," which restored my hair to its original color, and the hue appears to be permanent. I am satisfied that this preparation is nothing like a dye, but operates upon the secretions. It is also a beautiful hair dressing and promotes the growth. I purchased the first bottle from Edward B. Garrigue, druggist, Tenth and Coates streets, who can also testify my hair was quite gray when I commenced its use.

MRS. MILLER.
No. 730 North Ninth St., Phila.

Dr. Swaney & Son—Respected friends: I have the pleasure to inform you that a lady of my acquaintance, Mrs. Miller, is delighted with the success of your "London Hair Color Restorer." Her hair was falling rapidly and quite gray. The color has been restored, the falling off entirely stopped, and a new growth of hair is the result. E. B. GARRIGUES, Druggist, cor. Tenth and Coates, Phila.

BOSTON TESTIMONY.

July 22d, 1871.—Dr. Swaney & Son: Last winter, while in Trenton, N. J., I procured six bottles of London Hair Color Restorer, which I like very much, in fact better than anything I have used in the last nine years. If you please, send me one dozen bottles C. O. D., care of W. S. Fogler & Son, druggists, No. 723 Tremont street, Boston.

Respectfully yours, ADA BAKER, No. 59 Rutland Square.

"London Hair Color Restorer and Dressing" has completely restored my hair to its original color and youthful beauty, and caused a rapid and luxuriant growth.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

Never Despair—Something that Never Fails.—FEVER AND AGUE. To the sick it is of little consequence how they are cured, whether from a rational view of the disease, or by the rules defined for the guidance of the profession, so long as the cure is certain and expeditious. To a suffering man the question on the relative merits of quinine or calomel is uninteresting. The faculty may wrangle and discuss their various theories, but Dr. Holloway's treatment dispels doubt ere the disciples of Esculapius have finished the first stage. Holloway's pills are the only remedies which effect a speedy and radical cure without danger of a relapse. 185

* * * Sold at the Manufactory of Professor HOLLOWAY & Co., New York; and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents, and $1 each.

CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the signature of J. HOLLOWAY, as agent for the United States, surrounds each box of Pills and Ointment. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

THE JOY OF INCOMPLETENESS.

If all our lives were one broad glare
Of sunlight, clear, unclouded ;
If all our paths were smooth and fair,
By no soft gloom enshrouded ;
If all life's flowers were fully blown
Without the sweet unfolding,
And happiness were rudely thrown
On hands too weak for holding—
Should we not miss the twilight hours,
The gentle haze and sadness ?
Should we not long for storms and showers,
To break the constant gladness ?
If none were sick and none were sad,
What service could we render ?
I think if we were always glad,
We scarcely could be tender ;
Did our beloved never need
Our patient ministrations,
Earth would grow cold, and miss indeed
Its sweetest consolation.
If sorrow never claimed our heart,
And every wish be granted,
Patience would die, and hope depart—
Life would be disenchanting.
And yet in heaven is no more night,
In heaven is no more sorrow—
Such unimagined new delight
Fresh grace from pain will borrow—
As the poor seed that underground
Seeks its true life above it,
Not knowing what will there be found
When sunbeams kiss and love it ;
So we in darkness upward grow,
And look and long for heaven,
But cannot picture here below,
Till more of light be given.

Elders and Bishops, Deacons and Helpers.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

This is the official catalogue which a dear brother presents for elucidation. "Are the Elders and Bishops distinct officers? Is a Deacon a minister, and in what degree? Who are the Helpers?" These are the queries propounded for consideration.

Words are things of growth, both in form and signification. Starting on the lower planes, they advance to the higher; and what primarily designates the commonest matters in the sphere of materiality, comes finally to express the highest religious truths, even the very essence of the Trinity.

ELDEN has literally reference to one advanced in life. Such are presumed to have superiority in knowledge and experience, and more likely to be made the referees in the settlement of matters requiring maturity of judgment. For the same reasons such persons would also be selected to fill public offices, and this prepared the way for the term to designate the office as well as the person. I can find nothing in the Bible that carries my conviction in favor of official eldership apart from seniority. A young elder is a contradiction in terms; although if the term be restricted to office, such a conjunction is not inappropriate. The bifold signification has not been preserved. In the present use of the term neither seniority nor superiority are necessary ideas, but only official position. As it originally signified age, and next wisdom, and finally office, it was natural to invest the term with what was highest, or best. The older the wiser, and the wiser the better qualified for the highest official rank. There is a term significant of the noble position and authority. Hence Elder and Bishop are synonyms.

DEACON is a comprehensive word. It includes all holy offices. It means any person who ministers in God's service. It literally signifies a God-server, or God-minister. Paul repeatedly uses the term to designate his own service as an Apostle of Jesus Christ. "In all things approving ourselves as the ministers (deacons) of God." 2 Cor. 6: 4. "Whereof I am made a minister (deacon)." "Whereof I Paul am made a minister (deacon)." Even Christ's office is distinguished by this term: "Now I say that Jesus Christ was a minister (deacon) of the circumcision for the truth of God." Rom. 15: 8.

The word Bishop means an overseer, and in a general sense is applicable to all ecclesiastical officers; but it has a more restricted sense in which it gathers to itself all the dignity and authority of age and wisdom. So the word deacon, in its widest signification, applies to all who minister in an official way for the promotion of the truth; but in its narrower sense designates a subordinate minister of the word. Not necessarily a speaker, but any form of ministry, or sub-agency by which the higher order is aided, and the general welfare and efficiency encouraged. The original seven were endowed with plenary ministerial power. They both preached and baptized. Acts 6 and 7 and 8. The age was one of miracles and extraordinary circumstances, a somewhat promiscuous instrumentality, and marvelous results. While the word-ministers proper would not descend to the ministry of the table, it was allowable for the regular table-servers to ascend to the function of a higher ministry. As their authority to baptize was direct from God, so, no doubt, was their authority to preach; and both through the miraculous endowment of the Holy Ghost. The endowment and authority being now both withheld, deacons are subject to the authority and direction of the elders. Were a deacon now to claim authority to execute the primeval ministry on the ground of a direct Divine call, the challenge of Pharaoh to Moses would be pertinent: "show a miracle for you." Ex. 7: 9. Being regular God in an inferior capacity, they have the privilege, should circumstances require, to "go up higher" and exercise in the regular word-ministry "of the ability which God giveth." 1 Pet. 4: 11. But ability confers no claim, any more than ability to be governor or president entitles to these offices. Order is not only "Heaven's first law," but of the universe. That which would be infringement on purely personal grounds, becomes duty by providential ordering. To lift the lid of the Holy Coffer without Divine permission, is to incur great guilt. 1 Sam. 6: 19. Let the foot cheerfully do the walking, and the hand the grasping and lifting, and not run on all fours until the wants of the body require such a blending of function.

HELPS never come amiss, in every rank, age, and station. The "helps" mentioned in 1 Cor. 12: 28 occur in a catalogue of miraculous gifts among primitive Christians, which have passed away with the occasion that rendered their existence necessary. To what particular duties it referred it is impossible to determine. The Apostle opens the 12th chapter by saying, "Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant." He then proceeds to a specific enumeration and closes the chapter with the exhortation, "but covet earnestly the BEST gifts." That he does not refer to the permanent graces of Christian character, is evident from the words, "and yet show I unto you A MORE EXCELLENT WAY." In the 13th chapter this "more excellent way" is delineated. The prophecies shall fail, the tongues shall cease, the knowledge shall vanish away; all the endowments and functions mentioned in the preceding chapter, as called forth by the essential requirements incident to the inauguration of the new religion, "shall be done away." But "the more excellent way"—Faith, Hope, Charity,—abideth.

But we still need "helps." There is still work for "Aquila and Priscilla as helpers in Christ Jesus." The church still needs Phebes as bearers of sacred messages. Rom. 16: 1, 2, 3. Marys are never out of place to "bestow much labor" on the ambassadors of Christ. verse 6. The Lord has abundant work still for the Tryphenas and Tryphosas verse 12. The church cannot do without "Gaius mine host." We need "Quartus" as well as Quinter verse 23: "The house of Stephanas" is greatly needed to "addict themselves to the ministry of the saints." 1 Cor. 16: 15. There is not a congregation but might well be glad at "the coming of Fortunatus," to supply what is lacking verse 17. Help, HELP, how pressingly it is needed ~~Yours truly, A. B. Barnhart~~ and sucklings, "come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty," lest we be "ANATHEMA, MARANATHA" Do something. Bring your spikenard for the feet of Jesus, and your myrrh and aloes and spices for His corpse. With a fresh consecration, let us present body, soul and spirit, a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, which is our reasonable service. If we can do no more, let us draw water and carry wood for the congregation of the Lord.

Preach the Word. 2 Timothy 4: 2.

BY A. B. BARNHART.

In the above we have a charge to Timothy, by the apostle Paul, shortly before he was to be offered up, that he should be ready, in season and out of season, to declare that word which was intrusted to him. It came as from a dying father to his son, giving him good instructions in regard to his duty that he owed toward his God. The charge and instructions are obligatory upon our ministers, in this our day, to be diligent in preaching the word—"be instant in season, and out of season, reprove, rebuke."

"Preach the word"—"Reprove." We have heard it said when some were sharply reprovved by our ministers, that it was not in season, that they should not have said thus and so. Brethren and friends, be not offended when the minister is faithful to his charge. Our desire should be, above all things, if we are not right to be right, and be willing to be led into all truth; and he that doeth truth will receive the word with meekness, and desire him not to say smooth words, for the apostle futher said, "The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, but shall heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears, and they shall turn their ears away from the truth."

But the charge is, "Preach the word." It is to be feared many on hearing the word think more of others than they do of themselves. We should at all times endeavor to bring the subject home to ourselves, and ask, "Have I a part or lot in this matter? Is my heart right? Am I truly a child of God? Am I an heir of this promise? Do I show my faith by my works? "Let every man prove his own work and then shall he have rejoicing in himself alone, and not in another." We should examine ourselves more closely, and not others, and take the reproof and admonition, ~~our Savior~~ ing his destiny he was concerned about John, and said, "Lord, and what shall this man do?" Our Savior said, "What if I will that he tarry till I come? what is that to thee? Follow thou me." May we all be the followers of our Lord and Master, that we may fear him and work righteousness; for he it is that will be accepted with him in his glorious mansions on high.

The Trials and Triumphs of Faith.

No. 2.

"By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should afterward receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went." Heb. 11: 8.

We come now to consider the life of a man remarkable for his faith; the father of the faithful. He affords a noble example of the triumph of faith, and he is worthy of all imitation. But he had to endure great trials of temptation.

The first striking instance of Abraham's faith that we are called upon to notice is the call to leave his home and kindred and go forth not knowing whither he went. This man of God was now seventy-five years of age, and had, no doubt, formed many warm attachments in his native land, that it would require great sacrifices to give up; but his confidence in God led him to obey the divine call at once. He did not sit still and ask questions about the land that he was promised; he did not ask if it was a fertile country, with a salubrious climate, &c. It was enough for him that God bade him go, feeling assured that there is no place so safe nor so happy for a man as the place where God would have him to be. God often makes such calls upon his people now, not in an audible voice from the heavens, but by his word and his providences. Whenever duty to God and to truth requires us to leave family and friends, the most lucrative business or profession, all that is pleasant and profitable, we should obey.

Abraham's faith had yet another trial to encounter in connection with his leaving his home. When he got to the land promised, he found that the Canaanites were still there; that it was yet a land of great wickedness and idolatry; and that so little could he call the land his, that he had even to buy a grave in it. Gen. 23rd chapter. Is this the land flowing with milk and honey, that the Lord had spoken of? It looked very unlike it, as yet; but still he clung to the promise. Faith can afford to wait, upon God. Our ~~promises~~ and our faith are not always met in the way expected. It is ours to trust; it is God's to answer in the way his sovereign pleasure sees best. The father of the faithful possesses his soul in patience. He does not wish that he had never left the land of the Chaldeans and the loved scenes of his youth. No, even when trouble after trouble came upon him in the strange land, his trust never seems to have wavered or left him. He does not interpret God's word by God's providences, but the reverse of this; and this is a most important point for us all. The providences may be dark and puzzling, and, sometimes, judging from them, we might think that God was going to give us up to the enemy; but faith looks to the promise and knows that the providences are for his good, although he cannot now see it. If Job had looked at the promises in the light of the providences with which he was encompassed, he would have come to the same conclusion as some of his friends, that God had forsaken him and was now his enemy; but he did not do so. He clung to his anchorage on the promises, and soon he saw that the God of the promises and the God of providence is the same. He may send Abraham into the famine, and he may send Job into the barren Island of Patmos; but he will be there to meet them: "My presence will go with thee, and I will give thee rest."

A living faith always brings forth good works, and by this alone is its divine origin proven. How we admire the kind, tender, judicious temper of this great man, as he says to Lot, "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen; for we be brethren. Is not the whole land before thee? Separate thyself, I pray thee, from me; If thou wilt take the left hand, then I will go to the right; or if thou depart to the right hand, then I will go to the left." Gen. 13: 8, 9. "A soft answer turneth away wrath;" and it is the spirit of true religion to "be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love, in honor preferring one another." Rom. 12: 10.

The spirit of faith is always the spirit of prayer and intercession. Abraham's intercession, in behalf of guilty Sodom, opens with a lovely picture of hospitality. While sitting in the door of his tent, and looking out, three men, strangers to him, as far as he could see, made their appearance. With kind consideration for the wants of strangers, he goes out to meet them, and shows them the utmost courtesy. With the aid of his kind wife, an ample repast is soon provided for them. To some this might seem a very little matter, but God took notice of it, and gives it an honorable record in his Book; and it is referred to by an inspired apostle: "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares." Heb. 13: 2. What must have been the amazement of the Patriarch when he made the discovery that one of these visitors was the Lord of glory; the same who had appeared to him before in comforting assurances and gracious promises! and how must his heart have rejoiced, when, from the same lips, was given him the promise of a Son, in whom all nations of the earth were to be blessed! The visitors now turn their faces toward Sodom, and Abraham accompanies them. The Lord discloses to him that the object of approaching that vile city was one of wrath and vengeance. The cry of their iniquity had come up before the Lord, and now his sword of vengeance is in his hand; but before the stroke descends, the man of faith begins to plead. He takes a humble position in the divine presence. "I have taken upon me to speak unto the Lord, who am but dust and ashes." As a proof of his confidence in the Lord, it is said that he "drew near." Just as a loving child draws near to his father, when he has an important request to present. He also expresses the utmost confidence in the righteous and merciful government of God; "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" He knew how guilty Sodom had become; but he also knew that the mercy of God was great. He had a loathing and intense hatred for their sins; but a deep love for the sinners. It was this spirit of love that made Abraham so persevering in his prayer. He asks not merely once, but several times. He rises in his requests as the Lord condescends to answer him, till he gains the assurance that the city will be spared, it even ten righteous persons be found in it. But alas; there is not even that little quantity of salt in the midst of the general corruption. The only righteous persons in Sodom are saved by miraculous power, and in answer to Abraham's intercession.

How glorious to think of Christ as our ever living intercessor, appearing in the presence of God for us?

Read the Bible.

George Muller says: Let me press upon you the deep importance of reading the Word with meditation and prayer (1 Peter ii. 2, 3.) "As new born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby." As neglected babes never become healthy men and women, so young converts who neglect God's appointed food, "the Word," never become bright Christians.

1. Read the word of God regularly through. Begin with Genesis in the morning and Matthew in the evening, making a mark where you leave off. When you have finished the Old and New Testament begin again. As an earthly will always read through with great care, so God's will ought to be read entirely through with reverence and godly fear. Consider the advantages of this plan:

(a) We are kept from making a system of divinity of our own, and confining ourselves to a few favorite doctrines and truths. We also become lovers of the whole Word.

(b) Variety is pleasing.

(c) When we have finished reading it through we shall be glad to begin again. In forty-six years I have read my Bible through a hundred times; yet it is always fresh and new when I begin it again.

2. Read it in a prayerful spirit.

3. Read with meditation. Ponder over what you are reading.

4. Read with reference to your own heart. So many preachers read for their hearers; parents read for their children; and school-teachers for their scholars. Ask yourselves—

How does this suit me?

How does this warn me?

How does this rebuke me?

How does this comfort me?

If you do this, God uses the word by you for others.

5. Always seek to mix faith with your reading.

6. Practice what you read. We must carry out what God tells us. He expects us to be obedient children—"If ye know these things happy are ye if ye do them." Come in childlike simplicity to the word of God. Give heed to it with all earnestness, and let it settle all questions.—Sel.

Passing Away.

BY BETTIE ULRICH.

The world around us presents a vast scene of beauty. The flowery meadows, the green fields, the brooks and vales, are all picturesque scenes for the eye to behold; but they must all pass away. When we look around us, we see the beauties of God's creation in almost everything that can be brought before our eyes. The green trees, the flowers and grass are all beautiful indeed. Then there are also the beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, which we can gaze at in amazement and wonder. But these must also pass away. There is, however, something yet of more importance to speak of than any of the things mentioned. And what is it? It is to speak of God's creatures whom he has formed in his own image, and has placed on this earth for a noble purpose, not to do evil, but to do good. But oh, how many, today, are doing evil, and violating the law of God! some by trying to gain all the riches that can be procured on earth, never thinking how soon they must pass away. Let us strive to gain a home in heaven, instead of this world's riches; for Christ says, "What will it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" He also says, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away." Now let us try to live according to his word, that when we are called from this world, we can pass away in peace with God.

"We are passing away,
To that great judgment day."

THE DANISH MISSION.

BY D. C. MOOMAW.

A ray of light from the vast seas of glory,
Which bathe elysian shores in other spheres,

On Denmark now is beaming, and the story
Of glorious salvation, Sweden hears.

Columbia blest with rivers of the waters,
Which flow from worlds supernal into this,
Hath now to fair Europa's sons and daughters,
Cheerfully sent the sparkling eup of bliss.

Oh Northmen hark the pall of darkness dreary,
Be with its horrors banished from your hearts;

Now of your burning, living thirst grow weary,
And drink the draught which endless joy imparts.

Oh heed the solemn voice of timely warning,
Which now re-echoes on your stately shore;
Oh gladly hail the dawning of your morning,
Ere you are doomed to hear and see no
more.

Where bright Aurora's desultory light,
Is mirrored on the iceberg's lofty dome;
Where often reigns a wilderness of night,
There death and terror have their dreary home.

But when the blazing sun his cycles speeding,
Beams on this gloomy realm his living ray,
Not winter's dark and icy menace heeding,
He turns this night of horrors into day.

So when that sacred Sun, which beareth healing
In wings of starry light,—is heavenly might

On desert wastes of sin and woe revealing,
He banishes the darksome folds of night.

Fair fields of fairest verdure soon are blooming,

Where once were barren plains, and icy bowers;

And brightest flowers eternally unfolding,
Fill with their fragrance the enraptured hours.

The Mind of a Child.

BY J. S. FLORY.

How like the blank white page is the mind of a little child just in its first development. The expression of infantile innocence bespeaks a mind as pure and unsullied as the garb of holy angels. Oh, were it not for the evil influences of this world, how easy it would be to have them continue their pathway along the banks of the river of life! But since having cast its blighting influence all around it behooves parents to watch the "lambs of the flock." Did you ever think of it, parents, how the mind of your darling infant is like a blank page under your hand, ready to receive your writing? God who gave it to thee has bid you commence the work, and he will finish it for the courts of heaven. It is at first but a little thing, but soon, very soon, the mind begins to develop like a bud that gently expands into a full blown rose. Early impressions are like the copy on a page, imitations will follow, and how important the copy be a good one. A page once written over is difficult to rewrite so as to be legible, and very difficult to erase what has once been written, so with the mind of a child, early impressions are hard to get rid of.

To unlearn what has been learned amiss is difficult, hence the greater need of impressing the mind with right principles at the first. The great evil of the day with parents, is the neglect of a thorough and proper training of their children.
Is it any wonder that crime is so alarmingly on the increase when we consider how the large majority of children are brought up—or rather left to grow up like a weed along by the hedge row. The parent—especially the mother, has no time after attending to a proper arrangement of her ruffles and feathers, to devote to the training of a child's mind, other than influencing it to love the vain follies and fashions of the world. I speak this of the world at large. And it is to be feared many who profess to be "not of the world" are drifting into the same channel.

Think of it mothers, the spotless page under your hand has been given you by God for a purpose—
"pure, white and clean," that you may inscribe by precept and example thereon "Holiness to the Lord," or in other words, that that mind so susceptible of impression may be cultivated in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord." With the forcible pen of love make deep and lasting impressions. Persevering work sanctified by earnest prayer is what gives an indelible nature to early impressions. Carelessness in haste, or force-work in anger, is like scribbling with a pencil, it is easily wiped out by the hand of Satan. A young mind properly trained at a certain stage of development, is ready to receive the right seal of God's pardon or adoption.
How readily such a mind receives the "image of the Son of God," and in the glory of the excellency of divine wisdom God sanctifies it to his work and purpose. The work the parent begun and carried on through tears and prayers the Lord makes perfect through his means of grace; and thus the soul quickened under the hand of the parent—fostered by parental culture, and illuminated by divine glory, is fitted and prepared for heaven. What a glorious consummation—what a harvest the seed of early instruction brings about. Oh! how blessedly the fondest hope of the parent is at last realized—what they have "sown in tears they reap in joy"—joy "unspeakable and full of glory."

But alas! how many train the infantile mind for the world's theatre—that they might attain to the stations of vanity—climb the rugged mount in hopes of reaching the pinnacle of fame or shine in the dazzling courts of wealth and worldly honor. A child brought up with such hopes in view, is a lump of clay well and completely fitted for the grim visaged potter—Satan.
How easily it yields to every touch of evil influence. The ways of sin is its delight—the dark chambers of iniquity its home here, and the still darker chambers of ruin its abiding place in the world to come. And why so? because it was trained by its parents for the world, and a world's reward was the price asked and a "worldlings" reward is its portion.

Parents ponder well the solemn question—ask it yourself—"Am I training my child for God—for the church—and for heaven,—or am I the schoolmaster to bring my child to the school of Satan—to the world and to hell?"

Bitter tears often are shed by parents who have "done what they could," and yet their children "will not." But a thousand times more bitter are the tears of remorse—remorse on account of having trained a child for the world, and not for heaven. Ah yes! too late! too late!
The work is done—the soul is lost
Ambition set the copy, and that copy shall stand as a burning testimony to all eternity!

Is the Annual Meeting a Parliament?

BY LANDON WEST.

It will be remembered by those who were in attendance at the late Annual Meeting, that a paper from one of the districts of Illinois was presented, asking the approval of A. M. upon the Danish Mission, a work in which their district is now engaged. Brother Eby, of Illinois, gave an explanation of the paper, with the objects aimed at, and also the course pursued by his district in relation to it. There seemed to be an unwillingness among the brethren to take the responsibility of the Mission upon A. M., but the district was engaged to go on in the work and prosecute it to a success.
In the able speech made by brother Eby upon the subject of the Mission, and after he had seen that the meeting did not wish to take the work upon itself, he had said that, for his part, he was willing to withdraw the paper or request, or that he would withdraw it. Many brethren were unwilling to send the paper back to its district without an expression from this meeting of its approval of missionary work, and a paper was prepared by the clerk and its reading called for, when a brother objected, saying that it was not parliamentary to have the paper read after the motion was withdrawn. After a short quibble upon it, the paper was ruled out and not read.

We felt much mortified at the time; and since we have had time to reflect upon the proceeding, our feelings have not been the most charitable, and we are not willing to let it pass without, at least our censure.

Our people seem to labor almost constantly to secure non-conformity to the world,—and many of the decisions of A. M. have a direct bearing upon that subject,—but the scope of its labor upon this highly necessary work seems to be confined to a few things of minor importance, and not to everything in which conformity may be seen, and which may have more to do with our actual religion than anything which has been forbidden. We consider the Danish Mission a move in the right direction, and one for which Jesus in his model prayer told us to pray, and if our people do not attach that meaning to his words, and at the same time labor for the “kingdom to come,” we greatly fear that their words, (not prayers,) hardly gain the third heaven. We greatly admire brother Hope’s love for the people of his native land, and also his spirit of self-denial in trying to give them an opportunity to obey the whole gospel; and we do hope this happy chance to work as Jesus bids us will not pass unimproved.

But what we regret most is that our people who are so much for non-conformity should follow so closely the rules of parliament and not see that they are conforming, at the same time, to the world. Parliaments are worldly organizations and their rules are of the same fibre, but the brethren adhere to its rules as closely as any other people would; and so closely is it done that they prefer to follow its rules, to the line, rather than to approve of the work of saving souls in Denmark. Our conclusion is that we are not the people we think we are, and the separation from the world talked of so much is more imaginary than real. We would suggest one of two things to the Annual Meeting in future: First, not to claim that it is not a law-making power, but that its decisions are advice only; or, second, when we claim our decisions as only advisory, not to follow so closely the rules of a parliament; for parliaments are law-making powers.

The Catacombs of Rome.

Who has not heard of the old Roman Catacombs? those interesting vaults of the earth to which the early Christians fled for refuge in times of persecution? These catacombs are underground rooms dug in a soft, volcanic stone called in Italian tufa. The word catacomb is derived from the Greek words, kata, down, and kumbus, a hollow, as if descriptive of an underground excavation. It is supposed by many modern writers that these sepulchers date back to the very time of the apostles.

There are forty-two of the catacombs, and they are situated mostly near the great roads leading out from Rome. The rocky ground in every direction is completely honey-combed by these vast cemeteries. Here, for three centuries, the Christians were buried. During times of persecution they held meetings in the tombs, and even lived in them.

The catacombs consist mainly of two parts—corridors and chambers. The corridors are long, narrow passages, forming a complete network of underground paths. The main corridors are from three to five feet wide, and average eight feet in height; but the side passages are often narrow, affording room for only one person to pass. The chambers are little rooms, often not more than eight or ten feet square. Here the Christians assembled in small groups, partook of the Lord’s supper, and comforted each other in their trials.

The sides of all the passages, galleries, and chambers, are lined with stone graves, cut in the walls. Here they are, as closely as they can be arranged, one tomb above another. It is difficult to compute the number of graves in these great cemeteries. Some seventy thousand have been counted, but they are only a small part of the entire number. Father Merchi estimates the average to be ten graves for every seven feet of gallery. Upon this basis he reckoned the entire number buried in the catacombs to be seven million! The estimate of De Rossi makes about four millions of tombs. This last seems almost incredible, but we are to remember that for three hundred years the entire Christian population of Rome was buried there.

These graves were at first all made airtight by slabs of marble, or tera cotta tiles and plaster and cement.

The name of the slender was generally scratched in the soft stone, or plaster. These inscriptions are exceedingly interesting, as they show the faith of the sleeping Christian. The symbols and inscriptions are those of peace and joy, and are found on many of the graves. The well known symbols of the Dove, Lamb, Olive Branch, Anchor, Bread and wine, Fish, Lamp, Good Shepherd, and numerous others, point to the hope of the silent sleeper. While such inscriptions as “Resting in Peace,” “Laid to sleep,” “In Christ,” “Waiting for the Resurrection,” etc., etc., show how the early Christians looked for the sounding of the last trump as the completion of all their joys.

In the silent chambers of the catacombs are the remains of what was once man in his strength, woman in her beauty, or a child in its innocence and gloe. If the graves are opened, the lifeless forms, although frequently perfect at first, on being exposed to the air, or touched, dissolve into a white flaky powder.

The length of all the galleries, corridors, and passages, put together has been computed at from six to nine hundred miles! But it is difficult to give the precise extent of this vast necropolis on account of the tangled intricacy of its passages. Some of the catacombs are almost wholly inaccessible on account of the water.

The entrances to these sepulchers is sometimes like a foxes’ burrow, almost concealed by the long grass, or the melancholy cypress or ilix. Often an arch is formed at the catacomb’s mouth, or a little chamber. But in all cases there is a stairway leading down to the silent crypt beneath. In the gloomy halls below reposes the precious dust of the martyrs, who may have heard the words of life even from the very lips of the apostles.

The walls are sometimes plastered, and when they have given way, are supported by masonry. At the corners of the passages are little niches in which lamps were placed, without which these halls would have been an impenetrable labyrinth. Cardinal Wiseman gives a touching legend of a poor blind girl who served as guide to the catacombs. She was as familiar with its dark tunnels as those who enjoy the blessings of sight are with the streets of the city.

The chambers of the catacombs generally have vaulted roofs, and are sometimes plastered, or cased with marble, and paved, occasionally with mosaic. The walls and ceiling are often covered with fresco work, frequently of elegant design.

To secure immunity from dampness, which would hasten decomposition and corrupt the atmosphere, the catacombs were always excavated in high ground, in the undulating hills about the city, but never in the valleys. They were made several stories deep. The awful silence and almost impalpable darkness of the lowest depths is absolutely frightful. It is the realm of eternal gloom—a place destitute of all light. Not so much as a lizard or bat has penetrated its obscure recesses. Nothing but skeletons, and dust, and ashes, on every side!

The catacombs were ventilated by numerous openings to the world above, called spiragli, or breathing-holes. There were also openings to admit some light to the various chambers called luminari, or light holes. Sometimes several chambers are partially lighted and ventilated by the same shaft. This is true of the upper stories, but not even the faintest ray ever reaches the lower passages.

The catacombs are now somewhat mutilated by earthquakes and floods. Sometimes the stairways are broken, the corridors blocked up, and the roofs fallen. The rains of a thousand Italian winters have washed tons of earth down the light-holes; and the smoke of the lamps of early worshippers, and the torches of recent visitors, have impaired the beauty of many of the paintings. The hand of the spoiler, too, has rifled the graves and broken the tablets. Many fortunes have been expended by interested investigators in removing the collection of earth and debris so that the catacombs could be explored.

During the darkness of the middle ages, the catacombs almost passed out of the knowledge of the human mind. But in the year 1578, they were rediscovered by some workmen who were digging building material in a vineyard on the Salarian Way. Since then, they have ever been invested with a new interest to both Papist and Protestant.

The exploration of the catacombs is always attended with danger. M. Bosnio was several times well nigh lost in those mysterious depths. And Mons. Roberts, a French savant, nearly lost his life the same way. As he waded through gallery and chamber, absorbed in interest, the thread imperceptibly slipped from his hand! In his excited attempt to find the clew, the torch went out, leaving him in total darkness, a prisoner among the dead. He shouted, but the hollow echoes only mocked his voice. Wearied, and in despair, he threw himself on the ground, when, could he believe it, his hand touched the cord by which he was enabled to retrace his way back to the mouth of the catacomb.

In 1798 some French officers of Berthier's army, infidel in principle, visited the catacombs. Here they sang their wicked songs, rifled the graves, and said death was "an eternal sleep." One of their number, more daring than the others, resolved to explore some remote galleries. He was speedily lost, and abandoned by his companions. Groping through the dark, he touched nothing but cold walls and moldering bones. His soul was filled with awe as he thought of his sins, of death, and the judgment. His physical powers soon gave way, and he sank in exhaustion. When rescued the next day, he was ill, but a converted man, and one who honored the Savior's cause till the day of his death, some years after.

Even as late as 1837 a professor, with his class, numbering nearly thirty persons, were lost in these underground labyrinths, and never discovered, though repeated and diligent search was made for their recovery.

Francisco Urgos, an Italian, now in Battle Creek, Mich., in his younger days, frequently visited the catacombs. Once he, too, got lost, and remained a living prisoner for a whole day, until rescued by his friends. And he says language is altogether too weak to portray the horror which one feels who realizes that his actually lost amid the dark recesses of the catacombs.—G. W. Andon, in Youth's Instructor.

Hints on Family Government.

TO MOTHERS HAVING THE CARE OF LITTLE CHILDREN.

1. Don't talk too much. To be always lecturing children is not the way to secure prompt obedience. Some children would doubtless much rather be whipped than perpetually talked to; especially in a fault-finding way. Little indiscretions and improprieties it is often best to pass by. If we take note of everything, and administer a lecture upon it, our lectures will soon become an intolerable bore, and not only will do no good, but, while they chafe our own spirit, they will harden and discourage the child.

2. Talk low and gentle. If you talk loud, it will be the harder to be calm. Keep the voice down and you can the easier keep your temper down. If you talk loud, your children will also, and the difficulty will be increased. Do you know that one of the chief difficulties of family government is in the parent? You may not suspect it, while it may be even so in your case. Quiet, gentle, yet firm mothers govern best.

3. Don't threaten much. To be every now and then saying: "If you do that again I'll box your ears," or "I'll whip you," or "I'll send you to bed," only hardens; and if you fail to execute what you threatened—as great threateners are sure frequently to do—your children will either consider you very forgetful or false; and in either case will learn to distrust you, and many a time will laugh at your threats. Take notice of some great threateners—and you may not have to go far to find a specimen or two—and observe if they do not often sternly threaten, and, in a few minutes, being more good natured, or forgetful suffer the children, unrebuked, to do the very thing against which punishment was threatened.

4. If you would govern well, have but few general rules, but steadily adhere to these. Have a fixed rule as to prompt obedience, speaking the truth, and indeed, all moral duties; and never pass easily by an act of willful disobedience, or a lie, or a theft. No matter if you are in ever so great a hurry; stop and attend to this. It is infinitely more important than our ordinary affairs. Make a great matter of it, for God does; and it one day may prove a great matter to you and your children.

5. Punish rarely, but when you do be thorough. Never punish in a passion nor when you are peevish or impatient, or nervously excited. Wait till you are cool; look well and cheerfully at the reasons of the case and only punish when the evidence of guilt is clear. Then proceed in a calm and Christian spirit. Show your child, from the word of God, your obligation to punish. Read to him God's words as your authority, and let him see that you and he are both accountable to God. Let no one, grandparent or other venerated friend, interfere with your family discipline.—Congregationalist.

Sinning, or Being Tempted to Sin.

BY C. G. LINT.

It is a well known fact that there are persons professing Christianity that say they cannot sin, nor even be tempted to sin any more. Being aware of this fact, as well as being frequently interrogated on the subject, caused me to give it some thought, and the following I submit for the consideration of all who believe as above stated.

First. It is not possible for men nor women to attain a standard in Christian life and experience, that will be strong enough to ward off Satan with his temptations of sin, as long as we live in this tenement of clay, and are surrounded with sinful influences. But again, if Christians could bring themselves to such a standard in holy things, what use was there in Christ Jesus to preach and give such like injunctions. To all his followers, without distinction, he says, "When ye pray, say, our Father," &c. This is what is called the Lord's prayer; and in this prayer one of the petitions is that we might escape the danger of being led into temptation. Christ knew that his followers might be tempted.

Again, the language of the Savior to the disciples is, "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation." Matth. 26: 41. If men in this world could live without any temptations, then all the language of our Savior as above would be out of place. Bither Christ or these assuming, holy men must be right. Both cannot be, for they assume different positions. As to which of them is right, judge ye. I am only astonished that men and women blush not for shame, when they say that they are so holy that they cannot sin, nor even be tempted to sin. But every theory has its accompanying Scriptures; so has this, and here it is: "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame." Heb. 6: 4-6. This passage of Scripture, without a doubt, proves the proposition to be a correct one. But look at it carefully and prayerfully, and you cannot help but see that it does not give even an intimation of that kind, but, on the contrary, it does give us to understand that men and women, after having enjoyed the above Christian graces, may fall; and if they do fall, it is because of sin; and if they sin, they were first tempted to sin. So the whole matter is brought into a nutshell in the Scripture quoted. What does Paul say is impossible—to fall away? This cannot be what Paul has in view as being impossible, for he says, "If they shall fall away," signifying that there is a possibility of their falling away. But mark, if they do fall, "it is impossible to renew them again unto repentance;" and then gives his reasons, which are these, "Seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame." This Scripture is certainly against such a theory as the above.

But again, when such declare that their life is too pure and faultless that they cannot sin, they must of necessity be dispossessed of sin and all sinful inclinations. If they take such a position, as they necessarily must, they make the inspired penman to say what is not true, or else do not speak the truth themselves.

Here is what John, an inspired writer, says on the subject, in his first epistle, first chapter and eighth verse: "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." You perceive that John does not say ye, but "If we Christians say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." As a warning to all let me close my article with the language of the apostle Paul to the Corinthian brethren, 1 Cor. 10: 12, "Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall."

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Can a Brother Serve as Juror in the Trial of a Criminal for Murder?

BY J. W. POPE.

I here give my opinion of the matter. I think we ought to have nothing to do with the law, and, especially, in a case of that kind. Our great King when here upon earth said, "Judge not that ye be not judged." Matth. 7: 1

Now the law truly says: "He that sheddeth man's blood, by name shall his blood be shed;" but shall we live by the law, or by faith? I think the answer would be, we must live by faith, if we expect to wear that starry crown. Paul, in his epistle to the Galatians, 3: 1 says: "For as many as are of the works of the law, are under the curse; For it is written, cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them." "But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident; for The just shall live by faith. And the law is not of faith; but, The man that doeth them shall live in them. Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us." (Verses 11-13)

Moreover brethren, look at the oath a juror must take before he is accepted. I will here quote some of the oath. "Have you any conscientious scruples which will prevent you from convicting a man punishable with death?" How could a true Christian say he had not? The law is not for the Christian, but for the ungodly, and disobedient. "Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions." "The law was our schoolmaster to bring us into Christ, that we may be justified by faith." But we know that the law is good, if it be lawfully used. Will some kind brother answer this, and give all the scriptural testimony convenient? I remain your brother in the ties of the gospel.

The Kindness of Jesus.

We may observe the kindness of Jesus in little things. He who could heal the sick and raise the dead by his word, yet always shows himself mindful of the least attentions, courtesies, and charities of every-day life. While nothing that is both great and merciful is beyond his power, nothing that is both little and kind is too small for his love. The washing of the disciple's feet was not necessary, but it was a loving act on his part, and contributed to their comfort. Over and above what is required and expected of a child, there are a thousand kindnesses that he can render to parents, brothers, sisters, schoolmates, neighbors. Let the child be taught to be on the watch for opportunities of service, especially to the aged, the poor, the neglected and those younger than himself; and if there are things to be done for others that might seem irksome, disagreeable, or humiliating, let him remember him, the Lord of men and of angels, who never thought anything beneath him which could be of any human being.—Dr. Peabody.

It is easy to keep that armor bright which is daily used, but hanging by the wall till it be rusty, it will take some time and pains to furbish it over again. If an instrument be daily played upon, it is easily kept in tune; but let it be a while neglected and the strings and frets break, the bridge flies off, and no small labor is required to bring it into order again. And thus also it is in things spiritual in performance of holy duties; if we continue them with a settled constancy they will be easy, familiar and delightful to us; but, if once intermitted, it is a new work to begin again, and the former estate will not be attained but with much endeavor and great difficulty.—Christian at Work.

HUMAN philosophy in regard to "laying up a good foundation against the time to come" is—hoarding. God's philosophy is, distributing. Distributed treasure, investments in works of benevolence, are never lost; treasure hoarded frequently makes to itself wings and flies away. Benevolent investments are not subject to trade-fluctuations or money-panics. They are under divine guardianship, sure to bring interest, dividends, and the ultimatum—eternal life.

OLD Simeon in the temple had a song on his lips, Christ in his arms, and heaven in his soul.

For The Young.

Robbie's Reward.

"Pins and pocket-combs! Pins and pocket combs!"

Robbie's voice was very low; for he was tired, and almost faint for want of food. The crowd in the waiting-room was indifferent, and seemed to have little need of such wares as his: so his sales were very small.

"Here little boy," said a voice behind him; "you have just what I want. This ugly rent must be pinned up till I can get home. I'll take this paper. Harvey, will you pay this little fellow for a paper of pins?"

The beautiful woman turned to the young man beside her; and he looked as though it would be a pleasure to do anything for her.

He was just counting a handful of change which he had taken from his pocket, when he was interrupted.

"No, no, ma'am!" said Robbie, eagerly. "Don't take that paper; it isn't a whole one. I cut off a row of pins from it this morning, for poor little Hannah to dress her doll with."

"Never mind, little man," said the young lady, gayly. "A tenth part of these I have will be more than I want; so I shall only have the less to throw away when I'm done with them."

"Then don't pay so much," persisted Robbie; and he handed back two cents to the gentleman, who had given him ten.

"Well, little man," said Harvey, "aren't your ideas of morals most too big for such a little head as yours? How do you ever expect to get a living, if you don't cheat a little now and then?"

Robbie's brown eyes were open very wide as he heard this query.

"But I'd rather not live at all than to live dishonestly."

"Who taught you all these things about right and wrong?" the gentleman asked.

"My mother," replied Robbie. "And I think she would rather I should die, and come to her in heaven, an honest, upright boy, than to live ever so well on stolen money."

"Yes, yes!" said Harvey, "I dare say you are right; and you are a noble boy to remember such a mother's teachings."

Little Robbie went wearily on with his work, carrying, nevertheless, a quiet conscience with him, for all he was so tired; he had overcome one little temptation.

The lady and gentleman stepped upon the train, and were gone.

Harvey Holeman was very thoughtful; and his gay companion had to reprove him for his silence.

"You've been gazing at the trestle-work of Hampden Bridge ever since we came in sight. One would think you were planning to build a bridge of your own, by the way you study that."

"So I am, Belle," he replied; "or, rather, I've built it, and crossed it already, and find myself on the safe side of a great chasm of temptation; for, see here! you don't know how strongly I've been tempted, lately, to withhold those bonds that I know, in honor, ought to go to redeem my father's pledge. They would help me so much by increasing my capital just now, as I am starting in business. But that little pin-peddler, back there, has taught me a lesson. I believe, like him, I'll starve on honesty, rather than fatten on theft."

But a few weeks later, after Harvey Holeman's business was well established, the station agent of Beacon City received a letter inquiring after the little peddler of pins and pocket-combs, and relating his little act of honesty.

Later still, honest Robbie was received in Mr. Holeman's home and business interests, to serve, first as errand boy, and then as clerk.

Which was the better reward for Robbie,—the fine position which his honesty had gained for him, or the consciousness of having influenced for good a fellow-man? He thought the latter. — Well Spring.

A Blind Boy's Patience.

The other day I went to see a little blind boy. Scarlet fever had settled in his eyes, and for many months he has not seen at all. He used to be a sprightly little fellow, upon the run everywhere.

"Well, my dear boy," I said, "this is hard for you, is it not?"

He did not answer for a moment; then he said, "I don't know that I ought to say hard; God knows best;" but his lip quivered, and a little tear stole down his cheek.

"Yes, my child; you have a kind heavenly Father, who loves you and feels for you more than your mother does."

"I know it, sir," said the little boy, "and it comforts me."

"I wish Jesus were here to cure Frank," said his little sister.

"Well," said I, "he will open little Frank's eyes to see what a good Savior he is. He will show him that a blind heart is worse than blind eyes; and he will cure it, and make him see and enjoy beautiful heavenly things, so that he may sit here and be a thousand times happier than many children who are running about."

"I can't help wishing he could see," said Lizzie.

"I dare say; but I hope you don't try to make Frank discontented."

"Frank isn't discontented," said Lizzie earnestly; "he loves God, and love sets everything right and makes its own sunshine; does it not Frank?"

"I don't feel cross, now," said the little blind boy meekly. "When I'm alone I pray and sing my Sabbath-school hymn, and sing and sing; and God is in the room, and it feels light, and—and—I forget I'm blind at all;" and a sweet light stole over his pale features as he spoke—it was heavenly light, I was sure.— Young Reaper.

His Own Way.

Johnny wanted very much to "help" his mother bake pies one morning. So she gave him a piece of dough, the cover of a starch box for a pastry board, and a clothes-pin for a rolling pin.

When he had rolled so hard that his face was very red, he puts his little pie on the stove hearth to bake; and then he saw the pretty soft steam puffing out of the kettle. He tried to catch it in his hand, but it flew away. Then he put his fingers under the nose of the kettle. His mother saw him, and cried: "O, Johnny, take care or you'll burn your fingers, my dear."

"Steam can't burn!" cried wise Johnny; "only fire burns."

"You must not try it. Believe me, it will burn you. Do stop Johnny."

"O, dear," cried Johnny, "why can't I have my own way sometimes. I do like my own way. When I am a big man I mean to stand and poke my finger in the tea kettle all day, thometime, and have my own way, and—"

Poor Johnny did not wait till he was a big man to do this; a scream of pain told that he had had his own way already.

The dear little white fingers were sadly burned, and for hours Johnny cried and jumped about so that his mother could hardly hold him on her lap.

"O! O! O! what shall I do! what shall I do! O, dear mamma, I'll never have my own way again at all though I live! When I am a great man, I'll never put my fingers in the tea kettle. O, dear, dear!"

Take care, little folks, how you take your own way; there are worse fogs in the world than Johnny's steam. Your parents are wiser than you; and they love you too well to deny you any harmless pleasure.— Watchman.

GOODNESS does not only communicate favors and kindness—it even in some measure communicates itself. Just as those who have been long among the most fragrant objects not only are delighted with the odor that breathes from them; some of the very fragrant cleaves to and remains with them. They become fragrant themselves, by staying long among objects that are so.— Seed.

That man lacks something who has not known trouble.

RULES FOR AGENTS.

1. At the head of every letter give the name of your own post-office, county and State; and the date on which it is written.
2. Write the name and give the full address of every subscriber you send, as legibly as you can.
3. Write "New" before the names of all new subscribers.
4. In ordering a change of address, give the post-office, county, and State, to which the paper is sent, as well as the post-office, county, and State to which it is to be sent.
5. Do not mix up different items of business; but take up and finish one item before you take up another.
6. Write items intended for publication on a separate slip.
7. Make every lawful effort to obtain subscribers, and to do good in whatever way you can.
8. Send money by drafts, post-office money orders, or registered letters.
9. Observe the above rules, and you will expedite business, save us from much trouble, and yourselves and our subscribers from disappointments and vexation.

THE DIGNITY OF MAN.

"Honor all men."—1 PETER ii. 17.

These words plainly show that though Christians are to come out from the world and to be a separate people—"a holy nation"—they are not to disregard, much less despise their fellow-men. They are to render "honor to whom honor is due," Rom. xiii. 17; they are to honor the king, 1 Peter ii. 17; and children are to honor their parents, Eph. vi. 2; husbands are to honor their wives, 1 Peter iii. 7; widows are to be honored, 1 Tim. v. 3; masters are to be honored, 1 Tim. vi. 1; elders are to be counted worthy of double honor, 1 Tim. v. 17; God is to be honored, Rev. iv. 11. But while honor is to be given unto all these, and that as they are respectively deserving of honor, there is a degree or measure of honor to be given to all men. Honor here means dignity, civility, respect. And every man, however poor, degraded, or wretched he may be, is worthy of some honor.

The spirit of the precept which requires us to "honor all men," forbids us to despise, or hate, or injure any man, however worthless and wicked he may be. For while the Psalmist makes the contemning of a vile person a mark of the pious, he does not mean that we are to contemn the person of the vile, but their vile conduct. Ps. xv. 3. It also requires that we feel a respect in our hearts for every man, and that our treatment of him should correspond to that respect.—It is not the honor we show to moral excellency, or to high moral worth, that we are, in the precept under consideration, to show to all men. For many men are destitute, apparently, of all moral excellency. When the apostle in describing a class of men, describes them thus: "Their throat is an open sepulchre; with their tongues they have used deceit; the poison of asps is under their lips; whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness: their feet are swift to shed blood: destruction and misery are in their ways: and the way of peace they have not known: there is no fear of God before their eyes," Rom. iii. 13-18, there is surely no moral excellency in them to honor, and yet we must honor even such, for we are to honor "all men."

The ground, then, upon which we are to honor all men, is not their moral character, for of this some seem destitute. And so far from their having anything of the character of moral goodness upon which to demand our honor, the absence of such moral goodness, and the presence of much that is evil in their characters, makes their characters deserving of our disapprobation and contempt, rather than of our approbation and honor. The ground upon which men as men are to be honored is found in the intelligent, responsible, and moral nature which they possess. Every human being that is really a man, has the capacity of understanding the truth, of discerning what is true from what is false, and what is right from what is wrong; every man is endowed with the faculty, which may be so improved and cultivated as to enable him to know, to love, to serve, to worship, and to enjoy God; every man possesses within him the germ of an eternal existence.—An eternity of expanding intellect, of ever-growing conformity in moral excellency to the holy character of God, and of ever-increasing happiness, or of degradation, pain and sorrow, is before every human being. And the faculties, intellectual and moral, which men possess, and which are susceptible of being so much improved as to constitute them fit companions for the holy angels and for God himself, impart a degree of dignity and nobility to them, and afford the ground upon which honor for them is claimed by the divine authority requiring us to "honor all men."

That man, as he was originally made, being made "upright," Eccl. vii. 29, and in the "image" and after the "likeness" of God, Gen. i. 26, was deserving of honor from his fellow-men, is very apparent and needs no proof. But changed and fallen as he now is, and having lost so much of his original dignity and greatness, there may seem to be but little if anything in him deserving of honor. But the grounds upon which he is to be honored, and which were presented in the preceding paragraph, are the remains of the noble and dignified nature which he once possessed. A great change has indeed taken place in man, especially in his moral character. And we may say in the language of the prophet, "How is the gold become dim! how is the most fine gold changed!" Lam. iv. 1. "The lamps are extinct, the altar overturned, the light and love are now vanished, which did, the oneshine with so heavenly brightness, the other burn with so pious fervor; the golden candlestick is displaced, and thrown away as a useless thing, to make room for the throne of the prince of darkness; the sacred incense, which sent rolling up in clouds its rich perfume, is exchanged for a poisonous, hellish vapor, and here is, 'instead of a sweet savor, a stench.' The comely order of this house is turned all into confusion; the 'beauties of holiness' into noisome impurities; the house of prayer into a den of thieves; for every lust is a thief, and every theft sacrilege. He that invites you to take a view of the soul of man, gives you but such another prospect, and doth but say to you, 'Behold the desolation;' all things rude and waste. So that should there be any pretence to the divine presence, it might be said, If God be here, why is it thus? The faded glory, the darkness, the disorder, the impurity, the decayed state, in all respects, of this temple, too plainly show the great inhabitant is gone."

It is true "the glory has departed," and a great change has taken place in man, but there yet remain traces of his original greatness. "His soul, which once, as an unbroken mirror, reflected back the image of his God in which he was created, even now, though broken and shattered by the fall, catches, in its scattered but brilliant fragments, some portions of that image, and reflects them in unsullied beauty. We have an innate love of justice, truth, and goodness, although we are so corrupted by our lapse from original rectitude, that we seldom pursue them with unwavering and unvarying steps. The eyes even of the wicked and debased will fill with tears at a narrative of the sufferings of self devotion and disinterested love. We admire truth when we do not practice it. We value justice in the abstract when our own dealings are unjust. We set up a standard of virtue, and profess to regard it almost with worship, while we dally with vice and wantonness, and offer them the first fruits of our gains and toil." The presence of such powers in man though not always exercised as they might be, and as they should be, entitle him to respect and honor, and hence the the divine precept requiring Christians to "honor all men."

And why should not Christians "honor all men," since God himself has done so, and set the example? He gave the most precious gift that his boundless possessions could furnish—that of his "only begotten Son," as a ransom for them. He has put an infinite value upon men by paying an infinite value for their redemption.—He follows men in their guilty wanderings with his calls, pleadings, and entreaties, saying, "How shall I give thee up?" And what honor has our Redeemer done to man! As men, the objects of his love, compassion, and sympathy, were partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them, who through fear of death were all their life subject to bondage." Heb. ii. 14, 15. He weeps tears of agony for human woe, and bathes the sin-stained earth, man's dwelling-place, with his mingled tears and blood. He united his own purity with the corruptions of men, and laid down his own life in death, all to save precious humanity on which divinity had stamped its image, and imparted to its race of rational intelligences an everlasting being.

Our subject is suggestive of practical truth. If all men are to be honored by Christians, and if they are honored by heaven, they should feel that there is a value and dignity attached to them which show they were not designed to be slaves of sin; and they should not desecrate their noble powers, dishonor their Maker, and neglect the redemption that has been purchased for them at so costly a sacrifice as the life of the Son of God. And while all men should appreciate their own worth, and the powers with which God has endowed them, making them susceptible of great enjoyment or great suffering, according to the moral character attached to their lives, Christians should understand the practical use of the precept requiring them to "honor all men," and carry it out in all their intercourse and dealings with men.

The want of a proper observance of this precept, has led tyrants to disregard the rights of men in their power, and to oppress nations; has fastened the yoke of slavery on the feeble and led men to make property of their brethren; has led kings, princes, and rulers to sport with human life, and to shed the blood of millions; has led the rich to oppress the poor and to shut the bowels of compassion to their complaints; has been the cause of much of the suffering among men which a willingness to afford relief would have prevented. Whereas, the proper observance of this divine precept requiring us to "honor all men," on the ground that every human being, from the constitution of his nature, and from the destiny which awaits him, is entitled to honor, will awaken an interest in the welfare of every human being, and prompt a feeling of sympathy, benevolence, and charity toward him. And with such a feeling, help will be rendered when it is in our power to do so. And no human being possessing a vestige of manhood, however he may be sunk in vice, will be excluded from our respect and sympathy. The criminal in his cell, and the drunkard wallowing in the mire, will not be passed by with the indifference the priest showed to the man who fell among thieves, but they will receive the sympathy from the Christian that the sufferer received from the Samaritan.

The feeling of respect for man, as man, which the divine precept under consideration inculcates, should show itself in all our conduct toward our fellow-men, even to those who are inferior to us in education, or talent, or in moral character, or wealth, or standing in society. And as they are susceptible of improvement and elevation, we should use our best endeavors to improve and elevate them.—We should seek to lessen the sorrow and suffering, and to increase the happiness of all men, since we are to "honor all men," and this is the way we can honor them. But that great nature with which man was originally endowed by his Maker, and the remains of which entitle him to the honor we are required to show him, affords a powerful plea for Christians to labor for the promotion of his spiritual and highest interests—his salvation. Because man with all his capacity for enjoyment and suffering may be lost to himself, to his race, and to his God, but may, by the proper efforts of Christians, be saved, to enjoy the blessing of heaven himself, and to be a blessing to his race, and an honor to his God and Savior, great responsibility rests on Christians, and no sacrifice should be withheld, and no labor spared that can be made available in rescuing souls from sin and ruin, and in preparing them for heaven. And in honoring men from proper motives, and in the proper way, we shall promote our own honor, and be honored by the Lord.

A TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

The Church Advocate, the church organ of the Church of God, or the body of Christians best known by some as Wine-brennarians, makes the following honorable allusion to our brotherhood: "The Brethren" are now reported as numbering from 100,000 to 150,000 members and adherents in this country. This, we suppose, is an outside estimate, as it is well known that they are opposed to keeping accurate statistics. Whether they are thus numerous or not, one thing is generally admitted, that they have a great deal of practical godliness among them." This is an honorable acknowledgment. If the character of our brotherhood hitherto has been such as to deserve this tribute of respect, may it in the future be still more deserving of it. Practical godliness is a suggestive phrase. "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," said our Redeemer. And if they worked, they worked after a godly manner, and practical godliness characterized all their operations in the kingdom of nature and in that of grace. If then the Father, whose children we profess to be, works, and if the Son, whose example we profess to follow, also works, surely "practical godliness" should characterize all Christian believers making the profession they do. And can there be any godliness, recognized as such by the Bible, that is not practical? We presume there cannot.

CANDID.—BACKWARD OR FORWARD?

Mr. Isaac Errett of Cincinnati, one of the most able and influential ministers and writers among the Disciples, and editor of the Christian Standard, a leading paper in that church, in replying to a correspondent's query involving the manner of putting a person into the water when he is baptized, gives the following candid answer upon that subject: "As to the mode of the immersion, whether forward or backward, we have no certain knowledge. But we incline to the opinion that the backward motion in immersing is modern and western—that in the East the candidates knelt in the water and were immersed face foremost." The italicizing is ours.

NOTICE.

As harvest is now generally over, and as it appears from the reports in our papers from the different states that the Lord has blessed us with a very fair, and in some places with a bountiful crop, we would say to those who are owing us, that we are needing funds, and that it will be a great accommodation to us to receive from our friends what is due us. We have waited, and with some we have waited a considerable while, being reluctant to allude to the subject. But needing what is due us, we are necessitated to call upon our friends who are in arrears with us, and hope that they will appreciate our situation as well as their own, and endeavor to comply with our request.

The amount due us from a number of our subscribers is not large, but we hope they will not be indifferent to the subject from that consideration, since the amount from each may be small, but in the aggregate from that class it will be considerable, and hence of importance to us. Our agents and all others to whom this notice applies, will please do their utmost to respond favorably to our request, and as soon as possible.

MINUTES OF THE DISTRICT MEETING OF WESTERN PA.

These Minutes are now ready, and any brethren in the District wanting them will please send us their orders. Should any brethren who gave us their orders, not receive their Minutes, they will please inform us. Terms: Single copy, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.

THE GERMAN MINUTES.

We can now supply our brethren with German Minutes, and we solicit orders from our German brethren. There are comparatively few who want the German, and we hope that brethren who can use them to advantage, will send for them.—Price, 10 cents single copy, and 75 cents per dozen.

ALMANAC FOR 1877.

How swiftly time glides along! More than a year has passed since we made a call for matter for our Almanac for 1876. That call met with a sufficient response to enable us to publish an Almanac that gives pretty general satisfaction; still it is not altogether what we wished it to be, and we hope that future efforts may show an improvement. We want an Almanac for 1877, and not only an Almanac, but a good one. To publish such an Almanac will require considerable labor and care. These we are willing to give it; but we shall still be obliged to come with our usual call for help. Much will depend upon the manner in which this call shall be responded to. It is now nearly a month later than it was when we made our call for help last year; and we remember that even then some contributions, and many corrections in the names and addresses of ministers, came in too late. Now we do not think there is any necessity for this tardiness; and if there is not, we do hope that our readers will come right forward to our assistance without any delay. We want to have

1. A number of short articles, such as our readers and patrons would like to see in our Almanac for 1877, brief histories of different branches of the church, and biographies or biographical sketches of some of our faithful brethren or sisters who have gone to their rest; short and striking incidents or episodes in the lives of members either living or deceased.

2. Announcements of the different District Meetings for the spring of 1877, and, if possible, the place where the next Annual Meeting shall be held.

3. A thorough revision of the names and addresses of ministers. A comparison of the list as published in former years shows that many changes of address occur; and then, too, many new names are being added to the number while many others are to be dropped, for different causes, the most common of which is death.

4. Brief reports of Sunday-schools, of churches, and Districts, according to the samples given in this year's Almanac. In order to divide the work, and to introduce some system, we will suggest that Secretaries of Sunday-schools, and the Corresponding Secretaries of Districts, are the proper persons to forward Sunday-school and District reports. The reports of churches should be made by the elders or overseers; but where churches have a secretary, as every church ought to have, secretary should attend to it, if the elder fails. All our ministers, and, in fact, all our members should interest themselves in correcting the ministerial list. This would be a mere trifle, if all would go to work; but we cannot possibly do it unless our members help us. Shall we have this help?

Now this matter is before you. What response shall we have? You all want a good Almanac. Will you help us now, right now, so that we can publish such an Almanac? We need your help; we ask for it; and it is now for you to say whether we shall have it. Remember, NO UNNECESSARY DELAY. B.

Cleanings and Settings.

Mount Pleasant Institute.

The closing exercises of the school began on Saturday, June 24th, and ended on Thursday, June 29th. They included a Sermon to Students by Rev. L. Stephens; Examination of Classes; Anniversary of the Everett Literary Society—Orator, H. G. Weston, D. D.; Baccalaureate Address by the same; Exercises of the Graduating Class; Commencement Dinner, and Meeting of the Board of Trustees. We publish herewith the programme of the Class exercises. A full account of the Commencement can be had by applying to Principal J. Jones, Mt. Pleasant.

BROTHER John A. Studebaker of Greenfield, Kan., July 2nd, says:

"We are still trying to serve the Lord as best we can. There are still a few entering into the fold. Yesterday was the day for our regular quarterly council, but rain prevented us from having it. We had a prayer-meeting at my house last night. The members are all in union as far as I know."

Bro. S. R. Holsinger of Carleton, Thayer Co., Nebr., July 9th, says:

"We had a good rain which will make our corn crop. We are cutting our barley which is a pretty good crop. We think Nebraska has redeemed her reputation as crops are good. People are cheerful, and we try to be thankful to our Father in heaven."

BROTHER David Rothrock of Illinois, says:

"As I see so many calls for preaching in the West I will also extend an invitation. We do not live so far in, only 40 miles west of Terre Haute, Ind. We would like to have some speaker come and see us and our country. We have no regular preaching here. Our Station is Casey on the St. Louis Vandalia Terre Haute and Indianapolis railroad. If there is any one who would wish to correspond with me he will address me at Hazel Dell, Cumberland Co., Ill."

Correspondence.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood.

MILAN, Sullivan Co., Mo.,
July 6, 1876.

Dear fellow-traveler to the bar of God—I have for sometime felt that I would like to talk to you through the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, as I am here where there are no members near and only five or six in the county that I know of, and I don't have the pleasure of being with them very often on account of the distance we live apart. But although I am deprived of being with my brethren and sisters, I know I have an Elder Brother who is ever with me, and who has raised me up from a bed of affliction to which I was confined for nearly two years, and has given me the natural use of my limbs once more, for which I am very thankful, and shall endeavor in my feeble way to serve him the rest of my days, and as my bodily strength increases—if it should be the Lord's will that it should increase—I trust and pray that my spiritual strength may increase. For why was this fleeting breath renewed but to renew his praise? For some time before I was taken down I was not satisfied about my eternal welfare, although I had been a member of the Christian Church for several years, and as a general thing I tried to do the best I knew; but I was too apt to give way to temptations, and sometimes I sinned more than any one ought to do, especially those that are professing to live a Christian life. At the same time I wanted to do right. But it seemed as though my faith was not strong enough to resist temptations. It so happened by God's will that a relative of mine had some of the Christum Family Companions that he had received from a kind Brother, and I got some of them to read, and when I read how the Brethren practiced the commands of our blessed Savior I felt convinced that they were nearer right than any church I had yet heard of, and I wished to unite with them and to live a Christian life in deed and truth, which I knew I had not done. So I wrote to Elder Daniel Zook, whose address I had learned from my relative, to come down, telling him my desire to unite with the Brethren by baptism. But when the kind brother arrived I was confined to my bed very sick, and all they could do for me was to sing and pray with me and encourage me to trust in God, and bid me farewell with but little hopes of ever seeing me in this world again. But the Lord knoweth best, and all things are possible with him. So after I had lain on a bed of affliction helpless for 15 or 16 months, the kind brother again visited us, and I then fully resigned myself to the will of the Lord, and in a helpless condition was taken to the water and immersed, and on the following day I was anointed with oil in the name of the Lord, and he was merciful unto me and in his kindness raised me up. From that time I began to amend, and today I enjoy the blessed privilege of being able to help do my house-work and of walking out in the open air, and enjoy moderate health, for all which I fear I am not thankful enough. I know I am too unmindful of the kindness the Lord has shown to me, and too often give way to temptations. Brethren and sisters, all you that may chance to read this, remember me in your prayers; and O, sinners! if any such should happen to glance at these lines, turn before you are laid on a bed of affliction—turn while in good health, and then when sickness falls upon you and you know not what hour you are to be called away, you will not have that horrible doubt as to your destiny after death. We know that we all must pass away sooner or later, and how many even while enjoying good health are cut down by some accident. Surely, if we thought more about these things we would ever be on our guard and not partake of the follies of the world so often. How happy we feel if we know we have done right! But if our conscience tells us we have done wrong, how miserable and guilty we feel! That peaceful, contented mind that every true follower of Christ has, will not be ours unless we obey him in all things whatsoever he has commanded us. So, dear brethren and friends, let us be watchful and prayerful, that by our walk we may encourage others to do the will of our heavenly Father; for remember, he that converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death and shall hide a multitude of sins. Let us walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love, endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace; and let us not be weary in well-doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not. "Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think according to the power that worketh in us, unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus, throughout all ages, world without end. Amen."

Written in love by your humble sister in the Lord, MARY E. DAVIS.

The Covering of the Head.

Much Esteemed Friend:

In answer to your note of inquiry concerning the eleventh chapter of Paul's First Letter to the church at Corinth, from the first to the seventeenth, which refers to the covering of the head, you wish to know how I make out the case.

Paul settles the matter of the covering for the Corinthians and us by saying, "We have no such custom as for brethren to pray or prophesy with their heads covered, neither the churches of God." (ver. 16). And as to churches that are not God's we may expect to see some queer things.

I take the position that the instruction given by Paul was to every believing man and woman, married or unmarried. For the terms man and woman are used in this chapter in the plural number, meaning all prophesying men and women. So that Paul is arguing what is proper and right for all believing men and women in ever capacity of Christian worship.

In the 4th verse you see that a man praying or prophesying with his head covered dishonoreth his head. (5th v.) But every woman praying or prophesying with her head uncovered dishonoreth her head, so that it is evident to me at least, that the apostle is only showing what the proper order is in a pious family, or in a body of persons uniting themselves by the authority of God's law into a church organization for holy services.

In reading the 4th and 5th verses many persons' minds are apt to become confused with the 14th and 15th verses, where the apostle is speaking of nature, that if a woman have long hair it is a glory to her; for her hair is given her as a covering.—Now if the apostle did mean in the 4th and 5th verses that the hair was the covering that the believing man should have off, and the believing woman should have on her head, let us read the 4th and 5th verses with that definition and see how it will do:

"Every man praying or prophesying having his hair on his head, dishonoreth his head. But every woman praying or prophesying with her hair off of her head, dishonoreth her head: for that is even all one as if she was shaven or shorn."

What! Is Paul going to have a woman shaven or shorn, that has no hair on her head? Hence, you see that kind of reasoning would be too simple for good nonsense, let alone good sense. Then we see that the apostle is speaking of a special covering, or at least it seems plain to me. Paul does not say that because a bonnet is good to keep the head warm on a cold day, or that a bonnet or kerchief is good to keep the sun's glittering rays from dazzling the eyes, or the heat off the head, therefore the woman ought to have power on her head; not a word of it. These the apostle has no objections to, to be worn for the above mentioned advantages. But the covering he alludes to is to be a special covering, made and worn because of the angels, not for the other class of reasons, nor because it is merely to fill the order of the Brethren church, but to secure the favor of God, and the help communicated through the instrumentality of angels, who are ministering spirits, ministering unto those who are heirs of salvation.

Next, as to when she shall wear it.—Why, the Apostle is plain, for he does not say that "a woman praying and prophesying," but "a woman praying or prophesying," showing that it is not only in prophesying or more public exercises that she shall be covered; but also in prayer, showing plainly that upon every proper occasion or fixed time for prayer, whether in the church or at home, morning or evening or meal time, or every occasion that gives place consistent for bodily position, or order to be observed in prayer.

Not as some say, she should wear it all the time, while over the wash-tub on a hot summer day, or around her red hot cooking-stove, or in pulling weeds in the garden, for if so, then women ought to be bareheaded all the time.

Then we learn it to be a covering worn on her head, one if she wears it gives her power then to fellowship and privileges in the church, and to prophesy or pray, and be God's acceptable worshiper, and also perfect her Christian character. But if she will not wear it on all proper occasions of worship she incurs the displeasure of God and of angels, and has no encouragement to pray, or say amen to the giving of thanks offered up by the church or in the family with a view of making such prayer her own.

I have now given you my views on the subject, as best I could, and hope may be satisfactory to you. Take the Scriptures and compare my views with them, and then you will be able to know whether they are reasonable or not.

The Full Beard.

Dear Brethren Editors :

This subject has been agitated through the columns of your paper, until, no doubt, it has to some extent become disagreeable; but I beg the privilege of making a few remarks. I was not aware, until recently, that the Brethren in some parts were taking such a decided stand against the wearing of the beard as God has made it to grow. What right brethren have to take "offense" at what God has caused to grow on almost every man's face, I would be glad to know. They tell us it is "fashionable." Suppose it is; if God has made it a fashion, why need brethren object? What "God hath joined together let not man put asunder." Surely God has joined this "appendage to the upper lip," and as long as it is kept free from filth, as it always should be, it ought not to be any more offensive than the lips. We have no command in the New Testament that I know anything about either to let the beard grow or to cut it off, but I believe the same argument Paul used to show that "if a woman have long hair it is a glory to her, for her hair is given her for a covering," would prove that brethren may with consistency wear a full beard. Brethren, "doth not even nature itself teach you" that if a man have a full beard it is a glory to him? Is it not given him for a covering? And I believe if it had been so necessary for the people of God to shave, the apostle would have mentioned it when he took so much pains to speak about the hair. Observe when men shave what an effort nature puts forth until the skin is covered. If the beard always grew as rapidly as the first week or two after it is shaved off, men's beards would soon reach their waists. But not so.—When the skin is covered it does not grow as fast. I wear a full beard, and am in favor of the Brethren wearing full beards. But have I any right to be offended because some of my brethren shave? For my part I cannot see where there would be any "charity" in such actions. If any brother would get so strenuous that he would not salute another because he wore a full beard, I am afraid if Jesus were here he would serve him like Peter did when he wanted to wash his feet. Surely this must be "straining at a goat." I know many "orderly, faithful members" of both classes; and if some of the members wish to shave off some of their beard and do not do it for fashion, changing from one style to another, I do not feel like compelling them to wear a full beard, and would ask the same privilege for myself and brethren who do wear a full beard.

Brethren, are there not other things more necessary than the style of wearing the beard? Here the "Stein Fund" has been open for the support of the Brethren for a considerable length of time, and has only reached the small sum of one hundred and twenty-three dollars! The "Mission Fund" has done some better, but has not received the support it should have had. The "Poor Fund" is doing quite well, and I am glad to see it so prosperous. These certainly are "good works"; and is it not better that we drop the beard question for a while, and support these more than we have. The article written by Bro. Beer in No. 22, page 346, of PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, and headed, "What are We Doing?" deserved something more than a hasty perusal. I would to God that the facts therein contained could be impressed upon our minds so that we couldn't forget them.

A few weeks ago I was made to sympathize with Bro. W. B. Soll of Martinsville, Mo., whose letter was published some time ago. He says, "I have now been trying to labor for the good of the Master's cause for over 8 years and have never yet had a way of traveling of my own, but a foot, and I am now compelled to give it up as my limbs pain me for days after making a trip of 15 or 20 miles." The brother seems to be zealous. He only asks for ministerial aid. But I feel that something more is required of us.—Here we see our "brother have need," and how dare we shut up our "bowels of compassion?" I feel like sending one dollar to the editors to start a fund to get this brother a horse, so that he may still continue to fill his appointments and labor for the salvation of souls. I do not even know this brother or how he wears his beard; it is enough to know that in his straitened circumstances he has labored eight years for the cause of Christ.—Who else will help? Although I am in poor circumstances myself, I feel like "casting my bread upon the waters."—Let us not let the cause suffer for the want of money. "Many hands make light work," and if we all put in a mite they may all be supplied. "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord, and that which he hath given will he pay him again." Brethren, what better encouragement do we want?

Yours in love,

W. B. WOODARD.

Vinton, Iowa, July 1, 1876.

July 15, 1876.

This morning finds me writing at Gideon Landis's. His wife is a sister in the church. He was drowned in the time of the war. Some hopes of him coming back in the church. This is the second time that we visited him and family. They truly are very kind. We came here yesterday, and will stay till tomorrow, when we expect to preach at Markle.

Now something that is in the past.—On the 27th of June we went from North Manchester to Warsaw, by railroad, then on the Pittsburgh and Chicago railroad near to where the meeting was on the 28th of June, in the Yellow River District in Marshall county, Ind. Went to the place of meeting on the morning of the 28th. Met very few ministering brethren from other districts. It being a rainy morning, people were slow in coming in. Meeting opened at 11 o'clock. After preaching dinner was served for all. Met again at 6 o'clock to attend to the ordinances of the house of the Lord, which were strictly attended to in the best of order. While we were breaking the bread to the sisters, we talked some to the spectators who were looking on. While we were talking to them we saw many weeping and some crying aloud. We could not help but weep with and for them. Oh, may the good Lord help them to come into the fold of Christ, is my prayer.

Early next morning we met for prayer, after prayer, breakfast; then preaching again. After a few short discourses meeting closed in good order. The best of feeling prevailed throughout the entire congregation. One received by baptism at this meeting. We have learned that some more have been added since that meeting. Jacob Shively, Daniel Shively, and Nathaniel Drake are the Elders in this district. Some other help in the ministry. From what we learned this church is in a healthy condition.

From this meeting we were conveyed to Plymouth by Bro. David Wolf, and from Plymouth by a young man to Bro. John Knisley's, a cousin of ours. We stayed with them till the next day after dinner, then went with them to their meeting house. Meeting commenced at 4 o'clock in the evening of June 30th.—Their commodious house was soon pretty well filled. Meeting opened with exhortation, singing, and prayer, and then reading of part of the 11th chapter of 1 Corinthians. Some very appropriate remarks on self-examination were made by the brethren. Meeting closed by prayer. After a short intermission, met again at 6 o'clock to attend to the institutions of the Lord's house, which were strictly attended to according to the example of the Savior, in the best of order, except a little too much noise in the house, which we trust, was confined to the spectators. Had some preaching next morning, which created quite a feeling among the people. Sinners were made to weep and mourn, and saints made to rejoice to see sinners come on the side of the Lord. Four came out for baptism. Surely this was a heavenly place for us. Here we met Bro. Wrightsman, from South Bend, for the first time, and glad see him contend so earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. I was very sorry I had to leave my brethren and sisters and friends at this place so abruptly to meet my appointments in the evening and next day in Wells county, Indiana.

Remember me in your prayers.

SAMUEL MURRAY.

Church News and a Proposition.

Dear Primitive Christian:

You make your weekly visit to us in our far western home filled with news from all parts of the brotherhood, which is very interesting to us; also the many wholesome instructions from the pens of our dear brethren and sisters. We do not see how we could do without our paper. It is like the visiting of a long absent friend. We read and then give it to our neighbors, which we think is the best use we can make of it.

Perhaps some of your readers remember our promise in a former No., that after our division we would give you our proceedings. According to arrangements we, the members of the Platte Valley church, met on the 15th of June, at the house of Bro. Oliver Shirk, Bro. C. Long being with us, a choice for one speaker and one deacon was held. The lot for speaker fell on Bro. John Holler, a good and exemplary member. We hope he will fill his call and be instrumental in doing much good, as there is much need of preaching here and so many calls. The constant cry is, "Come and preach for us." The lot for deacon fell on Bro. John Keller. Hope he will also discharge his duties fully.—Brethren and sisters pray for our young officials that they may be workmen that need not be ashamed, and that our little church may prosper and grow, and many souls come to Christ. All that have a desire to come west, come and settle here and swell our number, as I think we have as fine a country as can be found in Nebraska. All kinds of grain and vegetables in abundance. Some homesteads can be taken yet, well watered, &c. I have 480 acres of prairie land (some breaking on it) that I will lease in lots of 40 or 80 acres for five years for all that can be raised on it to brethren that will move in our arm and also help them to fix for living all I can. For further particulars address me. The harvest truly is great, and the laborers few. We were at a new school-house two weeks ago and held meeting there. Cannot go back any more at present, owing to other arrangements, but as the call was so great they said, "Let us name our school house Mac edonia, as that is our feeling." Now, brethren, come and help us. We have at least fifty miles of territory to labor over, and as much more if we could.—Come brethren speakers and members, get yourselves good and comfortable homes, and help us to carry on the work of the Lord. I feel a deep interest in the cause of Christ and the children of men, and have now been on the frontier trying to preach for nearly 7 years. We number in our new arm about 20 members, two speakers and two deacons.—Times are favorable to the Brethren here, as many other so-called faiths are wavering. Let us hear from you, brethren, by letter. Will give any any information desired.

Yours in hopes of eternal life,

JACOB P. MOOMAW.

To the Donald Creek Church Ohio.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:

In my feebleness I will communicate a few thoughts to you through the worthy pages of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. But, as I am young and not much experienced in writing, you will please excuse errors.

I visited your beautiful State about one year ago, to see an only brother, who, since then, has settled there. Being convinced of my duty, and feeling a desire to flee the wrath to come, I determined by the grace of God to change my life. On the 18th day of July, 1875, I was baptized and received into the church (I trust at the same time my name was recorded in the Lamb's book of life). Oh! what tender memories hang around that dear old spot. How I wish I could visit you again. But fate has destined our separation; we can only look forward to a happy meeting when the struggles of life are over.

Since my return home, I have learned that my dear brother has enlisted under the banner of Christ. Glorious news! I cannot express the joy of my soul. My dear brother, you have engaged in a glorious war. Equip yourself to fight against the world, the flesh, and the devil. And when you have fought your last battle, and gained the victory over death, you will receive a crown of life, which will shine with un fading lustre through an endless eternity. Take the word of God for your guide, make it the man of your counsel—a lamp unto your feet and a light unto your path. Carry it with you into all the concerns of life, and ever walk by this rule, that the beauty of the Lord may ever be upon you. It will light you through the dark valley and shadow of death, and land you safe on the shores of eternal deliverance.

Now, brethren and sisters, let us all strive to please God, and if we meet no more on earth, we will strike glad hands on the banks of eternal deliverance, and hear the welcome plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Yours in Christ,

CALLIE C. SKINNELL.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

Died, very suddenly, in the Willamette Valley church, Marion county, Oregon, July 7th, 1876, SAMUEL K. HERRINGTON, aged about 80 years. Disease supposed to have been derangement of the heart. He emigrated to Athens county, Ohio, in his youth; thence to Iowa in 1847. While residing there he united with the Brethren in Jefferson Co. In 1862 he emigrated to Oregon. Funeral occasion improved on the day of interment, from Rev. xiv. 13, by the writer.

DAVID BROWER.

(Pilgrim please copy.)

In Manor church, Md., on the 14th of July, 1876, after a brief illness, Sister LYDIA JOHNSON, wife of Bro. Henry Johnson, aged 26 years 6 months and 28 days. She was buried on Sunday, 16th, in the Manor church graveyard, followed there by a large concourse of relatives and friends. She left a kind husband and two small children to mourn their loss. Funeral services by Eld. D. Lodd of Manor church, and Elders L. Emmett and D. F. Stonifer of Beaver Creek church, from John xi. 25, 26.

JACOB REICHARD.

In Waynesboro, Franklin county, Pa., July 16th, 1876, JACOB PRICE, Sr. Our beloved brother was a man of more than ordinary natural kindness. In his death the family have lost an affectionate husband and father, the community a worthy citizen, and the church a zealous deacon, which office he filled with ability for many years. His benevolence to the poor was proverbial. By them the loss will be deeply felt, as he was ever ready to lend a helping hand to their wants. In 1866 the Annual Meeting was held at his place, which was, the last meeting under the old system. His name will be remembered and cherished by many throughout the brotherhood who have removed out of the old Antietam church to distant States, and while we sorely feel the loss of a strong pillar being removed from the church, let us how in submission to the will of him who doeth all things well, and rejoice in the thought that his end was peace. He expressed a desire to depart and be at rest. May all follow his bright example and meet him in a fairer clime than this, where the farewell tear is never shed and parting is unknown. His remains were followed to their last resting place by a large concourse of people and sorrowing friends. The occasion was improved by appropriate discourses by the Brethren, from the words, "Let me die the death of the righteous and my last end be like his." H.

Answers to Correspondents.

In answer to "Alphabetical," in your last issue, for a remedy for consumption in its first stages, I can recommend Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, if taken according to directions, for it has been thoroughly tried in my family, and the results were glorious. "Alphabetical" must not expect one bottle to do the work—my wife took three bottles before she could discover any change, but after the third bottle every dose seemed to strengthen the lungs, and now she is well and hearty. If "Alphabetical" will write to me I will get witnesses to the above.

CONSUMPTION!

This distressing and dangerous complaint and its premonitory symptoms, neglected cough, night sweats, hoarseness, wasting flesh fever—permanently cured by DR. SWAYNE'S COMPOUND SYRUP OF WILD CHERRY.

BRONCHITIS—a premonitor of Pulmonary Consumption, is characterized by catarrh, or inflammation of the mucous membrane of the air passages, with cough and expectoration, short breath, hoarseness, pains in the chest. For all bronchial affections, sore throat, loss of voice, coughs,

DR. SWAYNE'S COMPOUND SYRUP OF WILD CHERRY IS A SOVEREIGN REMEDY.

Hemorrhage or Spitting of Blood, may proceed from the larynx, trachea, bronchia or lungs, and arises from various causes, as undue physical exertion, plethora or fullness of the vessels, weak lungs, overstraining of the voice, suppressed evacuation, obstruction of the spleen or liver, &c.

Dr. Swayne's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry

strikes at the root of disease by purifying the blood, restoring the liver and kidneys to a healthy action, invigorating the nervous system.

The only standard remedy for hemorrhage, bronchial and all pulmonary complaints. Consumptives and those predisposed to weak lungs should not fail to use this great vegetable remedy.

Its marvelous power, not only over consumption, but over every chronic disease where a gradual alternative action is needed. Under its use the cough is loosened, the night sweats diminished, the pain subsides, the pulse returns to its natural standard, the stomach is improved in its power to digest and assimilate food, and every organ has a purer and better quality of blood supplied to it out of which new recreative and plastic material is made. Price one dollar. Six bottles $5. If your druggist or storekeeper has not got it, we will forward half dozen to any address on receipt of price, freight pre paid.

I was sorely afflicted with one of the most distressing of all diseases, Pruritus or Prurigo, or more commonly known as Itching Piles. The itching at times was almost intolerable, increased by scratching, and not unfrequently becoming quite sore. I bought a box of Swayne's Ointment; its use gave quick relief, and in a short time made a perfect cure. I can now sleep undisturbed, and I would advise all who are suffering with this distressing complaint to procure Swayne's Ointment at once. I had tried prescriptions almost innumerable, without finding any permanent relief.

Grand Premium Gift,
It being delivered Free of Purchase Charge to every patron of this paper. It consists of Four Complete Chromatic Paintings,

Embodying the fullest and richest conception of God's glorious promise: "While the earth remaineth, seed-time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease." America's most favored landscape painter, Mr. F. D. Grouton, has grouped together, on a large plate, four splendid Landscape and Figure Paintings, and clothed them in the richest and warmest colors. To show in what light this splendid work of art is regarded, one thousand copies have been sold in Cincinnati and New York, at 50 per copy, and $2,000 in cash was offered the National Art Co. for its exclusive use as a Premium, by one of the most prominent newspapers in the country.

So large has been the demand on the National Art Co. for former Premium Engravings, and so universal the request that their works should not be confined to any one paper, that the Company have determined to make "GOD'S PROMISE" the crowning triumph of their art publications, and have already prepared all orders for its exclusive control by any one paper, in order that the better class of newspapers generally may be benefited in being able to advertise it as the last and best Premium Gift of the National Art Co. Hence this announcement is made, and agents have been made which secure to every paper a perfect copy of this latest, largest, and best American art publication.

The only requirement exacted is, that each reader shall cut out the following Premium Certificate, showing that it is sent by a Home Ape patron of this paper, together with 25 cents, the actual cost of postage, wrapping and mailing charges, and forward the same to the National Art Co. for redemption. In return you will receive a perfect copy of this grand work of art, mailed in a strong tube, postage fully prepaid, and every copy is guaranteed to reach its destination unimpaired. Any copy that should be broken in transmission through the mail, will be duplicated free of any charge, upon your notifying the National Art Co. of the facts in the case. Postage stamps may be sent at their face value, as the amount is serially used in preparing return postage on the Picture.

Cut out this Certificate and forward to the NATIONAL ART CO. for redemption. It is worth 50.

PREMIUM CERTIFICATE. On receipt of this Premium Certificate, together with 25 cents to pay cost of tube, postage, and packing, we hereby agree to return to the sender, postage prepaid, safely wrapped and packed, a perfect copy of Grouton's four color-plate painting entitled

"GOD'S PROMISE."

This Certificate is good until October 15, 1876, after which it ceases to be valid, unless the additional fee, of 10 cents, is sent in therefor. Those sent in therefor require the additional fee. Each copy will be enclosed in a strong tube, and postage will be paid thereon out of the fee sent in. THIS CERTIFICATE WILL NOT BE AGAIN PRINTED IN THIS PAPER, hence the importance of cutting it out at once and sending it in for redemption. Address All Certificates to the National Art Co., 250 Walnut Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, and you will receive by return mail the largest and handsomest Premium Painting you ever saw.

NOTE THESE INSTRUCTIONS. All Certificates should be sent by Oct. 15, 1876, as a new edition will then become necessary. A Certificate for each Painting must in all cases be sent, otherwise persons who are not certified might reap the benefits intended solely for the patrons of this paper. Those sent in therefor require the additional fee. Each copy will be enclosed in a strong tube, and postage will be paid thereon out of the fee sent in. THIS CERTIFICATE WILL NOT BE AGAIN PRINTED IN THIS PAPER, hence the importance of cutting it out at once and sending it in for redemption. Address All Certificates to the National Art Co., 250 Walnut Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, and you will receive by return mail the largest and handsomest Premium Painting you ever saw.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.

SUCCESS THE ATTRIBUTE OF MERIT.

ERYSIPELAS AND CUTANEOUS DISEASES.— If popularity be the test of a medicine, Holloway's Pills and Ointment are assuredly the greatest remedies of this or any other age, as they are unconfined to nations or people, being as familiar to the denizens of the backwoods as to the citizens of New York, London, Paris, Vienna, Berlin, St. Petersburg, &c. Their universality is, however, the least of their merits. Their safe and speedy cures of Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, King's Evil, Scrofula, and all skin diseases, as their chief recommendation. Persons afflicted with any of the above disorders should have immediate recourse to them.

188
*.* Sold at the Manufactory of Professor Holloway & Co., New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 63 cents, and $1 each.

CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the signature of J. HADDOCK, as agent for the United States, surrounds each box of Pills and Ointment. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

REPENTANT.

Mother, I kneel on the door-stone,

Penitent, weary, and worn;

Many a mile have I wandered,

And fasted since yesterday morn;

Darkness is gathering 'round me,

Never again shall I roam;

Open the door to me, mother,

Welcome your prodigal home!

Father was angry—so angry—

And stern, when he knew my disgrace;

He thrust me away from his presence,

And then sbnt the door in my face!

But, mother, your love did not leave me;

I saw the tear ready to start,

And I knew that though guilty and banished,

I still had a place in your heart.

They say you grow feebler and feebler,

By reason of sorrow and shame;

That your hair is as white as a snow-wreath,

And 't is seldom you mention my name.

But oh, I will never believe them,

When slanders like this they repeat;

For the voice of my mother has called me,

And brought me again to my feet.

She talked to the Savior about me,

And prayed—as a mother can pray!

And back to the fold he has brought me,

The lamb who went wand'ring astray.

I soon became weary of exile;

I soon became weary of sin;

And longed for a life that was purer;

But who would have taken me in?

O mother, dear, say you forgive me,

And take me again to your breast!

Not yours—but another's!—good bye!

Nor let me die here on the door-stone,

Alone, unforgiven, unblest!

Come quickly!—a footstep approaches!

Not yours—but another's!—good bye!

Tell father—that God—has not—left me—

Outside of his threshold to die!

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Secret Societies.

BY SILAS THOMAS.

In No. 2, current volume, of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, an article with the above heading was published. In No. 23 appear A. C. Whitmire's comments on the same, under the caption, "Our Secrecy." He seems to think my communication an attack upon Odd Fellowship; but this was not, by any means intended.

Having a deplorable case in view, in which the peace and unity of a branch of the church had been greatly disturbed, if not entirely broken, by members uniting with the secret orders, contrary to discipline, my object was to warn the Brethren against the baneful-influence of the occult appliances generally of secretism.

It may be as well to remark here, that I would not, by any means, knowingly, wrong Odd Fellowship. It may be better adapted to promote the temporal interests of its members than kindred orders. Its vows or obligations may not be heaven-imprecating or bloody oaths. Its festive odes and songs may not be "blasphemous ribaldry."

Odd Fellowship, however, as a society, is entirely incompatible with, if not utterly antagonistic against, the spirit of true Christianity.

My friend Whitmire quotes three or four sentences of the commencement of the article in No. 2, wherein the noises of what were said to be initiations are described, and then asserts, "In this I do not hesitate to say, that I really think you have exaggerated to some extent." "Contemplate of this, and see if you do not feel as though you could recall a portion of it."

In thinking of this not very flattering intimation of my friend, I have tried to bring to memory more of the effects of the hub-bub in that lodge room. One which is distinctly recollected is this: The speaker who addressed the meeting in the hall, which is of considerable size, had to suspend his remarks at intervals, while the noises were at their height, in order to be understood by that part of his audience farthest from him.

Perhaps my friend can call to mind initiations in which cowardly men or "gawky novices," "rode the goat," and were "put through by some extras being thrown in, causing a slight noise."

I had, some years previous to the event related in the beginning of the article in No. 2, been in a lodge room of a different secret order in Doylestown, Pennsylvania. This room had, a day or two previous to my visit, been sacked by an exasperated crowd, who had broken chests open, and thrown the implements of initiation &c. over the apartment. There were the "cable-tow;" the altar, the human skull &c. Song books full of blasphemous ribaldry, used at bacchanalian revels, were also strewn about.

The walls and door of this room were covered with sentences, more expressive than elegant, addressed to the supposed abductors and murderers of Morgan.

The above relation is a recollection from sight; that in No. 2, from hearing. They are equally vivid, and, I must say to my friend Whitmire, not at all "exaggerated."

I will now give three reasons, to the Brethren, why members of "the brotherhood" cannot connect themselves with Odd Fellowship, without making "shipwreck" of their Christian faith.

First. If we rightly consider the baptismal covenant—its world renouncing and life dedicating vows—we must conclude that those entering into it, cannot, subsequently, without its violation, take upon themselves the obligations or oaths of worldly organizations. Especially is this an act of flagrant unfaithfulness to solemn vows to Christ, when those obligations are taken, or oaths sworn, to keep secrets which will not be revealed to candidates for membership until after their initiation.

The apostle says, "I have espoused you to one husband that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ." (2 Cor. 11: 2.) What therefore, as far as faithfulness is concerned, marriage vows are to husband and wife, the baptismal covenant is to Christ and his people. In the duration, however, of the two covenants, there is absolutely no comparison. The former lasts "as long as ye both do live;" the latter, throughout eternity; provided the creature remains true to the heavenly bridegroom in the probation.

Second. The apostle says, "The time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries. (1 Peter 4: 3).

The Brethren have always classed balls with the "revellings" mentioned by the apostle. Let us examine what is the practice of Odd Fellowship in this matter. Read the following from the Public Ledger of Philadelphia, Feb. 22nd, 1854.

"The Odd Fellows of Spring Garden have, during the year, erected an addition to their new hall, Broad and Spring Garden streets, affording not only good lodge and encampment rooms; but the largest and best ball-room in the northern districts, being forty feet by one hundred feet, without column or obstruction. The members of the order open with a Grand Dedication Ball to-night, (Washington's birth-night,) on which occasion the room will be handsomely ornamented with over two hundred flags and other decorations. The preparations and management are in good hands, and a delightful entertainment may be anticipated."

Here we have incontestable proof, not merely that Odd Fellows attend balls, but that the society, in its corporate capacity, has made provision for them, and consequently, thrown the whole weight of its authority upon their side. It may be said that Brethren, connecting themselves with the order, need not attend their balls or convivial gatherings; but will it be asserted that they do not give them their moral support, or contribute in the shape of "dues" to the erection of ball rooms?

Third. The religion, which Odd Fellowship has incorporated into its system, is not Christianity, but deism. It is denominated in the Odd Fellow's Manual a "living temple." Let us look at the kind of deity at whose shrine the worshippers in this temple present their offerings. Is it the Deity of the Bible—of the Christian? We say it is not. The God of the Bible and of the Christian is a God in Christ. To Odd Fellowship, however, this God is an "unknown God." The name of Jesus is no more recognized within the walls of a lodge, than if it were a heathen temple."

In speaking of the principle of toleration, as it enters into Odd Fellowship, the author of "the Manual" tells us the members "have left their prejudices at the door, and mingle in one circle of brotherhood, harmony and love." And what think you, my brethren, are these "prejudices?" Yes, these "prejudices!" as they are called in the Odd Fellow's Manual. Read the words which immediately follow those I have just quoted. They are these: "The descendants of Abraham, the diverse followers of Jesus, the Pariahs of the stricter sects, here gather round the same altar manifesting no differences of creed or worship, and discord and contention are forgotten in works of humanity and peace." Here are some of the "prejudices" you must leave at the door of this "living temple." You must first, as an Odd Fellow, lay aside everything that distinguishes you from a Jew. But this is not enough; you must go still further, and lay aside everything that distinguishes you from a Pariah of the stricter sect, that is, a pagan Hindoo. With these you must meet around the same altar on the principle, says the author of the Manual, of "toleration in opinions wherein we differ." What a beautiful exhibition of "harmony!"

In order to test this matter clearly, let us examine the forms of prayer, which belong to the order—let us look at the liturgy adopted by those who worship in this "living temple." Surely, if the name of our blessed Redeemer would be recognized any where in the system, we might expect to find its recognition there. But will you find it there? No, we have read every prayer contained in the book, and of these there are not a few, and we have yet to see, among the numerous collection, any distinct reference to the person and work of our glorious Mediator. You may look into all the official prayers of Odd Fellowship, and you will not find that name which is above every name. No Odd Fellow, as such, can pray in the name of Jesus. Can any brother connect himself with this order and not deny the Lord who bought him? I cannot see how.

Philadelphia, Pa.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN
"Have Faith in God."

BY P. S. NEWCOMER.

On this great fundamental principle hinges the whole plan of redemption. Without it it is impossible to please God; without it it is impossible to be eternally saved; without it our eternal destiny will be irrevocably among the eternal terrors of the damned, where, faithless among the faithless, we shall exist in interminable suffering.

Then in contemplation of this subject the simple question suggests itself, What is it? For a general solution of the question we appeal to Webster, to get at the root of it. He says faith derived from the "Latin fides, faith, belief, from fidere, to trust. I. Belief; the assent of the mind to the truth of what is declared by another, resting solely and implicitly on his authority and veracity; reliance on testimony." "Fidelity,—the fealty of the finite will and understanding to the reason." The faith of the gospel is that emotion of the mind which is called trust or confidence, exercised toward the moral character of God, and particularly of the Savior—"The substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen"—St. Paul's version.

We believe that God exists, as a truism that he gave his Son to die for us that we through his propitiation for our sins might be reconciled to God, transported from the power of darkness into the marvelous light of new creatures in Christ Jesus. We implicitly believe that he exists, and is the rewarder of all who diligently seek him; yea, that he exists in all the fullness of his glorified character, where he sitteth at the right hand of God the Father, making intercession for us, to whom he giveth "power to become the sons of God," called according to his purpose, not by the will of man, but by the will of God.

The suffering of his Son was too intense, his agonizing appeal too heart-rending, for man in his weakness and fallen estate to file the least exception to the divine will. "He that despised Moses' law died without mercy, under two or three witnesses. Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite to the spirit of grace. For we know him who hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, The Lord shall judge his people. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God."

In so far as we attempt to ignore any of the essential demands lawfully prescribed and carefully enjoined upon us, just so far do we detract from the power and wisdom of God. We may, in our civil tribunals, appeal from the decision of men, even the mantle of high respect and trust thrown around the judiciary may become vitiated by partiality, political intrigue and corruption, for the subservance of some peculiar or pet object for political aggrandizement; but to appeal from the unerring and infallible decisions of the most high God, whose robes of justice and judgment are as pure as the holy atmosphere of heaven, free from the blighting and contaminating influences of the finite mind and the sordid aspirations of the world, never, no NEVER. "Who hath been his counsellor?" or who shall instruct the mind of the Lord, or dare pervert the fundamental law of his will? As well might we assume to govern the laws of nature and nature's God by false efforts to 'keep in motion the vast machinery of the world, or hold in check the artillery of heaven in the wild outburst of the coming storm. Just as false the assumption, and daring the attempt, to detract from our change one item, or part of an item, of God's holy-and righteous will. He has abounded to us in all wisdom and prudence, says Paul, "having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his own good pleasure, which he hath purposed in himself." Having given his Son to die for us, the just for the unjust that he might bring us to him, all power in heaven and earth has been conferred upon him. He upholds all things by the power of his might. The very "heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handiwork." Aside from all this, he is virtually "the author and finisher of our faith,"—the author of our eternal salvation,—but to make his authority available, we must bow submissively to his will, and become obedient, even as he our great exemplar became obedient unto the death of the cross.

Are we in possession of the true, evangelical faith, with a full and free conception of all the blessings and benefits it conveys in this life and the eternal glory that will crown us in the life to come? In this life it "is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen;" in the life to come the full realization and confirmation of our hope, based upon the immutable laws of God, the attainment of the substance in all its ineffable fullness, that which was so long unseen being made visible in the dazzling light of God's countenance.

But, my dear brethren and sisters, the attainment of these glorious results will require an able effort at our hands. The trial of your faith is "much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire," that it "might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ, whom, having not seen ye love." But oh, holy and happy thought, that in the day of final retribution we shall see him as he is, in all the effulgency of his mighty power, in the full brightness of his coming, and receive, at his own immaculate hands, the end of our faith! It having subserved our best spiritual interests by implicitly relying on the precious promises and saving efficacies, flowing so profusely and of such easy adaptation, will happily culminate in a glorious reward even the salvation of our souls. This mortality then shall have put on immortality, and the perplexing question shall be irrevocably solved as to how the dead are raised up, and with what body they come. We will all be eye-witnesses to the truth that it was sown in corruption and raised in incorruption; sown in dishonor, raised in power; sown a natural body, raised a spiritual body, no more subjected to sinful and carnal infirmities, no more liable to the temptations and allurements of a sin-cursed world. Having long and anxiously looked for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness, this promise will then be happily confirmed, where, under God's own immediate and personal supervision, we shall be crowned with honor, glory and unending comfort, whilst the ceaseless ages of a blessed eternity shall record the illimitability of its existence. All this, and more than my feeble pen can portray, will be the grand result of implicit faith in God.

Then, in conclusion, may we all make an able effort in contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, and keep the ordinances as they were delivered to us, with an eye of faith, single to the spiritual significance they convey, in full anticipation of a glorious immortality beyond the confines of death hell and the grave. And to my unconverted friends, if there be such who may read these imperfect jottings, I will say, if you believe that God exists, seek him diligently, so that you may happily find him as your everlasting rewarder; for if you confess your sins, he is faithful and just to forgive you your sins and cleanse you from all unrighteousness, and at last give you an abundant entrance into his kingdom above, where, among all the heavenly host whose robes were washed and made white in the blood of the immaculate lamb slain before foundation of the world, ascriptions of praise honor and dominion will be rendered forever and ever.

Boonsboro, Md.

Our Real Life.

People very mistakenly call everything that is practical, disagreeable, and obligatory, real life, but it seems as if this was an insult to human nature, for surely there is, behind even the most cheerful and unlovely life, some truer and higher ideal to which the mind clings, and which constitutes the real, deliberately chosen life of the individual. What is forced on you is only a husk, removed by chances on which you cannot reckon any more than you could control those that forced it upon you. But in the field of your thoughts, you are a sovereign, free to choose and to command, to direct and to advance. You may shape your thoughts exactly as you will; turn them to this or that study, and even if other occupations leave no time for study, still you are free to think, meditate, and observe, even outwardly engaged in drudgery. Men nailed to a stool in a humdrum office, women tied to the kitchen or sewing-machine, may nevertheless defy circumstances and keep a life of their own; no drudgery can, unless they allow it, kill their power of living in a higher sphere of thought. It is well that this should be understood, because many people make their circumstances an excuse for actual laziness. Now each adverse circumstance ought to be, on the contrary, an additional spur to the mind, for how much more to your credit is it, to cultivate noble thoughts in the midst of sordid surroundings, than it would be to do so among all the appliances that students use to help the development of their faculties.—Golden Censer.

Hinderances to a Révival.

An eastern paper makes some fearful charges against the spiritual life of the Church. We would believe a better state of things exists in the path of the Censer. If we expect God to bless us the coming winter with a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit we must meet the conditions. Faithfulness to God, and to the people compels us to deal very plainly, though it may not be pleasant to hear. In speaking of getting ready for a revival that paper answers an important question by the following: What hinders a revival of religion in many of our churches, is the fact that there are members in their fellowship who are notoriously dishonest and vicious; men whose word is worth nothing on the street; men who are quoted in the books of commercial agencies as tricky and untrustworthy; men for whose character their neighbors have no respect. And it is not only by these flagrant offences that the progress of religion is impeded; but by the generally low tone of morality among Christians. The standards of living are not so high as they ought to be. In many small matters the consciences of Christians have lost their grip. It is not nearly so plain as it ought to be to everybody that to be a Christian is to be upright and downright; to be clean and sound; to be gentle and yet brave. Therefore, the invitations of the Gospel are robbed of no small degree of their power. When we preach to men about their need of salvation from sin and about the power of Christ to save from sin, they turn round upon us all, and in their thoughts, if not in their words, demand of us what we ourselves know of the great salvation.—Selected.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
THE DECEPTIVE WAY.

BY H. R. TAYLOR.

There is a way which seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death."—PROV. XIV 12

There is a way that seemeth right,
But ah! it leads to endless night;
That way is dark and thorny, too,
But on that way are not a few.
They tell us that it leads to heaven,
And that their sins are all forgiven;
And onward in this way they go,
Unconscious that it leads to woe.
They tell us that they trust in God,
And that they do obey his word;
But when we read his word to see,
We find the truth it cannot be;
For there he says his people must Deny themselves of worldly lust;
And that they must so separate be,
That e'en the sinful world may see
That they are on the narrow way
That leads to joy and endless day,
And have forsook the broad high-road
That leads the soul away from God.
In places of diversion they Should ne'er be found by night or day;
But always have their thoughts above,
On him who saved us by his love.
Where Jesus calls, we all should go,
No matter if through weal or woe;
But ne'er upon forbidden ground
Our humble feet should once be found;
Not in the scorner's way to tread,
Nor in the sinner's road be led;
But follow after truth and love,
For this we're sure is from above.
Many the souls that tell us now
That they have made a solemn vow
To love their God with all their heart,
But on his way they never start.
They mean the God that is above,
But 't is the worldly god they love;
For this they love and serve it, too,
As unconverted people do;
Indulge in many vain desires,
Which sinful people much admire,
And tell us that it is no wrong
For Christian folks to have some fun.
But read God's word and it will tell Us of the road that leads to hell;
And of the one that leads to heaven,
And how our sins are all forgiven.
Dear reader, to you I may say,
That to God's home there's but one way,
And self-denial must we share
If we would wish to enter there.
We cannot serve the world at will,
And trust in God and love him still;
For God and Mammon cannot share
The treasure of one heart—beware.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Fragments.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

MISSIONARY.—Christ was the Prince of Missionaries. The Spirit of God is a Missionary Spirit. The Christian Religion is essentially a Missionary Enterprise, and all who "determine to know nothing but Christ Jesus and Him crucified," are full of missionary zeal and abound in missionary effort. From first to last, the recovery of the world to God is the fruit of missionary labor.

Let no one's heart grow faint, or hands hang down, because an occasional missionary chiding, Gospel-hindering article appears in our periodicals. "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Even the Arch-enemy knows how to ply Christ with misquoted Scripture to frustrate His missionary purpose. And some well-meaning, and otherwise efficient brethren, regard it their mission to counter work the mission of Eternal Love by caricatures, misrepresentations, and sadly misapplied Scriptures. All with a good conscience, no doubt. But their antecedents show how easy it is for them to support a point in the strongest terms, and in due time reverse their judgment, and repeal their assertions.

There is no danger that the Brethren will pray too much, or labor too hard, or shed too many tears, or spend too much money, or travel too far, or make too great sacrifices for the salvation of souls. There will be "cankered gold and silver" enough to witness against the church. It is not necessary to lay a soothing-plaster on the conscience of anti-missionaries by depreciating the efforts of those who give their prayers and tears and means and lives, to carry the truth beyond the sea. If any one is ready to place the value of a single soul at a lower figure than "the whole world," and restrict the blood of Christ to certain geographical boundaries, and finds no more motive in the Cross for pushing the conflict between light and darkness into new territories for new conquests, then let him strain his utmost energies to impede the missionary cause—but not till then. If there is one soul in Denmark that can be saved at an expense of a thousand dollars, who will grudge the investment? That soul will not, Christ will not, the angels will not, and we should not.

LAMA SABACHTHANI.

I am repeatedly urged to reply to the first article in No. 19, current volume.

I decline for the following reasons. 1. No one questions the reality of Christ's desertion on the Cross. It is the nature and extent of the desertion that are in controversy.

2. The article abundantly refutes itself. There is a principle in the writer's postulate which he wholly overlooks. He says, "we know if Christ was made sin for us, He became our substitute. To become our substitute is to take our place." A truism. Then he says, "No one can really be a substitute to suffer the penalty due a guilty person unless he himself is innocent, or free from guilt." Another truism; but the writer does not perceive that the last-named condition is an immense qualification of the first half of his proposition. This vitiates his entire article.

3. In His relation to law, Christ occupied common ground with the nature He came to redeem; but His mode of satisfying law was unique, so that the quantity, and quality, and place, and duration of His suffering were vicarious no less than the fact. We should require no argument to prove that a pearl as large as a pea outvalues a rock as large as a mountain.

4. I am averse to controversy, and never engage in it save under the stimulus of reasons strong enough to make what is unpleasant and dangerous a duty.

5. Because the writer of the article to which these remarks refer, is a brother whom I highly esteem, "a good man and full of the Holy Ghost," working nobly for the kingdom of God, notwithstanding he has given us a poor version of the threnody of Emmanuel.

REQUEST FOR PRAYER.

The efficacy of prayer depends on faith, and faith depends on an apprehensible objective statement. Faith must have something distinct to grasp, no less than prayer must get its confidence and victory in faith. The "Request" in volume 28, page 442, is too indefinite to elicit the desired response. I believe in prayer, but its conditions are as rigid as of seed time and harvest. The key that the God-man puts into the hand of faith unlocks all the treasures of Deity; but that hand is easily paralyzed, and the door of grace left locked. Our conscious wedlock to right must be perfect, before faith has power to fit the key into the ward of the lock. Our friend's difficulty is not revealed, nor any circumstance which enables the intercessor to carry his censer with boldness before the mercy seat. "Financially and otherwise," leaves a margin wide enough for Satan to write all sorts of faith-crippling insinuations. If the applicant for prayer will yield himself to the right in the principle of the Cross, willing to be stripped of money and raiment and reputation and life, he can be prayed out of his troubles. Prayer has done great things, and can yet. Cutting a chip out of the Cross to make it lighter, is what puts our prayers into Christ's waste basket. A whole Christ makes us mighty, and a whole Cross gives us Christ. Perhaps some carry unhalloved greenbacks in their wallets—money which belongs to the Lord, or the poor,—and thus pray against a triple-bolted gate. Some have been grinding their conscience between their teeth for years, or searing it in their pipes, or smothering in an over-loaded stomach, or defiling it in the cesspool of carnality, until they are bound with serpents hand and foot, body and soul. Prayer will unfetter all who pray aright. A true prayer covers the whole life, retrospective and prospective. It rips up the old man to the marrow, and cuts every fibre of sin, and gives itself to the truth which such wholeness and confidence as the truth begets. This is the equator of the soul. Let our friend plant himself in the right hemisphere, and then plead with God as a God of truth and mercy, and let others join him in this prayer, and deliverance will come out of Zion. Amen and Amen.

Sunday Schools.

BY ADAM PRANTZ.

In the "Brethren's Almanac" for 1876, I find an article signed H B B, which says; "The first Sunday School ever introduced, was started by the Brethren." "The great 'American Encyclopedia' in their account of the 'Brethren' or 'Dunker' Church, says: 'In the year 1740, or about that time, forty years before the present general system of Sunday School instruction was introduced, Robert Raikes and Ludwig Hœcker, (Bro. Obed) established a Sunday School, which was maintained upwards of thirty years. This makes about 136 years since Sunday Schools were introduced among the Brethren."

We were a little startled upon reading the above, but not much frightened; but it led to an investigation of the history and authority which we have at hand on the subject, and we find that in John Winebrenner's History of all Denominations in the United States, Page 109, William M. Fabnestock, a member of the German Seventh day Baptists, after first referring to Alexander Mack and following him to America in 1719, and to the organization of the Church at Germantown in 1723, under the oversight of Bro. Peter Becker, says: "The Church grew rapidly in this country, and soon after a Church was established at Muckbach (Mill Creek) in Lancaster County. In this community was one Conrad Beissel, a native of Germany, who conceived that there was an error among the Dunkers in regard to the Sabbath, that the seventh day was the Command of the Lord God. About the year 1725, he (Beissel) published a tract entering into a discussion of this point, which created some excitement and disturbance in the Society at Mill Creek, upon which he retired from the settlement, (i. e. Left the Brethren,) and went secretly to a cell on the banks of the Cocalico in the same county."

In following the history, which is somewhat lengthy, we find that his place of retirement was discovered, and he was soon surrounded by persons in solitary cottages. They permanently adopted the seventh day as the Sabbath, in 1728; in 1732 the solitary life was changed to a conventicle one. They adopted the dress of the Capuchins, or White Friars, and gave monastic names to all who entered their convent, &c. In the same History, Page 115: "They instituted a Sabbath School for religious instruction, which flourished many years, and was attended with some remarkable consequences. It produced an anxious inquiry among the juvenile population, who attended the School, which increased and grew into what is now termed a revival of religion." (!) "The scholars of the Sabbath-school met together every day, before and after common school hours, to pray and exhort one another, under the superintendance of one of the brethren. The excitement ran into excess, and betrayed a zeal not unto knowledge."

"Ludwig Hœcker, or Bro. Obed as he was designated," (his monastic name), "who was the teacher of the common school, projected the plan of holding a school in the afternoon of the Sabbath, and who, in connection with some of the other brethren, commenced it to give instruction to the indigent children who were kept from the regular school by employments which their necessities obliged them to be engaged at during the week, as well as to give religious instruction to those of better circumstances."

This school ended its course just after the battle of Brandywine in 1777, when the Sabbath school room was used for a hospital, and the Sabbath school was never resumed.

It is also very erroneous to use the name of Robert Raikes in any connection with the Sabbath School of the monastic seventh-day Hœcker; for it was not until 1781, that Raikes started his Sunday Schools, and his were established in England, Europe, at Gloucester, and not in the United States.

According to Summerbell in his history of the Christian Church from A. M. 4004 to A. D. 1852, Page 313, Charles Boromes, (of whom Dana in the great "American Cyclopaedia" says; "He was count, saint, and cardinal of the Roman church at Milan. He is generally regarded as the first to establish Sunday Schools,") an archbishop of Milan, established Sunday schools in every parish in his diocese, in the 14th century, but the effort was a failure in the moral training of youth. About 300 years after Boromes' attempt

Mrs. Catharine Cappe of England taught a Sunday School in her back kitchen, but she was ridiculed and avoided; and in 1781, Robert Raikes established his Sunday Schools in England, at Gloucester (as see also American Cyclopaedia) thus both agreeing with Fabnestock in Winebrenner's history. Therefore we have conclusively proven!

1. That Ludwig Hœcker was not a member of the German Baptist Church, but a follower of a fallen member in a cow and monk's dress.

2. That the origin of Sunday Schools was not even so near the Brethren as Hœcker, but that it originated with a Catholic Archbishop.

3. That Hœcker and Robert Raikes never operated together in the matter of Sunday Schools. Surely "facts are stubborn things."

Watch.

BY LEWIS E. FAHRNEY.

"Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. The spirit truly is ready, but the flesh is weak." Mark 14: 38.

We are prone to wander from the truth as it is given us in the word of God; hence the above quotation will suit all such minds. The little word "watch" we see in a great many places in the Scriptures. It seems to be a positive command in many places. "Watch ye and pray, lest ye fall into temptation." What a warning that is to the professor—the person that is trying to live up to the commandments of our God. He commands us to watch, be ready, "pray without ceasing," for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come."

Dear readers, be on your guard; be ready with a clear conscience; prepare yourself for death, that you can meet it with a brave face and can say, "Welcome, Death, I am prepared to meet my God." How glorious it must be to die the death of the righteous! We can expect to be heirs of that beautiful mansion prepared for the saints and all those that do the will of our Father. But alas! where will the sinner appear? In Hell he will be seen, tormented with the flaming fire, where there is weeping and gnashing of teeth. Oh, think of it, what a dreadful time they will have through their neglect to follow the word of God. So, therefore, watch, lest ye enter into temptation.

I have often thought that if men could only secure their souls in a box of money, how gladly they would, in order to save them. They could not bear the idea of losing their souls; they would soon enclose their souls, and then rest with the assurance of entering heaven, there to partake of the enjoyment. Thanks be to God that it is not money that will save our souls, but obedience, and following the commands of our Father. This is what will safely land us on the other shore. Watch ye therefore, lest the Lord come suddenly and find you sleeping. Watch and pray lest ye fall into temptation.

Pride is one of the great tempters. We can see it approaching the church. We are taught that the spirit is ready and the flesh is weak; hence we should be on our guard. We hear it said by other denominations that "the 'Dunkards' are dressing as gay as any body else. Look at the dress that woman has on. She is a member of the church." And if you notice, they are right. The people say, "They might as well put on their ribbons, for they are wearing costly apparel." They are right. Hence you see that we are straying away, for we are taught not to wear costly apparel, gold, or costly diamonds. So we as professors must watch lest temptation will lead us astray.

Pulling out the Beam.

BY J. H. PECK.

"First cast out the beam out of thine own eye: and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye." So said a brother to me after reference had been made to my article entitled "Shake off that Viper," published in No. 11 of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. As his quotation is from one of the finest authors that ever lived, it at once set me to thinking: "Have I done it?" After taking a retrospective view of my past life, I cannot say like the Rev. Mr. Brown in a sermon preached at the Baptist church at this place recently. He said there is only one thing that he is sure of, and that is that HE IS SAVED. I feel more like exclaiming with a publican of old, "Lord, have mercy on me a sinner." or, with Paul, I daily feel the necessity of keeping under under my body and bringing it into subjection. If any inferred from what I wrote that I thought I had no faults, they were mistaken. Instead of such a thought pervading my mind, the advice of the brother struck me as wholesome, and the language of the Savior quoted by him as applicable to my case. But I am happy to say I am not a slave to tobacco. Though I once used it, I have long ago pulled out that beam; and though I have been for some years engaged in pulling out beams, I have not the least doubt there are those left yet that should by all means be extracted, and which I have failed to notice; all I can say is if any brother or sister that has noticed them will point them out to me, and help me exterminate them, they will confer a great favor upon me. My heart's desire is to gain immortality—a crown of glory that fadeth not away; to parade the golden streets of the New Jerusalem, and sit with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of God; to swell redemption's song, with all that blood washed through, where sickness, sorrow, pain or death can never come. As I can only expect to gain so glorious a reward by patient continuance in well doing, and being faithful till death, I feel like retaining none of those beams, or even motes of evil, that have a tendency to lead me away from Christ or be a stumbling block in the way of others that might by my exerting a right influence, be constrained to forsake evil, and embrace him who alone hath the words of eternal life.

In conclusion, I wish to say that I have not been offended at any individual brother by his using tobacco, and there is none such in my memory now that I would have any reluctance whatever to salute with a kiss of charity; but what I wrote against tobacco, I did under the solemn conviction that its use among the brethren exerts an evil influence upon the world, paralleled by no other one thing tolerated by us who are taking the lead on non-conformity to the world in every other particular. Now, brethren, please be not offended at what I have written, but let us endeavor to provoke one another to love and good works, and above all things let brotherly love continue.

To Backsliders.

I will show how to escape from a state of declension.

1. You must admit the conviction that you are in a state of declension. One of the greatest difficulties with backsliders is to make them feel that they are backsliders. You continually hear them making excuses. They will not admit that they are in this sad state. When the condition of the backslider is described ever so plainly, they are exceedingly loth to admit that it means them. And until they admit this, there is no remedy.

2. Apply to yourself all that God says to backsliders, just as if you were the only individual in the world in that condition.

3. Find out the point where you began to decline. See what was the first cause of your backsliding, and give that up. You will often find this first cause where you did not expect it, in some thing that you called a little matter, or that you tried to make yourself believe was not a sin. Multitudes have been kept down in this way, and perhaps have been trying hard for sanctification while holding on to some darling idol or some sensual indulgence. I knew a man who stood out in defending the use of tobacco, till it became a lust that ate out his spirit of prayer. Using some soft word, calling it a comfort or a medicine, or even baptizing it by a Christian name, and calling it a blessing of Providence, will not answer. God does not call it so. How many keep themselves in a state of decline and pretend not to know why it is so. "O, no, I cannot tell why I should be so long in the dark;" when we are laying out God's money to indulge their own appetite or pride. God will always hold them at arms length, and will frown upon them when they pray, unless they search out and remove the cause of their declension.

4. Give up your idols. Whatever you find occupies your thoughts, and calls you off from serving God, get rid of it, if you can. If it is any article of property, dispose of it in some way, give it away, sell it, burn it, away with it, rather than let it stand between you and God.

5. Be careful to apply afresh to the Lord Jesus Christ for pardon and peace with God. Go to him just as you did at first, as a guilty, condemned sinner, more deserving of hell than ever. Apply to this fountain, which is set open in the house of David for sin and uncleanness. Confess your sins fully, and forsake them, and thus return to God, and he will have mercy on you, and will heal your backslidings and remember your iniquities no more. —Finnay's Theology.

Faith.

BY C. G. LINT.

I do not purpose at this time to make any inquiry as to what faith is, or what it has wrought in them that exercised themselves in a correct faith to God; but my purpose is, if I can, to ascertain upon what our faith, or the faith of Christendom, is based. I consider the base or foundation of all practical faith of the utmost importance. If the faith by which we expect to gain heaven and happiness is not founded on the Bible, it will avail us but little in the last great day. It matters not how strong I do believe in a religious tenet, though it may seem ever so plausible, my faith in it will not give me any real benefit if the Bible is not at the bottom. This may seem strange to many of the professors of Christianity; but it should not, for when they call to remembrance the fact that there are as many different faiths in existence as there are different sects and isms, and as the Bible speaks of but one faith, somebody must be wrong in his faith. I do not wish to say that those that hold these several faiths are not sincere, nor that they have no foundation, but whether the Bible is the foundation for all, judge ye. Each one in the exercise of his faith may be sincere, yet the things he believes in may not be what they should be. The votaries of Baal were sincere and yet they were wrong. This should teach us the solemn truth that our zeal for a certain dogma or tenet does not make it right, if it has no right principles in itself. If this were so, then the prophets of Baal should have been answered, for their zeal almost devoured them.

The question then comes up, Has our faith the Bible for its base, or the declarations, confessions and creeds, of some particular church organization? If it has any particular church dogma to govern it, it will be what that particular church in its councils will prescribe for its followers, and this will we, if not very careful, believe and take as Bible truth. Thus if a church in her councils declares a certain man infallible, the members receive and believe it. Their faith in it will however in reality not make it so. But again, if in their councils they take it upon themselves to declare that infant baptism is a Christian ordinance, and was instituted by Christ, and should be perpetuated, the declaration does not make it so—not if ten thousand times ten thousand believe and practice it. Neither would the decision that the bread and wine are the Lord's Supper when taken at 10 a. m. or 12 m., make it so. If these councils decide that baptism administered by immersion, pouring, sprinkling, are equally valid, or that no water baptism at all is required, and if such a mixture of religious jumbings were believed by all the world, it would not make them Bible truths. But not only are these councils believed in when they legislate for God by adding to, but also when they take from; for when they set aside feet-washing, the Lord's Supper, and the kiss of charity, these same men believe they can do the will of God by not observing these.

I say again, be careful when you believe a thing, for the interest of your soul, that it has the Bible for its foundation. We are well aware that when these confessionists and creedlists see the humble believer declare in favor of the Bible, they hoot at him, and many, on that account, are afraid to come out and make an open confession of their faith; and more especially so, if when the yoke of creedism and no Bible becomes galling to some of its votaries, they are placed under the anathemas of the church when they come out to believe what the Bible teaches. Ask yourselves, and ask often, Does the Bible govern me in my faith and works, or does some ecclesiastical diction govern me?

Besetting Sin.

Do you habitually realize that you are somebody? Is your talk such as to call attention to your personal merits? Are you very sensitive about the consideration in which you are held? Well may you suspect pride.

Are you hard in your bargains and contentions about small matters? Are you worried and annoyed by the ever-recurring demand for alms? Do you give reluctantly the scraps, not the first fruits, amusing yourself the while with dreams of how liberal you would be if you were richer or out of debt? Be sure covetousness is hid somewhere.

Do you rebel against regularity in religious habits and make every day fresh excuses for the neglect of devotion? Are you fretful under the routine service of life, and discontented that you have not an easy time? These are the symptoms of sloth.

Have you so little control over appetite that you cannot restrain it when prudence requires, or when spiritual discipline demands it? Albeit no drunkard, are your faculties occasionally excited or habitually stupefied by drink? Gluttony is there.

Are you fretful, irritable, impatient of slights and contradictions, with a good memory for injuries? If not openly quarrelsome, yet guilty of the folly and ill-breeding of showing dislike for others by manner and gesture? Anger has the better of you.

Howbeit free from actual unchastity, do you indulge in unclean thoughts, do you laugh at the coarse jest? I may not enlarge; only lust, baleful lust, creeps all over the land, leaving its slime upon books and papers and shows and amusements.

And once again: Does it pain you to hear others well spoken of? Do you drop little words of detraction? Are you ashamed to go to a church where other people's clothes are finer than your own? Are you discontented as you see the better houses and more luxurious appliances of others? There is envy in the heart.—Bishop Lay.

"ALL churches in turn claim to be Apostolic and the true Church." The Lord doesn't leave us in darkness about that at all. "I am the way, the truth, and the life." He doesn't ask us to join this church or that. If we follow Christ's footsteps, stepping in them, we will be led aright. Never make a mistake about following him. Out in the wilderness the hunters have a habit when going into the forests to hack trees. They call it "blazing the way," and thus they are able to return to their log cabin. So Christ has blazed the way for us. All we have to do is to follow him in that way. If you are in darkness it is because you are not with Christ. They that follow him shall not walk in darkness.—Mooly.

HEAVEN will not be like a strange place, but like a home from which we had been detained; for we shall see, not strangers, but old familiar faces; and faces never by us seen before, will be known instantly by us, by that law of spiritual, subtle recognition by which spirits know each other everywhere, even as they know and are known instantly of God; and heaven will be, in its sights, and sounds, and greetings, a great home gathering to us who enter it.—Golden Rule.

EDUCATED minds hold the most responsible and influential positions of society. If they are not honest, what may we expect of others? This evil is not imaginary. The lack of conscience, in both business and religion, is alarming. Lying, breach of trust, false pretence, are surprisingly prevalent in all circles of life. The churches are disgraced by hosts of dishonest members. How can we expect it otherwise, until educated men set a good example?

Avoid minutely examining what other people do, or what will become of them; but look on them with an eye good, simple, sweet, affectionate. Do not require in them more perfection than in yourself; and do not be astonished at the diversity of imperfections; for imperfection is not greater imperfection merely because it is unusual. Behave like the bees—suck the honey from all flowers and herbs.—St. Francis de Sales.

I find no quality so easy for a man to counterfeit as devotion, though his life and manner are not conformable to it; the essence of it is abstruse and occult, but the appearances easy and showy.—Montaigne.

For The Young.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

A Natural History Talk.

BY HOWARD MILLER.

The boys and girls who read this column, noticed that no article appeared last week, which was due to my being in Ohio where I could not very well have an opportunity of writing. I am very much pleased with the interest manifested in our zoological talks; and the numbers of letters attest that our young people are awake and observant.

I stated that I would publish the name and address of the first person who would give the common name of procyon lotor; and now I will have to take all that back. The first mail I received, brought fourteen letters and postal cards, and some of the same date, and the answers have been coming ever since. I will publish one from each state heard from; and those who fail must try again. It is remarkable how many joined in the hunt and when the game was bagged, nearly all said correctly that they had a raccoon. A few declared P. lotor to be an opossum, but that is wrong. Willis Heck of West Alexandria, Preble Co., Ohio, says in his letter that he has a pet P. lotor. Alva L. Shultz of Elwood, Iowa, has it correct; and Ezra B. Albright says that "according to W. Hooker on Natural History" it is a raccoon. Jacob B. Strayer of Johnstown, Pa., has it right. Rily L. Graybill of Waltz, Ind. "concludes his name is raccoon." Milton Lichty finds it "very interesting," and wants more work. Milton lives out in Illinois, Lanark, Post-office. Edwin Peifer of Waterloo, Iowa, knows all about it; and a very neatly written card from Va., has no signature. Others were received from the states mentioned, some right and some not.

The specimen chosen was rather easy, though some that will follow will be tolerably difficult. I will always take something found all over the U. S. as it would not do at all to write up a gopher for the east, or a mackerel for the prairies. The subjects will include birds, insects, reptiles; and all that has life will be represented, that is, the different orders as classified by naturalists.

The way to make this department interesting is to take an interests in it, to send on the answers and to get others interested.

Sometimes very common questions engage the attention of naturalists; as, for instance, a few years ago the question as to a snake's swallowing its young was fully discussed. Talking about snakes reminds me that I must write up an account of the life history of some of them; and, by the way, all of us have read of the hissing of serpents. Now I would very much like to know if any of my class ever heard, actually heard, a snake hiss. If so, what kind of a snake was it? And do not confuse the blowing of the viper with an undoubted hiss of a snake—say a black snake or garter-snake, or any other kind except the viper. I never heard one hiss; but I want the evidence from all quarters. Now boys, who ever heard a snake hiss? And if you have seen plenty of them and never heard them hiss, please say so. This is the way for us all to become richer in knowledge and yet be none the poorer.

About all there is in the real study of Natural History is, close observation, as what we see for ourselves is worth whole volumes of writing. After observation comes exchange of views and classification. The Botany articles brought communications from the older readers, but now there seems to be a waking up among the younger persons, which is just as it should be. It will teach you to see what you look at, which, however simple it may read, is what few people do.

Elderton, Pa.

Sensible Suggestions.

"I wish, John, you would drive a few nails for me in the wood-house out here," said Maggie to her brother. "I have been wanting them this long time but always forgot to ask you."

"Why not drive them yourself, Maggie?" asked her father.

"Why, I don't know how, father," she said, in some surprise.

"Thirteen years old is none too young to learn," said her father. "I guess the boys could drive one by the time they were seven. You are certainly as capable as they were at that age, are you not?" he added with a smile.

"But I don't believe I could do boys' work," she said doubtfully.

"You have two good hands and ten plump fingers just the same as they, and it is all a mistake that girls can't learn these little arts just as well as their brothers. Come, my girl, I will show you in a minute how it is done, and half a dozen times' practice will enable you to beat the boys. I have observed that you are much quicker to learn anything than they are. Go on mending your harness, John, we will attend to the nails."

Encouraged and minutely instructed by her father, Maggie drove in all the nails successfully, and so pleased was she with her success, that she would have set a double row around the shed, I think, if her father had not concluded that these would answer for the present.

"There, that little lesson helps to make you more independent, my girl. If you want a nail put in, you will not be obliged to wait for any of the men folks to do it. That is a very comfortable sort of independence which I wish the woman's rights folks would inculcate more than they do. Now I will teach you some day to catch and harness up a horse. You have already learned to drive a gentle one. I don't want you to try your hand on Lyon or Billy, for they might cut up, and you are not strong enough to hold them. But it is very handy for a woman to know how to drive a gentle horse. She can any time do a little errand to the village if she has some knowledge of this sort, when she might have to wait a long time before a man was at leisure to go. Learn to sharpen a knife and whittle, too, without cutting your fingers. Don't let the doors creak for want of an oiled feather, or the children's boots get hard in the winter for the want of a little grease. Be handy about these little things, and you will be twice as independent and comfortable all your life."

You, too, boys, might learn to advantage how to make your beds and sweep a room, and sew up a bag on the sewing machine. Don't ask any one to sew on a button for you, when there hangs a cushion with needles in it, and mother's thread basket is so handy.

A little cooking will never hurt you. Many a beefsteak and fresh fish have I cooked in my day, and mother says I can beat any girl making a pot of coffee. I don't often get a chance to try now-a-days, but I have seen the time when my knowledge of the business came just in play. No telling where you will be cast away some time in your life. The most helpless people I have ever met, are those who can do only one sort of work. Learn to do some one thing very well indeed, and make that your dependence for a living, then add to it just as much skill and knowledge as you can. It costs nothing to carry knowledge.—Ex.

A little boy held a sixpence near his eye, and said, "O, mother, it is bigger than the room!" and when he drew it still nearer, he exclaimed, "O, mother, it is bigger than all our doors!" And in just that way the worldling hides God and Christ, and judgment and eternity from view, behind some paltry pleasure, some trifling joy, or some small possession, which shall perish with the using, and pass away with all earth's lust and glory, in the approaching day of God Almighty.

"Mamma," said a little girl in Philadelphia, when she was looking for a childish treasure she had mislaid, "I think God will help us find it if we ask him; so I'll pray, and you hunt." That showed a fitting appreciation of faith and works.

A straight line is the shortest in morals as well as in geometry.

Miscellaneous.

Church Debts.

The primary idea of a church with our fathers a hundred years ago, was a fit place in which to praise and worship God. A plain wooden meeting-house was good enough. Hard, unseasoned seats, if they did give an occasional backache, were to the penitent sinner in striking contrast with the kind Christian words in the sermon. The want of a heating apparatus was supplied by the spiritual glow in the heart of the honest worshiper.—The door was closed against all show, pomp, and unnecessary grandeur, and nothing but pure and undefiled religion prevailed within. When a meeting-house was to be built, the farmers brought their lumber, the carpenters and laborers gave their time—all did their share. The structure, when finished, belonging to them individually as well as collectively. When thus completed it was dedicated to the service of God.

Now-a-days men build churches at a cost of a hundred thousand dollars, when they only have a fifth of that amount pledged. They express a desire to build a church, and disregard entirely the laws of political economy in the course of its erection. They must advertise an organ as large, a choir as high-toned, a minister with a salary as expensive as the church around the corner has. A foolish spirit of rivalry and vainglory inspires them to run into debt.

Debt-burdened churches are the rule, not the exception. They are oftentimes considered churches of highest standing. St. Thomas Church, in New York, is said to be hopelessly, and the Church of the Ascension very heavily, in debt. The Church of the Disciples owes $189,000. The Church of the Holy Trinity is quite as poorly off. The financial condition of the majority of churches in New York is unhealthy. Grace and Trinity, with their accumulated wealth, are conspicuous exceptions. The Episcopal church lays down the wise and honest rule that no church shall be consecrated until entirely free from debt; and it is a fact worth noting that not in seven years has an Episcopal church in New York been consecrated. In Chicago the Park avenue Church, after the most untiring efforts, has succeeded in reducing the debt of $120,000 to $60,000. Nearly all the churches of that city are in as bad or worse pecuniary condition. Even so wealthy a society as the Church of the Pilgrims, in Brooklyn, has an accumulated debt to carry on its shoulders. These are only isolated cases of a uniform rule in most of the cities and larger towns of the country.

The evil is growing, and unless checked may be dangerous. There are more heavily indebted churches to-day than ten years ago; but, worse than that, there is not the anxiety there ought to be to wipe out old debts. The church property in New York city is valued at $80,000,000. Since the churches pay no taxes on this vast amount, they ought with greater speed to pay off all encumbrances. Indeed, by this exemption from taxation, they ought to be less in debt than other corporations. Now, how should we prevent a church from running into debt?—By treating it like any other corporation. Let it live within its means. Let it cease to be extravagant. Let the minister see that the spirit of honesty which he teaches refers to things as material as bricks and mortar. A church in debt! The phrase is certainly a paradox. That men whose moral and religious character is unblemished should run a church into debt, when they see no way of paying it, is an offense as great as if they spent money not their own. If Christian ethics are not practiced, as well as taught, the gospel is perverted. The Roman Catholics in some of the European countries are often a century in building a church, because they pay as they go. They would almost as quickly plan for a cathedral with a mortgage on it as a heaven with a devil in it. Economy and honesty must be taught and exemplified in our churches if we would see it in business. As long as churches run into debt, so long will individuals. If churches are lax in paying debts, parishioners will be slow to meet their notes. An honest church makes an honest citizen.—The Independent.

What are the Softas?

It is fair to compare the Turkish Softas to the students of a complete American University, such as Ann Arbor, Yale, or Harvard, or still better to those of a German University in a small town, say Heidelberg or Jena. They are theological, legal and literary students of the Turkish metropolis connected with some well-endowed Mosque, for instance that of Mehmed, Achmed, or St. Sophia, and are to Turkey what 'Young America' is to us. Being connected with the established law and theology, they enjoy some popularity and are usually the leaders of popular movements and upheavals in Constantinople. Some Mosques have as many as five hundred Softas, and the city of Constantinople contains thousands of them. The word Softa is derived from the Persian, and means burned, because the bearers of this appellation are supposed to have a burning desire for knowledge, wisdom and holiness. The Softas, then, have no constitutional share in the Turkish government, but by their accurate information, influence, and daring, can carry a measure which it would be difficult to enact in the ordinary manner. They compelled the late Sultan, a few days ago, by personal threats, to dismiss his principal officials, the Grand Vizier, and the Moofit or Spike-ul-Islam, the heads of the Administration and the Islam, and demanded that he should give up at least twenty-five millions of the hundreds that he had appropriated.—They are now supporting the new Vizier, Midhat Pasha, who has been mainly instrumental in deposing Abdul Aziz.—Ordinarily the Softas are 'fanatic Turks, but in the last revolution, their steps have been at the same time radical, successful, and wholesome. The Softas illustrate the political axiom that a despot is more dependent upon the opinions of the common people than is a constitutional king or a republican president.—Providence Journal.

First Methodist Service in America.

Methodism was brought to America by a party of Irish emigrants in 1760. They were descendants of those German Protestants who, when driven from the Palatinate, by Louis XIV., settled in Limerick county, Ireland. For six years after their arrival in New York, they made no efforts to propagate their doctrine, but in 1766 Barbara Heck urged upon Philip Embury, who had been licensed as a local preacher in Ireland, the duty and necessity of establishing Methodist worship and discipline for the benefit of their associates and for the conversion of sinners.—Embury accordingly began to preach in his own house, his first audience consisting of four persons besides Mrs. Heck. He formed a class which met weekly, hired a room to accommodate his increased congregation, and preached in the alms-houses and other places. In the spring of 1767 the little society was reinforced by Capt. Thomas Webb of the British Army, who had been converted under Wesley's preaching in Bristol, England, and had been licensed by him as a local preacher. A rigging loft in William street was hired, and Embury and Webb preached there twice a week to large and curious crowds, Webb preaching in his uniform, with his sword lying on the desk in front of him. By Mrs. Heck's advice a site for a chapel was secured on John street, and a stone building 60x40 feet put up. Embury was one of the chief workers upon it, and he had the satisfaction of making the pulpit with his own hands, and preaching the dedication sermon in it, October 30, 1768. This was the first Methodist Church in America. A more modern building now occupies its site, and the 'Old John street church' is held sacred as the 'cradle of American Methodism.'

THE President has received the following congratulatory letter from His Majesty the King of Italy on the occasion of the Centennial celebration:

VICTOR EMANUEL, II., by the grace of God and the Will of the Nation, King of Italy, to the President of the United States of America, greeting:

MY DEAR AND GOOD FRIEND: On the day upon which the great American Republic celebrates the Centennial anniversary of its existence, it is our desire to address our congratulations and those of our people to you personally, and to the nation over which you preside, and which with admirable ability you have succeeded in directing to its noble destiny.—Neither the distance which separates us, nor any difference of race, will ever weaken in us and in our people that firm friendship which unites us with the brave American nation with which for 100 years Italy has had relations productive of mutual esteem. We are inclined to convey to you these sentiments so much the more readily because for the purpose of the more worthily celebrating the memorable day by the monster exhibition at Philadelphia, you were pleased to invite to the festival all the nations of the earth. Accept the assurances of our highest esteem and friendship, together with the prayers which we offer to God that He may have you, my very dear friend, in His holy keeping. Given at Rome, on the 11th of June, 1876. Your good friend,

VICTOR EMANUEL.

HOW IS THIS ?

In the Evangelist, a new paper published at Bellfontaine, Ohio, in the interests of the Lutheran church, we find the following, as nearly as we can quote from memory:

"We have just finished the cursory reading of a new book called the 'Jewish Passover and the Lord's Supper' by J. W. Beer, V. D. M. The book is well written, but the author makes too much of an obsolete Jewish custom. He entirely overlooks the important fact that ordinances are not, and cannot be, under the Christian dispensation, dependent upon the mode of observance."

How is this? We would like to know whether the Evangelist is correct in this criticism; and we will endeavor to let the word of the Lord decide the matter. We shall propound and try to answer two questions:

1. Did the author of the "Jewish Passover and the Lord's Supper" make "too much of an obsolete Jewish custom?" To answer this question it is necessary to know what the author makes of the "obsolete Jewish custom" referred to. By the terms "obsolete Jewish custom" the Evangelist means "the Passover, a feast of the Jews." What, then, does the author make of it? He considers it as an ordinance of the Lord under the Mosaic dispensation. This the Evangelist will not deny. He insists upon the necessity of a strict observance of this ordinance by the Israelites to whom it was given; and assumes that when it was faithfully observed, it answered the purpose of the Lord in its appointment. Is this making too much of it? Surely not. The author claims that this ordinance was a condition of safety from the destroying angel and of deliverance from Egyptian bondage; that it was afterward commemorative of this great deliverance; and that the passover was one of the most striking and significant types of "Christ our Passover." Under the latter head he attempts to show that

THE LIVING LAMB WAS A TYPE OF THE LIVING CHRIST :

The victim was taken from the class of animals which the Lord pronounced clean, which signified that Christ should be of the Lord's chosen people—of the seed of Abraham. "A male of the first year:" Christ was to be "sacrificed in the prime of life—in the vigor of manhood." The victim was to be without blemish; so was Christ "as a lamb without blemish and without spot." Next it is assumed that

THE SACRIFICING OF THE PASSOVER WAS TYPICAL OF THE SACRIFICING OF CHRIST.

The passover was sacrificed on the 14th day of the month; so was Christ. It was killed in the evening—"between the two evenings"—so was Christ, as he expired at that very hour. The passover was killed by "the whole assembly;" so "the whole multitude" arose and led Christ to Pilate. Of the type not a bone was to be broken; this was fulfilled in Christ. Next the author claims that

THE FEASTING UPON THE LAMB WAS TYPICAL OF OUR DUTIES AND PRIVILEGES UNDER THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST.

The lamb was not killed to be burned or thrown away but to be fed upon; so we must, by faith, feed upon Christ our Passover, or there is no life in us. They must eat it in the time appointed; so we must feed upon Christ in the time appointed: afterward it will be too late. The roasting of the flesh "with fire" signified the sufferings of Christ and the sufferings which attend a faithful feasting on him. It was to be eaten with unleavened bread, so we must feed upon Christ in sincerity and truth putting away the old leaven of malice and wickedness. It was to be eaten with bitter herbs; "so must we feast upon Christ with pungent sorrow and brokenness of heart." They must eat in haste ready to depart; so must we eagerly feed upon Christ our Passover, ready to depart from the bondage of sin.

To sum up, we see that the author makes this ordinance of the Lord a very fit and full type of Christ; and when this is done, he allows it to pass away with all other typical Jewish ordinances, rites and ceremonies. Is this making too much of this "obsolete Jewish custom?" If it is, let the Evangelist show wherein; but we want something more than its ipse dixit.

2. Is it a fact that, under the gospel dispensation, ordinances "are not dependent on the mode of their observance?" In one sense it is a fact; but in this sense the author of the "Jewish Passover and the Lord's Supper" did not overlook the fact. Ordinances under the Christian dispensation are dependent upon the Lord. He is the ordainer, and they derive their force from him. Whatever is not of his appointment is not binding upon any one, as a religious ordinance, under the gospel dispensation. But this can also be said with reference to the ordinances under the former dispensation. In this sense the fact is recognized throughout the work.

But this is not what the Evangelist means. How then are we to understand it? We understand it to mean that baptism is an ordinance under the gospel dispensation, but it is not essential to its validity that it be observed according to a particular mode: sprinkling, pouring and immersion are equally valid. So it is assumed that, while the Lord's Supper is an ordinance under the gospel dispensation, the author overlooks the important fact that it is not dependent upon the mode of its observance—that a bit of bread and a sip of wine, taken at any time, is just as valid as a full meal eaten in the evening. If this is what the Evangelist means, and if this be a fact, then it is a fact which the author of the work entirely overlooked. But we are prepared to deny that this is a fact, and to show that it is a dangerous assumption. When God, speaks he must be heard; when he commands he must be strictly obeyed; and when he appoints ordinances for our observance we can observe them by doing exactly what God appoints and in no other way. If mode has nothing to do with the validity of an ordinance, why might not the author of the criticism give the bread of the communion on one Lord's day and the wine on the next? Why not give the wine before the bread? Why not give the bread and wine before the blessing is asked upon them? Why not give the bread and wine at the same time, and let them be masticated and swallowed at the same time? These would only be different modes of partaking of the bread and wine; and would our friend say that these different modes are equally acceptable to the Lord? He will not say this. But he must say it or abandon his position. If there be no difference in the mode, how will it be maintained that we must be so particular in the elements? We cannot tell why, on the grounds assumed by the Evangelist, mush and milk would not answer the same purpose that bread and wine do. If the critic sees it, he may tell. But he must not tell us that Christ named the elements; for we will answer that he also exemplified the mode.

But the position assumed by the writer of the criticism is abundantly refuted by Paul, that is, if he is good authority. In his first letter to the church at Corinth (11 : 20, 21) he says: "When ye come together therefore into one place, this is not to eat the Lord's Supper. For in eating every one taketh before other his own supper; and one is hungry and another is drunken." The disorder and failure of the church at Corinth, as Paul here declares, was in the mode. He does not charge them with meeting at a wrong time, nor with using wrong elements, nor yet with bad motives, but he censures them for disorder in the mode. This departure from the original mode had the effect to change it from the Lord's Supper to their own supper, or, rather, it made it their own supper and kept it from being the Lord's Supper. If the Lord's Supper was an ordinance and was "dependent on the mode of observance then, by what kind of reasoning will the Evangelist show that a departure from the original mode will not have the same effect to-day? It is all learned nonsense—"philosophy, vainly so-called"—and the day of the Lord will so reveal it. You might as well talk about doing a thing by doing something else, chopping wood with a saw, or reaping with a plow, as to talk about observing the Lord's Supper by doing something different from that which our Lord exemplified and enjoined.

We conclude by saying, if ordinances are not dependent upon the mode, then that mode that agrees with the original appointment is as safe as any; but if they are, in the sense explained, then the original mode is safe, while others, at best, are doubtful. Let us occupy safe ground.

BAPTISMAL SCENE.

On Sunday, the 30th of July, we had the pleasure of witnessing and assisting in the baptism of seven believers. The scene was imposing, and hundreds of interested spectators assembled below our pleasant little town to behold it. While it was pleasant to Christians, and afforded joy in the presence of angels, there was a circumstance connected with it which caused many to weep, and demonstrated the fact that the spirit of persecution is yet in the world. One of the candidates, a young sister, was fiercely opposed by a father and uncle. Threats of beating and bloodshed were freely and openly made; and when we approached the place we beheld the opposers already on the ground with their bludgeons. No wonder that the young sister should make a perceptible halt. However, being encouraged not to be intimidated, she walked with us to the place with strong trust in God. The 285th hymn was then sung, and then with many tears prayer was offered to God. After prayer they were all baptized, and without any interference, except such as consisted of words offensive to God and sinful to those who uttered them. When looking upon our young sister we were made to say in our heart, "Great is thy faith;" but when we held those who opposed her, and thought of their curses and threats, we felt, with Stephen of old, to say: "YE STIFF-NECKED AND UNCIRCUMCISED IN HEART AND EARS, YE DO ALWAYS RESIST THE HOLY GHOST: AS YOUR FATHERS DID, SO DO YE." (Acts vii. 51.) May we never again be called on to witness and record such an exhibition of bigotry and religious intolerance.

Gleanings and Jottings.

BRO. Bashor left our place on Thursday, July 27th, accompanied with many prayers and good wishes. His address now is McVeytown, Mifflin county, Pa.—We have not heard from him since he has left us, but hope he is successful in doing good in his new field. B.

Brother J. P. Ebersole has changed his address from Fostoria, Ohio, to Sheffield, Franklin county, Iowa, where his correspondents will address him until further notice is given.

ELDER Samuel Møhler, Covington, O., July 24th, says: "Health in general is good, and harvest is over. The harvest was better than we had thought in the spring that it could be. We have had a great deal of rain this summer. At present we have very fine weather; though we have had some extremely warm weather. Corn looks very well. Potatoes are plenty. There will be a large crop of apples. In church matters we are still trying to do as well as we know how. We have had 26 additions by baptism since New Year, and one by letter. Our communion will be the last week in October, either the 25th or 27th. Our communion and those of Upper Stillwater and Oakland will all be in the same week. It will be at Oakland on Monday, the 23rd, commencing at 2 o'clock, p. m.; and the other two will then follow on the 25th and 27th, but we do not know which of the two will be first. Now if you intend to come to Ohio this fall, we would like if you could come about that time. We would like very much to see you here. Yours in brotherly love."

From Kentucky.

Dear Brother Quinter:

I once more shall attempt to say something in regard to our success in this part of Kentucky. Brother H. D. Davy has been with us and spent nearly two weeks. He preached several able discourses and was heard with great attention. On Monday, June 18th, he preached here at 4 o'clock. There was the largest congregation present that we have ever had to hear the Brethren. The house would not hold more than two-thirds of the people, and there appeared to be an interest felt in the matter. Monday morning Brother Davy baptized the wife of Bro. George Fitzgerald, adding one more to our number, so you perceive the work moves slowly along. Besides the interest in our proceedings felt by a great number; there seems to be a general wish in other churches to work a reformation in their own denominations. Many say, "We believe they (that is, the church of the Brethren) are the best church in existence; we know that our church has fallen back, and we are not what we were many years ago." And they will acknowledge that pride is ruining them, but they say, "How are we to get rid of it?"

Bro. Davy has appointed the 23rd of September to hold a lovefeast or communion meeting with us. The brethren and sisters who have a desire to visit the blue-grass region of Kentucky, will have a double inducement in doing so; and as it (the lovefeast as observed by the Brethren) is something that has never been practiced in this part of the State, I presume it will create great curiosity among the citizens, and hope it will set them to reading and eventually do much good in the cause of our blessed Redeemer; and although some of the brethren that come out here seem discouraged at the prospects, I feel greatly flattered with the hope that God intends a great work in Kentucky.

We have had some severe afflictions in our family for several weeks past. My husband and oldest daughter have both had a severe spell of that dreadful, painful disease, inflammatory rheumatism, and my husband is still unable to get out of bed; but amid this severe affliction we have tried to feel that God was intending it for good. He never afflicts his children without intending some spiritual or temporal benefit. When I would feel almost exhausted from fatigue, these words would come into my mind, "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth," and my strength would be renewed, and although I am very frail and delicate, I have gone through it all and am still on my feet, and thank the good Lord for his mercies. They are both improving.

Dear brethren and sisters, pray for me and mine; pray for Kentucky, that she may see the error of her way. She has so much wealth, such fine advantages—in short, it seems that Heaven has blest her with everything that mortals could desire, and she might do so much for the Redeemer's cause. If she would only use what is swallowed up in folly, fashion, and extravagance in extending the cause of the Savior, what an amount of good she could do! There are several of our neighbors that seem so much interested, and are making so many inquiries concerning the doctrine and preaching of our brethren, that I think we will soon have some more additions.

With an humble and earnest prayer that God will bless us all, and grant to still guide us by the divine Spirit into all truth while we live here on earth, and finally save us without the loss of one in heaven, I will close.

Your humble sister,

CHARLOTTE T. BOND.

Editors Primitive Christian:

Having just returned from the Coquella River country in Coos county, Oregon, I thought perhaps a short letter might be interesting to some at least.

I left this place by private conveyance, and after about three days my horse gave out, so from Cammas Valley I took very private conveyance, that is, I walked, or more commonly, I "hoofed" it. From this valley I took the Trail down the middle fork of the Coquella. Now a trail is only made where a wagon road is impracticable, and further they are scarcely ever made at all, but are traveled over and thus are formed by use to look something like a trail. Sometimes they are much up, then more down, and then, perhaps, in a short distance they are so crooked that you can travel toward all the cardinal and also all the intermediate points laid down on the compass. But by-and-by they take a straight shoot toward the point you are aiming for; but this kind of trail is rather short, for when you are fairly straightened out on the straight path, you are suddenly brought to an abrupt turn, perhaps nearly square up or down, round and round, and perhaps by persevering you can travel twenty-five miles in the long days and be at least ten miles from the starting-point, provided the trail runs anyway in the direction you want to go. Now, therefore, be it known, that the trail I traveled over, or up and down, was of this description, and even more so; for I think it would take a big stretch of the imagination to imagine a worse trail than the one down the Coquella. However, I reached the level at last, crossed over and got to the house of Bro. Barklow. Here met several more of the brethren, who came to prepare for the "lovefeast" on the morrow. Spent the night with Bro. P. Overholser, he being the only brother with whom I had any personal acquaintance, that being formed when I was in Missouri. But I found all here with whom I became acquainted brethren in whom I found good friends.

The 1st of July was the day for the lovefeast, and early in the day brethren and sisters began to assemble from all parts of the valley, some few by wagons, some on horseback, but the great body of them by boats, all drawing to the same harbor, the home of Bro. John Barklow. We had preaching at 2 p. m., and then, when the evening was fully come, we gathered around the table and the services began. Being the first time since 1871 that I had the pleasure of surrounding with others of the brethren the Lord's table, was a season of refreshing to me, and not to me only, but all seemed to partake of the the feast as though they felt the presence of the Lord in their hearts. What a gathering there will be when Christ will call them and serve at his Father's table, this being but a faint representation of that great feast in heaven. But faint as it was, if we are all faithful we may be partakers of the heavenly feast.

As I viewed the brethren and sisters surrounding the table, I thought of long ago, when I was quite young. How plain, how humble and how meek the brethren looked then, and how easily a Dunkard could be told from the rest of mankind. Here then I viewed again, as I did then, so plain of dress, so plain of speech, that I thought I was again back in my youthful home in Ohio.

I sometimes hear the question, "Where now are the old fashioned brethren?" Here, friends, where the sun dips the sea, where our country joins hands with the Pacific, and where the earth is clothed in everlasting verdure, you can find many of them.

But I must hasten, for my article is getting rather long, and add this: The first Brethren that came to this place were the three Barklow brothers, and five others in 1872. Now they number 58 (60 a short time ago, but two were pruned out as bad shoots in the mother). They are prosperous and zealous, and are building up a staunch membership. I wish I could say for their country what I can say for the brethren; but I am not going to praise a country; say complimentary things about it, if I do not like it. But I would say this, that if any wish to settle there, do as I did—go and see it, and act on your own advice. I have frequently spoken of this part of the country, and can do so without reserve, for I know this to be the best part of this or any other country I have ever seen, and hence I am going to remain where I am. To see the country and a relative were only minor objects that made me ride and walk over some of the worst roads and trails in the country. But my main object was the communion meeting, which I think I enjoyed better than any I had ever attended.

In conclusion I will add this: I will not mention any names of brethren in particular, but in general I would say, that I was well treated and entertained, and had my time permitted, I should have enjoyed a visit of a few weeks there very much.

Yours, &c.,

J. S. McFADDEN.

Communicated.

Brother Quinter:

I will pen a few items for insertion in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. As church news I will say that we have had two additions to the church by baptism, and three by members coming here from Colorado this summer. We now number fifty members, with two speakers in the second degree and two deacons. We would say to all brethren who contemplate coming West, that we, here in Filtmore and Thayer counties, have a beautiful country, of rich, productive soil, that will produce all kinds of grain and is well adapted to flax raising. We have good pasturage, and the climate is well adapted for stock and especially sheep.

Land can be bought for from three to five dollars per acre for cash; a little higher on good time. Partially improved claims can be had for from $150 to $500. We have excellent water, a very healthy climate, and good society. Wood can be bought for one dollar a load within half a day's drive. All kind of crops look well now. Timber planted grows very fast here. I saw cottonwood growth last year that exceeded twelve feet in one season.

This State is far ahead of much older States in the education of her youth.— Good school houses are being built in many districts. Teachers' wages range from twenty to fifty dollars per month.

All kinds of farm machinery, groceries, and everything one wants can be bought reasonably. Carleton is a station on the St. Joe and Denver City railroad.

I will say to the ministers of our church that the harvest here is truly "great and the laborers few." Will not some earnest and devoted brother who is an elder in the church come among us? Come, you will find the brethren and sisters ready to give you a hearty welcome. We invite any members, ministers, deacons, or laymembers, to come, for we have abundance of room yet for more settlers.

Enclosed find $1.45, a contribution from the Bethel church for the Danish Fund. Dear brethren, most of us are poor in this world's goods, but we do not want Bro. Hope to quit the good work for want of means to support himself. May the Lord reward every child of God to a realizing sense of his duty in the missionary cause, is the prayer of

Your unworthy brother,
S. R. HOLSINGER.

Echo to "Sunday School Conference."

Dear Brethren:

If the editors of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN will grant the space, I will address you a few thoughts suggested by the above heading. I would call your attention first to an article in the Pilgrim, No. 27, page 430, present volume, entitled, "Sunday School Conference," by Dr. J. Sturgis, and request your careful perusal and earnest consideration of the same.— I think, as Bro. Brumbaugh expresses it, "a move in the right direction." Yes, brethren, it has the genuine ring of the true metal, and until we awake from our lethargy, shake off dull sloth, and go to work with a will, worthy of so noble a cause, we may expect nothing better than the present condition of Sunday-school progress.

I agree with Bro. Sturgis that what we most need is a uniform order, which can only be brought about by concert of action, and that is best and easiest attained in a Sunday-school Conference.— Brethren, it is a fact the Sunday-school is a powerful lever in the hands of the denominations, and our own children are enticed thereby, and walk no more in the paths their fathers trod. Now, brethren and sisters, I appeal to you and say, We can do that much for the rising generation to give them a good, lively, interesting, and instructive Sabbath-school, conducted by the Brethren, and in their own order, in at least each church district.

Bro. Sturgis says in regard to an order of the Brethren for conducting the school, that there is "positively none." Well, there may not, perhaps, be any uniform order now; but surely there once was; for our own dear brethren organized the first Sunday-school on American soil, and if I am not mistaken Bro. F. P. Loebr, now of Bloomingdale, Mich., was one of the pioneers of that enterprise, and no doubt could give us the order adopted and maintained perhaps half a century ago. Brother Frederick, can't you write up something for us on the subject? I think you can. And, there are others, too, who have stood in the front and faced the "stormy tide," both men and women, who might aid much in the work by their encouraging counsel and advice.

Another thought in favor of the Sunday-school that should not by any means be overlooked is this: It does not only tend to secure the ultimate conversion of our own children, and those of our neighbors to our own precious faith, but there are hundreds and thousands of our young brothers and sisters to whom it would afford delightful employment to labor in the Lord's vineyard, and thereby be encouraged to be lively, earnest members that otherwise would become languid, careless, and finally, in some instances, die, for the want of suitable exercise to keep up a healthy spiritual circulation.

Oh, hear the Savior's solemn injunction, "feed my lambs," and this will not only be food, but feasting to the souls of many of our ardent young brothers and sisters. Who will deny it, then? Or, rather, who will not render such aid as they can give in so worthy a cause?

Yes, we want unanimity, and to be sure of success we must have it; for the old adage will hold good in this as well as other things, "United we stand, divided we fall." Then as there is "safety in the multitude of counsel," we want the S. S. Conference. And now I will suggest that each church district take up and consider this matter, at their next council meeting, and appoint one or two delegates to represent it in a Sunday-school Conference. I heartily approve of the suggestion that they send "such questions as may be of advantage to the cause," but let them be as suggestions and not as queries.

Much care and caution should be exercised, as a bad mistake in the beginning might be fatal.

I bid you God speed, brother John, in the efforts you are putting forth for S. S. Conference, and ask who will produce the re-echo? Let us hear it from every part of the brotherhood. It will be better than sharp-shooting and criticising each others' faults, and weakness.

Now one other thought. Let the delegates we send and all who attend the Conference confidently feel that they go attended with the earnest, effectual prayers of the members at home.

My Dear Brother:

At 12 o'clock on the 14th of June, we took our seat in a car on the F. and W. railroad at Huntington, for Wabash.— Bro. S. H. Bashor met us at Antioch.— We were conveyed to the Brethren's meeting-house in Wabash district. Meeting opened at 10 o'clock on the 15th.— Quite a number of ministers present. Had a very good meeting except a little too much noise by some of the spectators. One woman received by baptism, seventy years of age. Bro. John Crumrine is the elder in this arm of the church. His help in the ministry is his son Jacob, in the second degree of the ministry. The church here seems to be in a healthy condition.

On the 23rd of June we went from North Manchester, Wabash county, to Columbia City, on the Del River railroad. Stayed with Bro. Daniel Brower over night. Next day they conveyed me to the place of meeting where we met quite a number of ministers.— The elders present were David Bechtelheimer, David Truby, Jeremiah Gump, David Bare, Joseph Leedy, Jonas Umbaugh. Also a number of others in the first and second grade in the ministry. Meeting commenced at 4 o'clock p. m. Opened by singing, exhortation, and prayer; then the 3rd chapter of the First Epistle to Timothy was read, and then exhortation by several brethren. Then a choice was held for one minister and one visiting brother. The lot for minister fell on Bro. David Workman, and for deacon, on Bro. John Liley. Met again, when the sebrethren were installed and received. After a short intermission met for evening services, which passed off in the best of order. We felt that the Lord was with us. Next morning being Lord's day morning, there was preaching at 9 o'clock, a. m. In the evening we preached in a Baptist church to an attentive audience. Bro. Levi Workman is Elder in this arm of the church, and now his son David is his helper in the ministry.

Brethren vs. River Brethren.

In reading communications in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN on the above, I felt to give your readers a little light as regards the difference. In the first place, nearly all our readers know what the Brethren teach and practice, viz.: The New Testament in full, neither adding to, nor taking anything from the commands of Christ.

Having been in one of the River Brethren's meetings, one of their ministers preaching of the new birth, explained that we must "repent and be converted that our sins may be blotted out," and the refreshing shall come from the Lord. Acts iii. Thus he worked out the forgiveness of sins, and after this he would have them baptized the same mode as we do "unto," (in the German "zur") the remission of sins. When I had heard him through I afterward asked for an explanation of the word "zur," or in English, "for" the remission of sins, which he explained to mean "unto" or "dazu;" that we must know that our sins are forgiven, and unto that we must be baptized—baptized as an act of obedience, and wash away that sin, the sin of disobedience. I further asked him to explain the like passage containing the word "for" in Matt. xxvi. 28, "For this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." This for is in the German likewise "zur." This he was unable to do, but still contended that the Brethren are too much in a hurry to baptize.

I asked for the right to wait till we feel our sins forgiven, when the word of God says, "Be baptized every one of you for the remission of sins"; and unto Paul it was said, "Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling upon the name of the Lord." Remember, he did not say, "thy sins of disobedience," but, "thy sins"—not one, but all.

He also contended that when it says, "After the same manner also he took the cup," &c., did not mean, as he took the cup after the supper he also took the bread, but that the bread was the supper.

Now tradition has it, and I think it does not date so far back that we are at fault when we say that when the River Brethren originated, they were unbaptized, and wanted one of our ministering brethren to baptize one of them, who could then baptize the rest, and they would build up a church. They received the answer that if they would comply with all the requirements of the New Testament, he would baptize them. This they refused and they baptized each other among themselves in the river; hence the name River Brethren. Now, it just comes to this: The difference at first seems not to be so great. They are a plain, honest people, seem full of love, and pretend to have the forgiveness of sins. But by close examination we find that as the originators of their church in the beginning refused to comply with all, so do their followers.

When the word of God is so plain why these points of difference? Is then man so desperately wicked that he will not submit to God? Had the originators fully complied with the word of God we would have been one, and instead of fighting against each other, we would all be fighting against Satan and sin.

Now the question comes up for me not once, but often: Who was the real originator of their church? Was it of God? If so, is God then divided against himself? Surely not; for then he could not stand. God is one God, and his children are one, having the same mind, speaking the same thing, as regards their son's salvation.

Let the readers draw their own conclusion, and let us be "steadfast, unmoved, always abounding in the works of the Lord," as our martyr brother, J. Kline, preached in the rebel prison.

Where to go to School.

The Plumcreek Normal School, near Elderton, Armstrong County, Pa., will open July 31st, 1876, for a term of not less than two months. Prof. Lewis Kimmel and Prof. Howard Miller will continue as Managers and Teachers.

It is one of the best schools in the country.

It is the CHEAPEST school to be found. Boarding in the best of families only $2.50. There are rooms for self-boarders. Tuition is as low as at other schools.

Live Teachers, live Methods, live Texts, and, wanted, live Students, to accept the advantages offered, which surpass in excellence and economy all other similar institutions.

To get here from Kittanning, Pa., apply to C. N. Henry, at his stage office and livery, or at his stables in Indiana, Indiana county, Pa., for expeditious and economical transportation.

For particulars write to

Announcements.

There will be a communion meeting, the Lord willing, in the Des Moines Valley congregation ten miles north of Des Moines, on the 9th and 10th of September. Invitation as usual.

J. W. MOATS.

Brother Quinter:—

Please announce through the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN that the church at Dallas Center, Dallas county, Iowa, will hold their communion meeting on the last day of September and the first day of October, commencing on Saturday, at one o'clock. An invitation is extended to all that desire to be with us.

Dallas Center, Iowa.

The brethren of Deep River church, Poweshiek county, Iowa, intend to hold a communion meeting September 1st and 2nd, at their new meeting-house 2 1/2 miles south-east of Dresden, to commence at 3 o'clock p. m. A general invitation is given, and especially to the ministering brethren, whom we desire to remain with us and preach for us on Saturday evening and Sabbath. By order of the church.

H. R. TAYLOR.

July 24th, 1876.

(Pilgrim please copy.)

The brethren comprising the Clear Creek congregation, Huntington county, Ind., have appointed their communion meeting on the 5th of October next, commencing at 10 a. m., at their meeting-house, four miles north-east of Huntington. A general invitation is extended to brethren that feel like meeting with us.

HIRAM DOUB.

Dear Brother James:

We have two communion meetings in Jewell county, this fall, to be followed by one in Osborn county, and that by one in Republic county—four in rotation, a week apart, with arrangements for a series of meetings every evening during the intervening time. A tent will probably be secured for the occasion. From general indications, we anticipate an interesting and profitable and fruitful season of devotion, and hereby extend a hearty welcome to all the brethren who may favor us with a visit during the time. Nearest railroad station, Edgar, Clay Co., Nebraska. First communion will be on the 2nd of September.

JAMES L. SWITZER.

White Rock, Kansas.

The Lord willing, a lovefeast will be held at the Cherry Grove church, Garrett county, Md., on the 19th day of August.

ELIAS WHEITZEL, Eld.

Our lovefeast will be held in the stone meeting-house 4 1/2 miles north east of Marshalltown, Marshall county, Iowa, on the last day of September next, commencing at 10 o'clock, a m.; and also preaching on the 1st day of October.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Dry Creek church, Linn county, Iowa, July 18th, 1876, of fungus hematoids, or rose cancer, Sister ESTHER B. SNYDER, consort of Bro. Thomas G. Snyder, aged 49 years 11 months and 15 days. The deceased was a native of Blair county, Pa., and with her husband emigrated to Linn county, Ia., in 1854. She became afflicted with the above-named disease about 16 years ago, but it only assumed an aggravated form about two weeks previous to her death. She bore her affliction with Christian fortitude, and resigned her will to him who rules all things for good. In her death the church lost an active member, the community a good citizen, the husband a devoted companion, and the children a kind and affectionate mother.—

She left a husband and eight children to mourn their loss, but we sorrow not as those who have no hope, for we know that our loss is her eternal gain. Two of her children have entered the fold of Christ, and to those of the others who have arrived at the age of accountability we would say, Spurn not the impression which this solemn occasion has made, but follow the example you mother has set for you, and prepare to meet her in the regions of eternal bliss. Funeral services by the Brethren, from 1 Cor. xv. 50—55.

JACOB BOCK.

June 7th, 1876, Sister ANNIE WHEELER. Disease, consumption. On the 17th of April the above-named sister was immersed at her own request, some of her neighbors thinking her too weak to endure it. She said she wanted to obey her Master, even if she died in the water. She seemed much relieved after baptism. About one week later the members held a little feast for her benefit, which she enjoyed much, and was when she died in the full hope of being received into our Father's kingdom. Funeral services by the Brethren.

BARBARA ELIZABETH, daughter of Brother Nathaniel and Sister Lonisa M. Hill, was born Jan. 17th, 1876, and died June 14th, 1876, aged 4 months and 27 days. Funeral services by the Brethren.— S. C. KEIM.

On the 19th of July, SIMON LEE, only son of Jacob and Annie Whipple, aged 11 months and 9 days. A bright little boy who began to lip the name of Papa and Mamma at eight months of age. The parents came here from Westmoreland county, Pa., (to Franklin Grove, Ill.), in early spring, and felt much bereaved at their loss. We afforded what consolation we could from Mark x. 15, of the hope of a life to come.

JOSEPH C. LEUMAN,
SAM'L C. LEUMAN.

Near Belleville, Millin Co., Pa., (Spring Run congregation,) Sister SUSANNA GRASSMYRE, wife of Bro. Abraham M. Grassmyre, June 26th, 1876, aged 50 years 7 months and 29 days. She suffered much for several months from cancer in her left breast, which she bore with Christian fortitude, and when the cancer was about cured, she tripped on the carpet and fell, causing the hemorrhage of the left leg, from which she died. She was ready and willing to depart and be at rest.— She was a beloved wife, a kind mother, and a woman of deep thought, was well posted in Scripture, and could explain many difficult passages. She was ever ready and willing to administer to the wants of the needy, and lend a helping hand to the sick and afflicted. Peace to her ashes. Funeral services by Brother Abraham Myers and others.— To the husband in his great bereavement and deep affliction we would say, "Continue in well-doing and you will reap in due season," and be permitted to share the joys of the departed finally faithful. To the children: If you have set to your seal that God is true, go on to perfection, and if you have not begun to "practice what you know," "prepare to meet thy God."

S. W. BOLLINGER.

In the Seneca church, Seneca county, O., Sister NANCY FISHER, wife of Bro. John Fisher, aged 66 years. Funeral services by Bro. John B. Thart and others. She desired to be anointed, and the elders were called and administered the sacred rite a few weeks before her death. It can truly be said she "kept the faith." She leaves an aged husband, one son, two step-sons, two step-daughters, and many other friends to mourn their loss.

KATE McNAMARA.

On 23rd day of July, 1876, in the Bachelor Run district, Carroll county, Ind. Sister ELIZABETH MOSS, wife of B. O. E. Grund Moss, aged 62 years 3 months and 29 days.

She was a consistent member of church for many years. Was anointed Sunday the 16th inst. Funeral services by Bro. Hiel Hamilton and others, from 2 Cor. v. 1, to an attentive congregation. B. L. GORDON.

In the Back Creek church, Franklin Co., Pa., June 23rd 1876, at the house of elder John Shank, HARVEY C. PITTINGER, aged 17 years 3 months and 13 days. Disease, consumption. He had made no profession of religion, but when the summons came he had to go, which should be a warning to all. Funeral occasion improved from 2 Peter i. 14, by the writer, D. Miller, and J. Lehnor. (Pilgrim please copy.)

Also, in the same church, July 7th, 1876, Bro. DAVID KINSEY, aged 75 years 6 months and 13 days. Funeral services by the writer and Bro. John Lehnor, from Rev. xiv. 12, 13.

Also, in the same church, July 13th, 1876, MARY ANN, daughter of Andrew and ——— Fickling, aged 5 months and 28 days. Funeral services by the writer, assisted by Tobias Kridler, a United Brethren minister, from Rom. vi. 23. ADAM PHEL.

Liver Complaint.

By R. V. PIERCE, M. D., of the World's Dispensary, Buffalo, N. Y., author of "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," etc., etc.

The liver is the great depurating (purifying) organ of the system, and has appropriately been termed the "housekeeper" of our health. I have observed in the dissecting-room, and also in making post-mortem examinations of those who have died of different diseases, that in a large proportion of cases, the liver has given evidence of having at some time been diseased. Liver affections are equally prevalent in beasts. Every butcher knows that the livers of cattle, sheep, and swine are ten times as frequently diseased as any other organ. A healthy liver each day secretes about two and a half pounds of bile. When it becomes torpid, congested, or if, from any cause, it becomes disabled in the performance of its duties, it is evident that the elements of the bile must remain in the blood, thus irritating, poisoning, and perverting every vital process. Nature attempts to rid the system of these noxious materials by means of other organs, as the kidneys, lungs, skin, etc., which become overtaxed in performing their additional labor, and are unable to withstand the pressure.

The brain, which is the great electrical center of all vitality, becomes overstimulated with unhealthy blood, and fails to normally perform its functions. Hence there is dullness, headache, impairment of the memory, dizziness, gloomy forebodings, and irritability of temper.—When the blood is diseased, the skin manifests discolored spots; pimples, blotches, boils, carbuncles, and scrofulous tumors. The stomach and bowels, sooner or later, become affected, and constipation, piles, dropsy, dyspepsia, or diarrhoea, is the inevitable result.

SYMPTOMS OF LIVER COMPLAINT.

A sallow color of the skin, or yellowish-brown spots on the face and other parts of the body; dullness and drowsiness, with frequent headache; dizziness, bitter or bad taste in the mouth, dryness of the throat, and internal heat; palpitation of the heart, a dry, teasing cough, sore throat, unsteady appetite, sour stomach, raising of the food, and a choking sensation in the throat; sickness and vomiting, distress, heaviness, and a bloated or full feeling about the stomach and sides; aggravating pains in the sides, back, or breast, and about the shoulders; colic pains and soreness through the bowels; constipation, alternating with diarrhoea; piles, flatulence, nervousness, coldness of the extremities, rush of blood to the head, with symptoms of apoplexy; numbness of the limbs (especially at night), and chills, alternating with hot flashes; kidney and other urinary difficulties, dullness, low spirits, and gloomy forebodings. Only a few of these symptoms will be likely to be present in any case at one time.

Treatment.—Take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, with small doses of his Pleasant Purgative Pellets, which act as an alterative of the liver. For liver complaint and the various affections caused by a diseased liver, these remedies are unsurpassed. The Golden Medical Discovery does not simply palliate the disease, but it produces a lasting effect. By its use, the liver and stomach are changed to an active, healthy state, the appetite is regulated, the blood purified and enriched, and the entire system renovated and restored to health.

The Discovery is sold by druggists. R. V. Pierce, M. D., Proprietor, World's Dispensary, Buffalo, N. Y.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

Not a Dye; makes harsh hair soft and silky; cleanses the scalp from all impurities, causing the hair to grow where it has fallen off or become thin.

Can be applied by the hand as it does not stain the hand or soil the finest linen. As a Hair Dressing it is the most perfect the world has ever produced. The hair is renovated and strengthened, and natural color restored without the application of mineral substances.

Since the introduction of this truly valuable preparation into this country, it has been the wonder and admiration of all classes, as it has proved to be the only article that will absolutely without deception, restore gray hair to its original color, health, softness, lustre and beauty, and produce hair on bald heads of its original growth and color.

This beautiful and fragrantly perfumed article is complete within itself, no washing or preparation before or after its use, or accompaniment of any kind being required to obtain these desirable results.

HERE IS THE PROOF OF ITS

SUPERIOR EXCELLENCE.

Read this Home Certificate, testified to by Edward B. Garrigue, one of the most competent Druggists and Chemists of Philadelphia, a man whose veracity none can doubt.

I am happy to add my testimony to the great value of the "London Hair Color Restorer," which restored my hair to its original color, and the hue appears to be permanent. I am satisfied that this preparation is nothing like a dye, but operates upon the secretions. It is also a beautiful hair dressing and promotes the growth. I purchased the first bottle from Edward B. Garrigue, druggist, Tenth and Coates streets, who can also testify my hair was quite gray when I commenced its use.

MRS. MILLER, No. 730 North Ninth St., Phila.

Dr. Swayne & Son—Respected friends: I have the pleasure to inform you that a lady of my acquaintance, Mrs. Miller, is delighted with the success of your "London Hair Color Restorer." Her hair was falling rapidly and quite gray. The color has been restored, the falling off entirely stopped, and a new growth of hair is the result. E. B. GARRIGUES, Druggist, cor. Tenth and Coates, Phila.

BOSTON TESTIMONY.

July 22d, 1871.—Dr. Swayne & Son: Last winter, while in Trenton, N. # HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.

SUCCESS THE ATTRIBUTE OF MERIT.

ERYSIPELAS AND CUTANEOUS DISEASES.—If popularity be the test of a medicine, Holloway's Pills and Ointment are assuredly the greatest remedies of this or any other age, as they are unfonounced to nations or people, being as familiar to the denizens of the backwoods as to the citizens of New York, London, Paris, Vienna, Berlin, St. Petersburg, &c. Their universality is, however, the least of their merits. Their safe and speedy cures of Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, King's Evil, Scrofula, and all skin diseases, are their chief recommendation. Persons afflicted with any of the above disorders should have immediate recourse to them.

*** Sold at the Manufactory of Professor HOLLOWAY & Co., New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents, and $1 each.

CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the signature of J. HADDOCK, as agent for the United States, surrounds each box of Pills and Ointment. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.
